Racism, sexism taken too seriously

To the Editor:

Every social institution or organization has a set of rules which permeate and define it. Everyone attending this university is well aware that the first 2 commandments here are: 1] Thou shalt glorify the weekend, and 2] Thou shalt drink and smoke to excess and play loud music.

Only slightly less salient, and much more constructive than these are the 3rd and 4th commandments of this institution: 3] Thou shalt not be racist, and 4] Thou shalt not be sexist.

Undoubtedly, these two doctrines are of the utmost importance and noticibly lacking in the ideologies of many in the university community. It is not these commandments I wish to attack, but rather, the fanatical and stolid devotion to them on the part of many individuals.

I use the word "commandments" deliberately, because many people uphold these ideas with religious intensity, and any attempt to find humor in them leads to quick, severe chastisement, just as a child is chastised for making a joke in church. Incredibly, the attitudes of some people regarding these issues are really that extremist.

This extremist attitude is exemplified by the furor raised over Rob Ranney's comic strips dealing with the International Women's Week.

If these strips were blatantly sexist, I could understand people reacting with strong expressions of displeasure. But these strips were not sexist; they did NOT put down women, nor did they attack the values of the liberation movement which we are hoping society at large will adopt.

As a cartoonist, Ranney's job is to poke fun at different aspects of our lives, of which the IWW is certainly a part. And this is what he did, in an innocuous and good-natured manner. The people who are editorializing that Ranney's strips are: "malicious in nature", "carelessly written trash", and "completely lacking in humor", are probably suffering from a mild form of paranoia, and are certainly suffering from a lack of the ability to not take themselves too seriously. They are missing the whole point of why the comics page exists.

I am not intending to undermine the importance of the struggles of the oppressed for freedom, but I refuse to take ANYTHING, even my own life, as seriously as some people take these anti-racism and anti-sexism doctrines.

Someone once said that a good sense of humor can save your life. Indeed, taken in the context of a world whose very existence is uncertain from moment to moment, such dogmatic adherence to, and pre-occupation with socio-political ideologies appears all the more ludicrous.

Bruce A. Sesnovich

Call to honor picket line

To the Editor:

At 10 p.m. on March 1, the waitress and cooks at Packard's Bar and Restaurant, 14 Masonic Street, Northampton [formerly Cousin William's] walked out on strike. They were joined by more than seventy customers in the bar at the time. Since then, the picket line has been maintained for over twelve hours a day, with the help of other workers, students, and community residents.

The union members, who are represented by Local No. 116 of the Hotel and Restaurant Employees and Bartenders Union, voted to strike when the owners refused to negotiate a contract with them. The workers have organized to resist unfair management practices and degrading working conditions, including the arbitrary imposition of work rules, the firing of workers without warning, and the sexual harassment of female employees on the job.

Realizing the potential threat, other Northampton restaurant owners have crossed the picket line to aid Packard's management's union busting effort. Management has attempted to break the strike by, for example, offering 25 cent drafts and free taxi rides from UMass, for anyone who will cross the picket line. Some UMass students have taken up his offer.

We appeal to the students of this campus not to cross the picket line. The strikers' demands are legitimate, and they will need large scale support from students and others to win their strike. We can assist them by refusing to patronize Packards and by calling the owners at 584-5957 or 584-5850 and expressing our sympathy with the workers. We can walk the picket line ourselves. [Help is particularly needed on Thursday, Friday, and Saturday. from 4 p.m. to 1 a.m.] And we can donate money and-or food to the strikers, who will be without pay for the duration of the strike.

The film "Union Maids" will be shown on Tuesday night, March 14, at 7 p.m. and 9 p.m. in Draper Hall No. 122. A worker from Packards will be present to talk about the strike, and to solicit our support.

Again, we urge UMass students to support the strikers in their fight for decent working conditions and fair treatment.

Men's workshop on sexual violence

To the Editor:

The Men's Centers at the University of Massachusetts have announced their availability to conduct workshops on rape for groups of men in dormitories or local communities. A number of men have been training themselves since November to use the film, "Rape Culture" as an educational tool in working with men on the issue of sexual violence.

Designed for men only, this workshop exposes some of the myths about rape which are absorbed in the male socialization process, and which tend to be perpetuated by the media. The Men's Centers believe that an understanding of rape as the ultimate form of sexism can lead to critical thinking about the male role and improved relationships between the sexes.

To schedule this workshop, or other Men's Center programs, call the Southwest Men's Center [545-0263], open 12-5 weekdays. Women's groups who wish to use this film should contact one of the women's centers to arrange for a loan.

SPRING FASHION 78

What's In This Spring

By DEANNE C. LARK
Collegian Staff

Spring is here, and along with it, as with every approaching season, a new fashion trend comes too, often confusing the fashion conscious person who has probably just established what was thought to be the current trend.

Although fashion constantly undergoes changes, not all are worth following, and some should just be ignored. But the fashions designed for this spring are definitely worth a try. An element of class is displayed in the softness of both men's and women's clothing. While the casual look is here for all types of activities, the well-polished style of suits and flashy evening wear fits well with the fresh ideas of spring.

The new looks for women are mellow and more feminine than the styles of previous seasons. Even though the "whatever comfortable" look still prevails, this spring's fashions allow for this in a more refined form.

Skirts, dresses and pants are all functional, portraying the new softness with pleats and folds and flattering colors. The blazer, an old favorite, is making its appearance once again, this time in a sleaker form with more fashion mileage.

Styles for men are more static than for women, but this spring's trends have modernized traditional men's fashions. The three-piece suit is still here, but the colors are more appealing, complementing soft styles of women's clothes. The necktie has lost some of its weight, returning to its slimmer style of past years.

Smooth casual put-togethers for men this spring are sensational. In eye-catching bright colors and pastels, men no longer have to settle for one or two basic styles in the primary colors.

The well-dressed men and women of this spring season are afforded with a psychological and physical freedom of style that doesn't lack class. And dressing with an air of class is what fashion is all about, Jeans, however, will always be in.

On UMass Fashion

It has often been said that one can judge a person by the clothes they wear. This is particularly true here on the Umass campus. In fact, with careful observation, you can tell a Umis's major, hometown, monetary status and make a pretty good estimate of the amount of pot, booze and sex the person has in a given week. Clothes tell all. The following is a handy guide to stereotyping any person you see on campus.

MAJORS- The easiest way to classify people according to their dress is by majors. Any person with a calculator hanging off their belt is bound to be an engineering major, and anyone you can smell before you can see is probably from Stockbridge. Here is how the majors break down, according to their tonsorial preferences:

Applied sciences majors- These are people like engineering majors or computor students. They generally have well-groomed hair, and many of the men have moustaches. The men wear flannel or other inexpensive shirts, tucked in to Levis; either jeans or corduroy. Work-boots and expensive looking sneakers are the rule for footwear. Calculators strapped to the belt are an option, but elaborate belt buckles, often with a beer logo are a necessity.

Business majors- This brand of student dresses a little bit better than engineering majors. Silk shirts and knit pants often show up on the men, in addition to those tacky little things they hand around their necks that are supposed to dangle into their chest hairs. Yick.

Many of the women dress the same way; silk shirts, knit pants, and dangling necklaces. Many, however, do not have chest hair. This is a fashionable advantage they have over men.

English majors- Here the dress is a little less standard. One faction of English majors dresses as sloppily as they can-- old clothes, bandanas, patched jeans and silly hats. Another faction (the future professors and high school teachers) dress like they have class. Tucked-in button downs, neat jeans and chinos, and an occasional brief-case.

Down parkas are definitely out (unlike the business majors, where they are most definitely in) unless they are old. Outer wear usually consists of old hooded-parkas (the kind you wore in high school) and army-navy surplus. A back-pack is a fashionable necessity for all English majors. And don't forget the tobacco; cigars, pipes and foreign cigarettes all add to the general fashionableness of the dashing English major.

Political science majors- At this school, they're mostly radical, so, of course, the dress is very proletariat. Flannel shirts, sleeves rolled up to the elbows, are standard fare. Tattered, old pants add to the look. Hair should be definitely unkept, and full beards are nice. No tobacco at all, of course (too bourgeois!). Work-boots are the only footwear.

Physical education majors- Clothing given out by the gyms are common. A sweatshirt with "extra-large" on the front is fashionable and good for the ego, too. Expensive sneakers, with white socks, are the footwear. Razor-cuts, the latest in macho hair styles, are in for the men.

In case you have not received your election programs I have taken the space for today's column to provide a brief overview of the candidates field for that unenviable position, the President of the Student Government Association. Assembling a score card with the number of people that are running (11 candidacies, 16 candidates) for the job, can prove to be a difficult, if not depressing task. Before this election year, the field was considered large with five candidacies. With the advent of popularly elected president(s), came fair campaign financing. This is where the government gives each candidacy a percentage of an election financing fund for merely collecting 250 student signatures, addresses, and phone, and I.D. numbers. The candidates are then free to spend only that money on their campaigns. The ideas was to try to equalize the different candidacies financially, so that Nelson Rockefeller Jr. could not buy the office. One of the plan's drawbacks is that it does not limit those who run for President to serious candidates; hence a large field, with a whole array of "non-serious" folks on a lark, with student money.

Don Bishop has entered the fray of presidential politics for the second time. Don ran in 1976 as a freshman, his theme was to bring a fresh face into student government. His big effort of the contest (of which this author ended on the victorious side) was a full page ad in the Collegian, with a picture of Don on the intramural fields, with the caption reading, "A Man Outstanding In His Field." Don's media effort may have improved this time around. I overheard someone reading his latest pamphlet who mumbled something about checkmating Whitmore.

Jay Flynn has an identity crisis. People keep on asking him if he is related to Dick Flavin. Others have mentioned that he does not seem suited as well for the role of president, as he does for a Shakespearean character like Falstaff. Jay has had some problems adjusting to the Senate's sensibilities, as was best displayed in his questionable debate on the South African divesture issue.

David Barenberg and Susan Birmingham have the label of S.O.P. associated with their candidacy. This is both helpful and potentially harmful. S.O.P., its past actions and present membership, have come under attack from many quarters recently and its good works may be overshadowed by these charges.

Patrick O'Donnell is the opposite end of the student political spectrum from Birmingham, Barenburg and the S.O.P. His fiery and often reactionary rhetoric has peppered the letters to the editor this past academic year. He is the first casuality from the campaign, as word has it he has dropped out. His total dedication to one issue, the destruction of S.O.P., proved to be too limiting in scope to survive. Now he is free to go back to work on Governor Dukakis election campaign.

Stephen Brickman and Mark Vafiades are the two candidates coming from right field without a glove on the issues. They claim to be serious candidates, yet when asked what they thought about reorganization, they responded, "What's that?," and then passed on the question. The reorganization referred to is a proposed plant to reorganize public higher education in Massachusetts.

Russell Swan is the duck bearing, pie throwing, pot smoke-in organizer turned presidential aspirant. Do not be alarmed by his nonsense. It has much historical precedent. In one of his earlier, but unsuccessful attempts at the presidency, Henry Ragin ran on a circus ticket and had his name spelled on the buttocks of zealous campaign workers, who flashed their mentor's name, after a nomination speech. My father ran for Mayor of Kingston, along with several others at the University of Rhode Island, close to twenty-five years ago, on a lark. He played the part of Rigor Mortis, the friendly undertaker. He was carried to the podium in a casket by friends dressed as pallbearers. He rose out of the coffin to deliver his campaign pledge: "I'll never let you down." History does repeat itself.

Brad Goverman and Bill Edelstein, the Collegian duo, are running for co-dictator of the S.G.A. They would abolish student government and replace it with a benevolent dictatorship. They could be a sleeper. However they do seem to refer to their return to the kingdom of Xanadu a bit too often. They have some good special effects, and if they got elected it could be a real close encounter.

Howard Green and Paul Lawrence are the interested and apathetic siamese twins. Howard is the interested one, Paul is apathetic. Built in boredom — is that anything like planned obsolesence?

Steve Ross is the one who has the arrow pointing to a new direction in student government, (someone usually uses this theme in an election). He seems to be a neo-Kennedy type. He has his new direction, Kennedy had his new frontier. Also, they both have the same blow dried hair-dos.

Bob Melia and his appeal to students to not vote, or vote for none of the above, has chosen a very shrewd course. Year in and year out voter turnout has been low in S.G.A. presidential elections. This watershed(gate) of candidates will produce a lot of confusion among the voters. They will either not vote, vote for the best act, or vote for none of the above. Shrewd, very shrewd.

Shelly Gordon and Herb Tyson are giving the voters the benefit of their experience, particularly focused on their Board of Governors' adventures. The issue was raised at the farcical presidential debate, about the large number of B.O.G. employees and its burgeoning payroll empire. Tyson when asked about this porkbarrelling and pay raises, answered that while pay has not increased, the hours worked have. In other words, they are paying themselves more money, from the students, whose building they claim to want back.

Well election fans, there you have it, this year's presidential lineup. It is a pretty motley crew, and does not offer us the best choices possible. For many this election will be a choice of the lesser evil. There are positive attributes among the individual candidates but their problems are just as prevalent. If there were not as many people running I would tell you to flip a coin to decide, but how do you flip an eleven sided coin?

And a duck shall lead them all

By ELLEN PLAUSKY

Have you heard about the array of candidates for President of the Student Government Association?

There is a duck, dictators, and apathetics. When I first began hearing about the nominations, I almost died laughing. Then I thought about it again.

It seemed to me that a mockery was being made of the Student Senate.

Perhaps a plastic duck would be a good speaker as a co-president.

There are some serious candidates for the office, but they're not as colorful so most of them are overlooked by the media in the early stages of their campaigns.

Hey, since the advent of Hite and Batiste, it seemed inevitable that two candidates promising "Benevolent Dictatorship" would arise from the depths of the Collegian. As far as I'm concerned, Goverman and Edelstein's only redeeming feature was that last week, they asked for the resignation of the entire Undergraduate Student Senate. (The black cloud may have a silver lining after all.)

As far as the apathetic minority at UMass goes, they now have someone to support. Paul Lawrence claims the apathy ticket, with his co-nominee, Howard Green representing the concerned hard working students on campus. At least they are good representatives of the entire student body.

Now, I don't know why, but these candidates don't really seem all that serious about the campaign. And, did you know that some of your money is being given by the Student Senate to these candidates to promote their campaigns? (I wonder if the duck accepts speaking engagements?)

Just how serious these candidates are weighs heavily on my mind. And then I was thinking. Maybe they really are serious.

They could be serious about a few things:

They could be serious about wanting the job, which in my opinion would make them insane anyway.

They could want the publicity, it's a good way to get it.

Or, what they could be serious about is making a mockery of the Senate. It's a circus anyway, they're just exemplifying the fact.

But maybe, just maybe, they, in their wild array, are trying to teach us something. Maybe they feel that those in the Student Senate are taking everything too seriously. I mean, being able to face the realities of the Senate is hard. It does have its limitations. There is only so much that they can do (legally, that is).

No matter what they think, those in the Student Senate are not supreme beings. They are not infallible. They are only human, whether they like it or not.

That may very well be the problem with some of the other organizations on campus, too. Some of their leaders assume that their word is law and should be followed at all cost.

I'm not saying that there aren't some important organizations at UMass. Some are very important. And although their leaders may feel that being "little dictators here may help them endure the agony of being followers later ("at UMass I was something") I really don't think it's worth it. We're all going to have the opportunity to take everything seriously soon enough, so why rush it?

Scientists change Skylab orbit to avoid premature fall to earth

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Space agency scientists have contacted the Skylab satellite for the first time in four years, and they soon will try to push it into a safe orbit that will keep it from an early collision with the Earth's atmosphere, officials said Sunday.

A spokesman for the National Aeronautics and Space Administration said engineers in Bermuda sent radio messages Saturday that successfully activated a computer which has been silent since the last time Skylab was used, Feb. 8, 1974.

"The computer continued in operation for about five minutes and good data was received," the spokesman said. "Results indicate that the computer system and the power system on Skylab are good and that the thrust gas pressure that will permit future attitude changes also is good."

Soon, he said, the scientists will send "commands that may permit it to maneuver into an attitude that will result in minimum drag as it orbits Earth. Such maneuvers may be made in a month or so and may add several months to Skylab's orbital life time."

NASA previously said the 85-ton Skylab was safe in orbit for at least six years. Then the scientists recalculated the figures and the spokesman said NASA currently predicts Skylab will begin falling back to earth sometime between next summer and early 1980.

The prediction raised fears of a breakup similar to the Soviet satellite which came down in January. The Russian satellite broke up over an uninhabited area of Canada but threatened to hit populated regions.

The spokesman said astronauts on an October 1979 space shuttle flight will try to maneuver Skylab into a new, higher, orbit or attempt to construct an orbit that will allow the satellite to land safely in a deserted area of ocean.

The experiments began at 3:30 a.m. Saturday as the satellite passed over NASA's ground station in Bermuda. The spokesman said scientists were able to send commands that turned on the communications system in the satellite's airlock module.

Your Birthday

MONDAY, MARCH 13

Born today, you are a serious individual with originality, determination and good humor. You have an air of calm which others envy but cannot seem to imitate. You are often the only source of logic among people who have excited themselves to the point of chaos.

You are extremely sensitive to others' feelings. You are also objective, and may act in ways that are proper to the situation though hurtful to those involved. This denial of your sensitive nature may lead you to dual responses, which could prove detrimental to your success. Once you learn to soften the blow of truth, everyone will be happier.

Those who respond outwardly to what goes on about them may find you difficult to understand, for you keep your emotions behind a facade of disinterest. Inwardly, however, you are quick to react to life's humorous aspects.

Also born on this date: Joseph Priestly, chemist; Sammy Kaye, musician-comedian; Joseph II of Germany.

TUESDAY, MARCH 14

PISCES(Feb.19-March 20) — Your generosity or another's can cause trouble by evening. Take advice from elders.

TAURUS(April 20-May 20) — Today you make your own goals and achieve them yourself. All praise and blame is yours.

GEMINI(May 21-June 20) — Depend on experience to get through a tough day. Listen to advice critically.

CANCER(June 21-July 22) — Impress higher-ups with intellect and you should have more serious assignments.

Volleyballers win 7 of 11 tilts

Returning from a strong debut in the New England Open Volleyball tournament last weekend, the UMass Volleyball Club (UMVBC) pulled off its first winning weekend. The team travelled to Middlebury College on Saturday and to Amherst College yesterday, compiling a 7-4 record.

The squad, in its first year, has 18 strong players, with 12 travelling to each tourney. "Playing in the toughest division (Northern) in the New England Collegiate Volleyball league, UMVBC has defeated each team at least once," commented Coach Michael Gurk.

At Middlebury, UMass played Williams College in the first match. Williams ran away with the first game, only to see the Minutemen return with an explosive win. The third game, lasting nearly 30 minutes, was marked with many long rallies and close decisions by the officials until it was won by Williams, who took the match, 5-15, 15-10, 12-15.

UMass then faced Westfield State for the first time this season, winning two of the three games in its second match.

Sloppy play resulting from over-confidence resulted in the single loss to Westfield, 15-3, 15-3, 11-15.

The third match against host Middlebury was the "turning point" for the spikers. UMVBC displayed one of its best games of the season by defeating the Northern Division leaders in the first game 15-9. Freshman setter Darryl Cain and seniors Arnie Roberts and Steve Richter combined their efforts by putting many balls "straight down" on the opposite court.

UMass became a unit both on and off the court. The court players were sparked by the numerous rhythmic Japanese-style volleyball cheers from the bench.

"We coalesced as a team this weekend," said all-around player Al Morel.

Middlebury came back to defeat the spikers in two close games, 15-9, 7-15, 9-15.

Yesterday at Amherst College, UMVBC finally realized its potential. Gurk brought the entire squad to Alumni Gym, along with some UMass fans. In three straight games, UMass pulverized Amherst, 15-13, 15-8, 15-9.

"Today was power volleyball at its finest. We displayed a most impressive display of teamwork, fundamentals and enthusiasm," said Gurk. "We were psyched to win, and our bench was very supportive."

Outstanding players this weekend were captain Kirk Peters, Morel, Mark Savel, Don Love, Jim Grosslein and Larry Adams.

"The wins this weekend boosted the team's morale, which I'm hoping will last throughout the remainder of the season," said Gurk.

Halfway through the season, the club is shooting for a .500 or better first campaign. The team is preparing for a home meet on April 8th with Amherst, Williams and Westfield.

UM women run 14th, Penn State is champ

By DAVE RODMAN
Collegian Staff

MEDFORD — UMass finished 14th as Penn State University easily captured the indoor Eastern Association of Intercollegiate Athletics for Women (EAIAW) Track And Field Championships at the Dussault Cage on the campus of Tufts University.

The Minutewomen ran their way to several personal-best times, including one school record, on the way to amassing seven points. Penn State totaled 88 to outdistance Maryland, last year's champ (66½), Morgan State (63), Rutgers (51) and the University of DC (21).

Sophomore standout Cindi Martin lowered her own school record in the half-mile by one-tenth of a second as she finished fourth in 2:15.6. Penn State's Penny Fales won the event in 2:12.6, a meet record.

Both UMass coaches, Ken O'Brien and Charlotte Lettis, timed Martin at "around 2:14," but the official time is the one that counts. It was only one of several foulups by the officials (more about them later) over the weekend.

"I think running two races helped her, strength-wise," said Lettis. Martin had to qualify on Friday, and did so by running 2:17.5.

"I'm still not sure what I'm doing in the half, though," said Martin, who was a quarter-miler up until this indoor season. "I'm not used to starting so quick."

Getting a fast start is important on indoor tracks, which have short straights and tight turns. Getting stuck at the back or middle of packs forces runners to alter their style and expend more energy getting back to the front of the race.

Monica Scott picked up two points in the three mile by finishing fifth in a personal best time of 18:56. She had never broken 20 minutes for the distance before.

"I felt a little out of place out there with some of those runners, particularly Kathy Mills (international-class distance runner), but I think the experience will help me in the outdoor season."

The final point was gained by the two-mile relay quartet of Priscilla Wilson, Barb Callanan, Laurie Wolf and Bonnie Bukowski, who were sixth in 9:44.4.

The high point of that relay, which was just nipped for fifth by Harvard, was Laurie Wolf's personal best time of 2:20.2 for her 880 leg.

"That was an amazing time after what she's been through this week," said Lettis.

Wolf suffered a slight hamstring pull in the NEAAU's last weekend, but it didn't bother her Saturday.

Diana Sealey and Nancy Cominoli also made the finals in the 440 and 50 yard hurdles, respectively. Sealey finished the quarter in seventh, in 59.9 seconds.

"The big thing for Diana was making the finals," said Lettis. "That's a major step for outdoors."

Cominoli finished seventh in the hurdle final after a last minute decision by the officials let her in. She had been excluded when the officials made a mistake writing down numbers in the trials and let a Maryland hurdler into the final instead.

Gymwomen third in Easterns

By LAURA BASSETT
Collegian Staff

The women's gymnastics team finished third in the Eastern Association for Intercollegiate Athletics for Women (EAIAW) Gymnastics Championships held in Pittsburgh over the weekend. The gymwomen were seeded fourth going into the competition and earned 139.20 points to capture third place.

"We finished in the same place last year but with a stronger score," said Coach Virginia Evans. Last year the Minutewomen totaled 144.30 at Easterns and received an at-large bid to compete at the AIAW nationals. Teams finishing first in their regions automatically qualify for nationals and six other slots are filled with teams who have the next highest scores in their regional competitions. "Points are as important as places at this point in the season," said Evans.

Penn State captured the Eastern title after settling for second place the last two years. The Nittany Lions totaled 146.30 points to become the champs. They dethroned Clarion State who finished second with 143.95. Clarion had won both the Eastern and national titles for the last two years. Fifth seeded UNH finished fourth with a 137.90 total.

Penn State's Ann Carr won the all-around title with a four-event total of 37.40. Carr, the defending Eastern and national all-around champion, won three of four events in the meet. She finished first on the balance beam, in vaulting and on the floor, but had to settle for second on the uneven parallel bars behind Clarion's Nancy Jones.

Senior Susan Cantwell finished eighth in the all-around competition with a total of 35.80. Cantwell was UMass' highest finisher but just missed making the all-East all-around team, as the cut off was a 35.95 total for the top six finishers. Cantwell qualified for the individual finals on the beam and on the floor. On Friday during the team competition, Cantwell ,was the highest UMass floor exercise scorer with an 8.95. She qualified for Saturday's competition with a 9.10 on the balance beam.

Senior Stephanie Jones finished tenth all-around and qualified to compete on the uneven parallel bars and balance beam on Saturday with scores of 8.95 and 9.05 respectively. Jones went on to finish sixth on both the bars and the beam to make the All-East teams for both events.

Captain Karen Hemberger finished thirteenth in the all-around competition with a total of 35.05. Hemberger qualified for the vaulting finals with a 9.40 for her Sukahara vault. She finished second in vaulting to Carr with a 37.50 total. Carr narrowly edged Hemberger as she earned a 37.55 over the two day period. Hemberger made the All-East team in vaulting for her performances.

Karen Clemente and Cheryl Morrier also competed in all four events for the Minutewomen. Freshman Clemente finished 34th with a total of 31.95 and Morrier was 39th with 31.60. Evans lauded Clemente's first performance at Easterns as well as the debut of sophomores Kim Whitelaw and Laurie Knapp.

The gymwomen must now wait until Wednesday evening to see if they are offered an at-large bid for the AIAW nationals. "I felt we were going to have to score in the 140's in order to make it to nationals before the Eastern's, so I'm not too optimistic at this point," said Evans. If the team is not invited it will be the first time in seven years UMass has not appeared at the nationals as a team.

Cantwell, Jones and Hemberger will still have a chance to go to nationals as individual competitors. In order to qualify as an individual you must total at least 34 points, which all three did, and be in the top 24 individuals not affiliated with the team.

Skiers take Can-Ams

By LISA CAPONE
Collegian Staff

The UMass women skiers finished their season this past week with another victory, giving them an "absolutely flawless" season, according to Coach Bill MacConnell.

The Minutewomen, champions of the Women's Inter-College Ski Conference (WISC), raced under near perfect conditions in the Canadian-American Collegiate Invitationals at White Face Mt., Lake Placid, NY.

The skiers raced against top-ranking teams from Canada and the US on the same trails that will be used for the 1980 Olympics. The Car-Ams, held twice a year, have been in existence for five years, with UMass teams winning the competition three times. The Minutewomen entered the meets this week as defending champs, and, by what MacConnell termed a "razor thin margin," maintained that status.

The Minutewomen took part in two events during the week: a giant slalom on Tuesday and a slalom on Thursday. Monday and Wednesday were spent in training for the events.

Angela Esson of the University of Toronto won the giant slalom, followed by her teammate Cathy Kingsville, according to MacConnell. In third place was Mary Robbins of West Ontario, with Nancy Gilroy of Plymouth State fourth. UMass skiers Kathy Shinnick and Nancy Hayden finished fifth and sixth respectively, and the third powerhouse of the UMass team, Cathy Donovan, placed 10th. After the giant slalom, Plymouth State was in first place, with UMass holding second.

Esson also won Thursday's slalom with a two-run time of 98.44 seconds. Minutewoman Hayden took second place at 104.95. Third and fourth were Robbins and Martha Roberts of Plymouth State. Shinnick placed fifth. Minutewomen Connie Pratt and Valerie Hanson were 17th and 21st, respectively, and Donovan, who fell in her second run, finished 27th in the race.

According to MacConnell, UMass ended up with a total point score of 105, beating Toronto (104) by only one point. In third place was Plymouth State with 103 points and finishing fourth was West Ontario, scoring 99 points.

MacConnell is sure that UMass will again be invited to the Can-Ams next year, based on the team's superior performance this season.

"Only once before in my career has it happened that a team has made a clean sweep, as the UMass women did this year. They're a fine team, and we've had a wonderful season," he said.

Donovan and Pratt, who graduate this spring, will be greatly missed next season, says MacConnell. However, the skiers will anticipate another good season next year.

Curt P. Kohlberg

Heavyweight complications

Boxing.

The sport of men. The Brown Bomber, The Manassa Mauler, The Rock.

Then came one Cassius Clay, The Louisville Lip. The kid who could dance, prance, punch, rope a dope and defy the laws of gravity by floatin' like a butterfly and stingin' like a bee. The man was at a time, superhuman in his boxing talents as well as in his favorite pastime, entertaining.

But three hard years in prison produced a transition in the nineteen year old youth. When he finished serving his time he was no longer Clay, he was Ali. He was fighting for Allah, fighting to regain his heavyweight title the World Boxing Council (WBC) stripped him of in 1966.

Now, seventeen years after he knocked out Sonny Liston to win the title (as a pre-fight 8-1 underdog), his filibustering career is one fight from being completed. The fight will be worth around $14 million, to be split between Ali and Leon Spinks, the current holder of the heavyweight crown. The fight will take place in September, if it ever takes place at all.

There is a complicated controversy disrupting the boxing world. It stems from the inconsistency in rulings generated by the two equally renowned boxing organizations that rank all categories of fighters; the Mexico City based WBC, which is presided over by Jose Sulaimen and Elias Cordova and his boys, from the rival World Boxing Association, out of Panama. The WBC is steadfastedly holding its position of refusing to sanction an Ali-Spinks rematch, because the WBC constitution prohibits immediate remmatches after a champion loses his title, unless the top ranked challenger is given the first chance at the title. In addition, it is threatening to withdraw recognition of Spinks' title if he doesn't fight Ken Norton first.

On the other side of the coin, the WBA has formally announced that it will sanction an Ali-Spinks rematch for the title, even though it has dropped Ali to the ranking of third contender, behind Norton and Jimmy Young. This is in direct violation of the WBA rule that states that the top contender has to have the first shot at the title, which is what Cordova stated immediately after the Ali-Spinks bout on February 15.

But in an effort to become the dominant political body in the boxing world, Cordova has given in to Ali's plea to the surprise of no one. That is why I think Ali will get his rematch. Ali is a magician in the true sense of the word. He performs wizardly acts in and out of the ring, and listens to Allah, and no one else.

If he wants the chance to become the only man in this history of the sport to win back the title after relinquishing it three times, you can bet your last pair of Fruit of the Looms that he will get that chance. Because when Ali talks, everybody (including EF Hutton) listens.

The emergence of the 196 pound Spinks as Heavyweight Champion of the World seems to have thrown the division into an uproar. Smokin' Joe Frazier is retiring his microphone to where it belongs (need I mention where). He and George "I'm going into the ring for the sole purpose of manifesting Jesus" Foreman are both unretiring, and planning on knocking out the rest of what's left of Spinks' face. In addition, capable challengers Young, Larry Holmes and Earnie "bowling ball" Shavers are eagerly awaiting title shots.

Leon Spinks is under contract to Top Rank Inc., a promotional organization that Bob Arum started. They have the promotional rights to Spinks' next three fights with an option for three more. Top Rank is also working on endorsements for Leon. Don't be surprised if you see such novelties as Spinks A Cola and Spinkspaste hit the market. Both are designed to remove your gums, all your teeth, dentures, etc. Your money might be returned if you're not completely satisfied, but if you complain, Leon might just want a word with you. (He knows a couple you know!!)

Curt's Courageous Calls ... As of today, not even Neon Leon knows who he is going to fight next. If it's Ali, believe it or not I like Spinks as an 11-10 favorite to keep the crown. Ali says he'll drop to 210 for the fight, but his legs don't limbo anymore, his head don't bob elusively, and his punching power has lost its iron ... If Ali does get his shot, I'll lay 20-1 that it's his final effort with the "Everlast" trunks on against a formidable opponent ... If Spinks has to fight Ken "Mandingo" Norton (who is a superb body puncher), I like Norton as a 5-2 pick to clobber Spinks. Norton is hungry for the title, and can go fifteen rounds with anybody. He also won a close decision over Jimmy Young, who might develop (in a year or two) from a solid punching bag into a class puncher ... Kinky item: how about a seven-man battle royale for the chance to meet Spinks? I can just see it now, the top six contenders and Howard Cosell, battling it out. Incidentally, I like Cosell in that one.

By MICHAEL KATZ

Plans to shift a proposed Leon Spinks-Muhammad Ali rematch to the island nation of Mauritius in the Indian Ocean were met yesterday with stiffening opposition from groups objecting to South African funding of the $14 million bout. Top Rank, Inc., promoter of the heavyweight title fight projected for sometime in September, bowed Thursday to anti-apartheid pressure and shifted the site from Bophuthatswana, a black homeland recently set up by the South African Government.

But representatives of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, the American Committee on Africa and other local organizations, as well as the Organization of African Unity, said they now wanted Top Rank to find "alternative funding" for the controversial bout.

About half the purse money for the fight is to be provided by Southern Sun Hotels, which, like many other South African businesses, has interests in Mauritius. Most of the $7 million would come from world-wide closed-circuit television, which civil rights groups in the United States believe is vulnerable to picketing.

"We're heavily involved now in the Davis Cup protests," said Prexy Nesbitt, associate director of the American Committee on Africa, referring to the planned boycott of the United States-South Africa tennis match next weekend in Nashville, Tenn.

Ali's Silence a Puzzle

"But when that is over, we'll turn our attention to the fight," Nesbitt said. "Meanwhile I just wonder why Muhammad Ali has been so silent. Where is the Ali of old?"

Ali, a symbol to both black Americans and Africans, has turned down previous requests to fight in South Africa. His lawyer, Charles Lomax, has said, "We won't do anything to demean Muhammad Ali."

Edward Bell, a lawyer Spinks hired earlier this week, said by telephone from Detroit yesterday, tnat "if you say South Africa, it's automatically suspect."

Bell's hiring was a strong indication that the new champion does not intend to be controlled by Top Rank, with whom he has a contract giving it promotional rights for his first three title defenses with an option for three more. Still, Bell said he could not speak for Spinks. The champion is currently on vacation with his wife, Nova.

"Leon didn't know anything at all of this, how do you pronounce the place, Bophuthatswana," said Bell, saying it was "embarrassing" that the area, which is recognized only by South Africa as "independent", had been lined to the champion. "But certainly the South African money for the fight will be one of our major considerations when we talk," said the lawyer, who planned to visit Top Rank in New York next week.

Nothing in Writing

The Top Rank-Southern Sun deal has not been consummated, and only a "memo agreement" exists. Bon Arum, president of Top Rank, said "nothing is signed with anyone at all." And no fight can be made until the fighters agree.

Benjamin Hooks, executive director of the N.A.A.C.P., said any plans to accept South African financial backing would be "unfortunate, troubling and objectionable."

"In a statement yesterday, Hooks said the N.A.C.P. "welcomed" the scrapping of the Bophuthatswana plans, "but still is perturbed by the willingness of Top Rank to permit South African interests to underwrite the fight, albeit elsewhere."

"Under no circumstances should black American fighters be hired by promoters in any way to compromise long-standing efforts to achieve human rights in any part of the world," the statement concluded.

Relying on Ali

Mustafa Sam of Nigeria, the associate executive secretary of the Organization of African Unit, who was in Arum's Park Avenue offices Thursday when the promoter announced he was canceling the Bophuthatswana plans, said he wanted it clearly understood that his group also not pleased with South African financial backing of the fight.

"We indicated our pleasure because Arum and his group decided not to stage the fight in the so-called independent Bophuthatswana," he said. "But if he is dealing with South African business people, we should ask him to find other means."

Sam said he hoped Ali would not fight for South African money. "All indications, if I can rely on past statements by Muhammad Ali, are that he won't," said Sam. "I hope he will not, because Muhammad Ali, is liked and respected by many Africans and he will disappoint them if he does do so."

Spink's Suspension Clarified

The Nevada State Athletic Commission suspended Spinks for 90 days on Thursday, not as reported, for failing to tell about an injection of Novocain for a rib injury prior to Spinks' Feb. 15 fight at Las Vegas, but for "medical reasons."

Study Finds Few On Death Row For Killing Blacks

ATLANTA, — Preliminary results of a new study of the race of Death Row inmates and the race of their victims in three Southern states show that few blacks, and no whites, have been ordered executed for the killing of blacks.

The findings, taken from the three states where death penalty laws survived a Supreme Court challenge in 1976, will ultimately be used to lodge another challenge to death penalty laws, according to Morris Dees, director of the Southern Poverty Law Center, which financed the investigation.

The study, still under way, is being conducted by Dr. William J. Bowers of Northeastern University. Dr. Bowers is the author of the book "Executions in America", a critical study of death penalty laws, their history and application that was published by Lexington Books in 1974.

The new survey has found that in the three states under consideration — Georgia, Florida and Texas — 45 per cent of the Death Row inmates were blacks who killed whites, while only 5 per cent were blacks who killed blacks. Fifty per cent were whites who killed whites. There were no white inmates of Death Row who killed blacks.

"This study proved that blacks still make up a far greater proportion of the Death Row population than are represented in the general population," Mr. Dees said. "But the real clincher is that death is reserved for those who kill whites."

Similar to 1976 Study

The results of the inquiry are similar to those of Dr. Marc Riedel of the University of Pennsylvania, who found in a 1976 study that in states that had tailored new laws to satisfy Supreme Court objections, only 1 per cent of Death Row inmates were whites who killed blacks, and only 7 per cent of nonwhite inmates were those who killed nonwhites.

"The significance of all of this," said Deborah Leavy, director of the capital punishment project for the American Civil Liberties Union in New York, "is that as much as legislatures are trying to write legislation that supposedly fairly condemns people to death, it can't be done. Racism is reprehensible when it is applied anywhere in society, but particularly so when it condemns people to death."

The new survey by Dr. Bowers is of particular significance because it concentrates on states where death laws survived a 1976 Supreme Court challenge that invalidated such laws in North Carolina and Louisiana.

In that case, Gregg v. Georgia, the Court held essentially that the statutes in Florida, Georgia and Texas did not violate constitutional guarantees as they were written. The Court did not deal with the question of application.

Over Half in 3 States

The three states account for more than half of the 408 persons who were on Death Row last December — 93 in Florida, 67 in Georgia and 65 in Texas — according to the American Civil Liberties Union.

Dr. Bowers found that the killers of blacks were "grossly underrepresented" on Death Row. "A majority of murderers have killed blacks," he said, "but only 5 per cent of those on Death Row have done so."

"Indeed," he continued, "no white who has killed a black has yet reached Death Row; the proportion of blacks who killed blacks is 10 times greater in society, according to arrest records, than on Death Row."

Dr. Bowers found the racial disparities between the percentage of those arrested for homicide and those on Death Row at wide variance. Six per cent of those arrested for homicide were blacks who allegedly killed whites, compared with 45 per cent on Death Row. Fifty per cent of those arrested were blacks who allegedly killed blacks, compared with 5 per cent on Death Row. Forty per cent of those arrested were whites who allegedly killed whites, compared with 50 per cent on Death Row. Four per cent of those arrested were whites who allegedly killed blacks, and none of those were on Death Row.

Mayor of Atlanta Suspends Police Head

ATLANTA, March 10 — In an effort to end a drawn-out, racially sensitive police promotion scandal, Mayor Maynard Jackson suspended Atlant's Public Safety Commissioner today, charging that he had committed "serious errors in judgment" that had resulted in "severe damage" to the city's reputation.

The suspension was still another blow to Atlanta's effort to maintain its fame as the South's most progressive and vibrant metropolis. Within the past few weeks, the city has been shaken by the financial collapse of one of its futuristic downtown developments and by disclosures of serious money and management problems at one of its major banks.

Mr. Jackson suspended the Safety Commissioner, Reginald Eaves, without pay after Mr. Eaves submitted his resignation, effective June 7. The Mayor said that was not soon enough.

"All efforts to secure a resignation effective now have not succeeded," the Mayor said this afternoon in announcing the suspension. "We must settle the matter now. We cannot have indecision any longer."

Accused of Showing Examination

Pending appointment of a new Safety Commissioner, the Police Department will be run by Calvin Carter, the city's Deputy Aviation Commissioner, one of Mr. Jackson's close advisers. Mr. Carter was given day-to-day control of the force earlier this week when Mr. Jackson announced that he was nearing a decision about Mr. Eaves's future. At the time of that announcement, city officials said, Mr. Jackson was beginning to pressure Mr. Eaves to resign.

Mr. Eaves, the first black to head the city's Police Department, had been accused of giving a selected group of black officers permission to look over a promotion examination before taking it. He denied the charge.

When appointed safety commissioner four years ago by Mr. Jackson, the city's first black Mayor, Mr. Eaves was instructed to increase the number of blacks on the force. Atlanta is a city in which blacks predominate, but the police force has long been predominantly white.

Mr. Eaves not only increased the number of blacks on the force but also reduced police brutality and the city's one soaring crime rate. He acquired considerable political clout in the black community, enough to force Mr. Jackson to move slowly and cautiously in dealing with the scandal.

Minutes after the Commissioner was suspended this afternoon, some of his friends at City Hall began passing out pamphlets suggesting a recall election for the Mayor.

"How long are you going to sell out black people?" a black man yelled as the Mayor announced the suspension. Police officers hustled the man away.

Mr. Eaves was never very popular among whites. Well before the promotion scandal broke, he disturbed many by hiring an aide with a police record and by helping a relative get a city job.

From first reports of the scandal, Mr. Jackson resisted discharging Mr. Eaves, a close friend since college days. He apparently feared that step might hurt his own political standing among blacks.

There was always the danger, too, that Mr. Eaves might demand a dismissal hearing before the City Council. The council has nine black and nine white members. They sometimes votel along racial lines.

'The City Too Busy to Hate'

Of the two dozen other members of the police force who allegedly were involved in the cheating episode, most are scheduled for disciplinary hearings before a police board within the next few weeks.

Atlanta has proudly billed itself in recent years as "the city too busy to hate," a reference to its approach to race relations. The police promotion scandal, which has dragged on for almost seven months, was beginning to threaten that.

"It was polarizing the whole community," State Representative Billy McKinney, one of the city's well-known black politicians, said. "It was even polarizing the black community to an extent."

The white business establishment was particularly disturbed by the scandal.

Already smaring from widespread national coverage of real estate and banking difficulties downtown it saw the police cheating furor as a mark against the city's reputation for clean government. But until this week, most white businessmen had not addressed the matter publicly, apparently out of fear that they might exacerbate the racial overtones. The business community ran Atlanta until a few years ago, when black voter registration passed white registration.

On Wednesday, however, the Chamber of Commerce issued a statement calling on Mayor Jackson to bring the scandal to an end. "We are disappointed," the statement said.

Yesterday, Dan Sweat, the executive director of Central Atlanta Progress, another major businessmen's group, asserted that the police promotion scandal was "far more serious than the Omni and the C & S things."

The Omni is a futuristic, $80 million downtown "mega-structure," a conglomeration of hotels, offices and shops that symbolizes Atlanta's drive and hustle. But it is in severe economic straits, having been completed just as the recession of the mid-1970's hit the once zooming Atlanta real estate market. It has never recovered.

A fresh spurt in black suicide is prompting growing concern in the medical and social profession. Although black suicides have increased in all age groups, they have risen more significantly among young urban blacks in northern areas of the United States. It has been reported also that the black suicide rate is now higher than it has been in fifty years.

Moreover, the suicide rate of young black women has risen more than eighty percent (80 percent) in the past twenty years.

Until recently, the overall suicide rate in the United States has varied little since 1900 with the average annual rate approximating 11 suicides per 100,000. But in the last few years, it has grown to 12.8 in 100,000. The nationwide suicide rate for the black population has always been low when compared to the white race, but it has grown significantly among young blacks in northern urban areas.

At the present time, the rate for white suicide nationally is 11.3 with the black rate at 4.6 per 100,000. Dr. James P. Comer, associate professor of psychiatry at Yale University, has provided the most recent and accurate statistical information regarding suicides among both blacks and whites.

According to Dr. Comer, in 1969, suicide was the third death (behind accidents and homicide) for black males between the ages of 15 and 24, at a rate of 10 per 100,000.

For white males in the same age group, the rate was 12.6 per 100,000, the second leading cause of death. "Suicide among black females in the 15 to 24 age group," states Dr. Comer, "was the sixth leading cause of death, at a rate of 4 per 100,000."

The rate of suicide for blacks, according to this psychiatrist, dropped gradually after they reached age 34, with only a slight increase for black men between the ages of 54 and 84. The suicide rate declined for white women in the 45 to 54 age category, while the rate for white males increased as they got older.

There are approximately 35,000 suicides in the United States each year. Today, suicide is ranked nationally from number 10 to number 12 among causes of death. But statisticians as well as suicide prevention workers declare that if all self-inflicted deaths were listed, suicide would rank fourth or fifth on the list.

Authorities maintain that there are many suicides that are unrecorded. They point out that many self-directed deaths are reported as attributed to other causes, particularly in situations involving religious or social stigmas.

Dr. Alvin F. Poussaint, associate professor of psychiatry at the Harvard University Medical School, states that as far as blacks are concerned, the facts have been suppressed, not because of shame, but racism. He maintains that white officials could care less about how data on black suicide gets collated, so they report the cause of death as unknown. He points out that this is particularly true of so-called accidental deaths.

For instance, he explains: "A man discovered at the foot of a cliff may have fallen or jumped to his death." Thus, at the discretion of the record keeper, actual suicides often are recorded as accidental. Poussaint believes that if an officials believes in the stereotype of the happy-go-lucky black, he or she is likely to discount suicide and attribute the death to accident.

Although recording procedures have been improved, one should always keep the impact of these facts in mind whenever interpreting data regarding causes of death, and more specifically, suicide.

Finally, taking into consideration the previous discussion concerning the many ways suicide statistics may get suppressed and the additional commentary Dr. Poussaint made regarding the way black suicide statistics get "fudged," one can easily discern that black suicide might be ranked second behind the number one cause of death among blacks — homicide.

The premise of most experts in this field is that suicide occurs as a result of some personal loss. The loss may be actual, imagined, threatened or potential, but to the person involved, it is very real. The loss theory is not the only reason why people decide to end their lives. It is, however, in many instances, the significant factor that precipitates the suicide.

The ratio of attempted suicides is approximately three females for every male, and the ratio of completed suicides is three males for every female. The reason black males commit suicide more frequently than females has had a great deal to do with the methods they use.

The most frequently used methods of suicide by black males are shooting and hanging, whereas black women use more non-lethal methods, such as barbituates and sleeping pills. There are a multitude of speculations as to why people choose the methods they do.

The suicide rates for blacks are higher in the North than in the South. The holiday months have the lowest number of suicides per day. April and May usually have the highest daily rate.

In general, suicides are most likely to occur on a Friday or a Monday. However, recent research on the subject indicated that the majority of black suicide victims took their lives on Wednesday. It is difficult to implicate why Wednesday is the most popular day for black suicide.

Until recently statistics indicated that there is an increase in black suicide nationally, and that young black males have been taking their lives with rising frequency; however, suicide occurring among the black population in general and black women in particular, has been practically excluded from the literature.

When mentioned, most references to this phenomenon fall in the same category as much of the literature on different aspects of the black experience written mostly by white intellectuals. That is, it too often reflects a lack of insight and understanding about the culture and lifestyles of the black population.

This unfamiliarity with black people and their culture often leads to conclusions that are racially biased and narrow in perspective. Such authors tend to apply already existing general theories of suicide in their explanations of this extraordinary occurrence among blacks.

In summary, the research on black self-destruction is sparse and speculative. Moreover, when the studies were done, samples were much too small to make any reliable or valid conclusions about suicide among blacks. Therefore, their findings must be reviewed carefully and critically.

Census Says Blacks Moving From N.E. At Fast Rate

WASHINGTON, March 10 — The Census Bureau reported today that the migration of blacks away from the Northeast, first tentatively detected during the early 1970's, appeared to have accelerated since 1975.

The report seems to confirm a reversal of migration trends that have prevailed since the Civil War and that have altered the social and economic fabric of the industrial Northeast.

Larry H. Long, the Census Bureau demographer who prepared the study, theorized that the shift was caused by the movement of job opportunities to the so-called Sun Belt states of the South and the West. For the first time in decades, he said, both blacks and whites are moving in the same directions, south and west.

"This has to be a reflection of expanding employment opportunities in the South and declining opportunities in the North," he said. "It's a classic case of push and pull."

The West Gained Blacks

The study also shows that the South is no longer losing blacks. Nor is the North Central region gaining black migrants. The only section that gained more black migrants than it lost was the West.

While the actual number of blacks moving out of the Northeast is small in comparison with the total black population of the region, the figures signify that established patterns are changing rapidly.

From 1960 to 1970, the nine Northeastern states (the six New England states, plus New York, New Jersey and Pennsylvania) experienced a net gain of 612,000 blacks, most from the rural South. But between 1970 and 1975 the pattern shifted and there was a net loss of 64,000 blacks, or nearly 13,000 a year. And from 1975 to 1977, the loss grew to 104,000, meaning that the net rate of blacks leaving the Northeast has about quadrupled since 1975.

Periodic National Surveys

The 104,000 figure was the result of 147,000 blacks moving out of the region and 43,000 moving in. This does not necessarily mean that the black population in the area is lower, because the greater number of births than deaths probably more than made up for the loss from migration.

The census report is based on periodic nation surveys conducted by the bureau. The mobility of all persons 2 years old and older is recorded in the surveys.

The surveys since 1970 have found that the flow of blacks out of the South has ended. While the sample in the most recent survey was not large enough to be conclusive, it suggests that there may have been a net return of blacks to the South.

Previous studies have shown that most of the blacks moving from the North to the South were Southern-born ones returning home. The latest survey, taken in March 1977, did not examine that question, so experts will have to wait for the complete census in 1980 to determine if that trend is continuing.

Even more interesting, Mr. Long said, is the question of whether Northern-born blacks are also moving to the South in pursuit of new job opportunities.

Documents the White Exodus

Since many blacks now live in cities in the Northeast and North Central regions, where income levels and job prospects are not rising as fast as in the South and West, the report states, "The degree to which differences in income and employment levels of blacks and whites converge may be related to the relative responsiveness of the two population groups to regional differences in income-earning opportunities."

The new report also documents the white exodus from the industrial North. From 1975 to 1977 there was a net loss of whites over 2 years old of 483,000 from the Northeast and 377,000 from the North Central states. The South and West gained 436,000 and 424,000, respectively.

The study also found that the movement to smaller towns and to suburbs continued. From 1975 to 1977, large metropolitan areas as a whole lost 613,000 through migration. Central cities lost 3.3 million and suburbs gained 2.7 million people.

The report, titled "Geographical Mobility: March 1985 to March 1977", was prepared by Kristin A. Hansen, Celia G. Boertlein and Mr. Long of the Census Bureau's Population Division. It is available for $3 from the United States Government Printing Office, Washington, D.C. 20402. (Current Population Reports, Series P-20

Campus Speaks

CAMPUS SPEAKS:

In conjunction with International Women's week this weeks question is: What do you think are the major problems facing third world women at UMass.

MARY CUSTARD: I think one of the major problems is the lack of communications between each other. Black women have a hard enough time getting along with each other and it seems that other 3rd world women don't associate with black women. There is a lot of animosity in the Five College area. It seems like women from the other five colleges can deal with the men on this campus but don't want or can't with the black women on this campus.

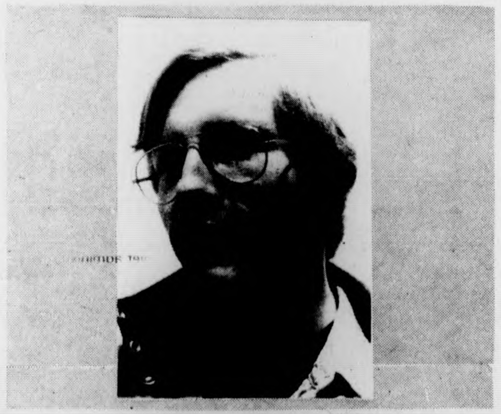
HELENE: First of all they are 3rd world and they are are women and that in itself is two strikes against them in this society. Sometimes they are also some conflicts between black and white women in communicating and I think its too bad because we are all women.

MIKE: I think the problems are developed by the women themselves. They feel males owe them something for all past oppressions.

BIG AL: I think some of the major problems are that sisters don't communicate enough with each other as a whole and its like a lot of petty things go on that shouldn't, like the animosity between the sisters on the different five colleges. They all need each other and the brothers we need them to. Its a shame that guys can be friends with guys from other schools while women cant.

CALUCHA: Being accepted as we are as individuals and the special need to be looked at individually.

CHERYL YONG: Just that we are looked at differently than other women.



GREG: I think that the combined problems of being a woman and a black person are heavy burdens to bear. The problems of rape, general disrespect, vulnerability and of course the rampart sexism of the male dominated society.

HEALTH, EDUCATION AND WELFARE

Black Colleges

America was promise, Archibald MacLeish wrote, to which it might be added that one of the promises was choice. The United Negro College Fund helps to support 41 colleges and universities dedicated to the principle of keeping one such choice alive: the opinion of attending a predominantly black college administered by black people.

At one time, before predominantly white institutions were truly opened to black students, the Negro colleges were practically the only places in the United States at which black Americans could obtain a bachelor's degree or do graduate work. The role of the Negro colleges has changed with the times.

Today they offer academic studies to the many youngsters who prefer to develop themselves in an environment where blacks are in the majority, without the competitive pressures they might encounter elsewhere.

The existence of Negro colleges and universities has not diminished the need for non-discriminatory practices in all educational institutions. But those who support diversity of opportunity will find the United Negro College Fund an excellent vehicle for their generosity.

BLOODBATH IN IRAN

On January 9, 1978 masses of Iranians gathered in the cities of Oum and Mashad to stage peaceful demonstrations protesting the fifteen-year exile of Islamic leader, Ayatollah Khomeini. More than 200 of these unarmed citizens were massacred by the Shah's police. A period of national mourning for the dead was declared by religious leaders. In Iran's major cities, the bazaars were shut down, and all activities were halted.

On February 18 a demonstration was held in Tabriz, second-largest city in Iran, to commemorate the occasion of the 40th day of national mourning, declared orally by religious leaders both inside and outside of Iran. Although the government-owned Iranian press reported a minor disturbance with few casualties, confirmed reports from Iran indicate that the Shah's police opened fire on the angry but unarmed crowd, killing more than 400 and wounding several hundred others. More than 1000 have been arrested on suspicion of anti-government activities.

Although, the Iranian press reported the demonstrators to be Islamic-Marxist, there is no such movement in Iran. The demonstrators were Muslim and were led by religious leaders.

THE IRANIAN PEOPLE DO NOT SUPPORT THE REPRESSIVE REGIME OF THE SHAH.

The regime of the Shah of Iran is notorious for its abuse of human rights:

....There is no freedom of opinion, speech or association in Iran. Anyone accused of even speaking against the regime can be imprisoned. Amnesty International quotes a figure of 100,000 political prisoners in Iranian prisons.

....Physical and mental torture. is systematically practiced against political prisoners. Trials are held in secret in an atmosphere of terror, in military courts. A sentence of life imprisonment may be given for simply reading a forbidden book.

....The government is a total and absolute dictatorship, maintained by the presence of an infamous secret police force, SAVAK.

....Bribery, nepotism, and every sort of corruption runs rampant in government circles, while the people of Iran suffer. Extreme poverty is the rule, not the exception, in a country which has an illiteracy level of 65 per cent, in which inflation is extraordinarily high, which cannot even supply water and electricity regularly to its city-dwellers, but which is purchasing sophisticated weaponry at an alarming rate, and which supplies, for example, the sister of Shah with a five billion dollar per year gambling habit.

THE UNITED STATES CLAIMS TO STAND FOR THE HUMAN RIGHTS OF LIFE AND FREE PURSUIT OF HAPPINESS FOR ALL MEN. THE UNITED STATES CLAIMS TO BE THE PROPONENT OF DEMOCRACY IN THE WORLD. HOW, THEN, CAN SHE CONTINUE TO SUPPORT A REGIME THAT IS THE ANTITHISES OF EVERYTHING FOR WHICH SHE STANDS???

CITIZENS OF THE UNITED STATES:

DEMAND A HUMAN RIGHTS POLICY THAT IS NOT QUALIFIED. CONDEMN THE REPRESSIVE REGIME OF THE SHAH. SUPPORT THE STRUGGLE OF THE IRANIAN PEOPLE FOR FREEDOM.

INDEPENDENT INVESTIGATION OF TRUTH

In the last issue of Nummo News, Monday, March 6, I raised the question of affirmative action. Former University of Massachusetts Provost, Paul Puryear, was attempting to enforce affirmative action regulations at this university, which has recently been cited by the federal government for negligence in this area. In light of this situation, I made a statement about why Puryear was released from his position as Provost.

Approximately 4:30 p.m., Monday, March 6, I received a phone call from the chancellor's office. James Deshields, an assistant of Chancellor Bromery, called me about the article that I wrote referring to the Chancellor. The conversation was brief and to the point. Deshields told me that I might be protected under the First Amendment, but my "ass" was not protected under the First Amendment. He also asked me if Puryear used the words "house Nigger" or if they were mine. I told him that Puryear used the term "Uncle Tom", and I term that type of person house Nigger. A house Nigger will do anything to elevate himself at the expense of other oppressed people. I accused Bromery of that type of behavior.

Deshields mentioned that house niggers have aided me personally while attending this university, and I disagreed. Deshields then asked me to check with John Bracey, Chairperson of the Afro-American Department at UMass, to see what he had to say. I spoke with Bracey on Tuesday, March 2, and he did not contradict Puryear's statement to me.

Former Provost Puryear was also attacked by sincere people, based on misinformation, who did not understand the reason why the Deans of this university called Puryear autocratic. Puryear was attempting to make the Deans follow affirmative action guidelines established by the federal government. The issue here is if the chief administrators of this university will deal with affirmative action. Let it also be known that oppressed people need consistent leadership.

I am aware that Puryear had contradictions; however, if concerned people take the time to investigate what actually happened with Puryear and the Deans, they will see how they were used by the Deans. For example, Puryear set aside over $100,000 that would ordinarily be used by the Deans for graduate assistantships. Puryear forced the Deans to follow affirmative action guidelines for its distribution, or they would not receive the money for their respective departments. As a result, the Deans accused Puryear of using an autocratic leadership style and asked for his resignation. I would appreciate people responding to the facts, and not whether they like Bromery, Puryear or my style of writing.

LACK OF CLARITY WITHIN AN ISSUE

Last week Kenneth S. Shain, Fine Arts Editor of the Collegian, said in an article that he wrote, that I was a leaky valve. My response to Mr. Kenneth Shain and other people who feel like him is the next time one criticizes me, stick to the issue that I was addressing. Mr. Shain proved his ignorance and racist arrogance by accusing me of being racist; no person of color, colonized in the U.S. is in a position to be racist. Only white males like himself can be racist to people of color, who are the victims of oppression. If I care to call anyone a house nigger in black and white it is my prerogative. I did not focus on Chancellor Bromery being a house nigger in my article, but stated that the issue was inadequate Affirmative Action and the loss of Federal dollars to the university because of this blunder. For the record, I did not support the attempted cutbacks of the Asian Studies program on campus which Puryear was a part of.

I think in the future, when a white individual decides to criticize people of color, make sure that you are aware of your own internal racism which every concerned white on this campus has by being a U.S. citizen. I do not condone ignorance or deception either. I hope that Mr. Shain responds in black and white to this article.

I would like to remind Mr. Shain and others that I did not invent the phrase house nigger, but Malcolm X, who used this word quite effectually when necessary. I felt last week that a chief administrator was acting out the above kind of behavior.

Getting back to the issue that was raised last week. The term house nigger would have never been used had Bromery not fired Puryear over intersession when no students were around to find out the facts. I simply do not agree to the process of Puryear's termination. I would like a statement in black and white about this issue from the Chancellor's office.

There will be a meeting of United People on Wed. at 7 p.m. in the lounge of Butterfield House. The concept of United People will be explained in detail along with the purpose of the organization. Briefly, the purpose of United People is to coordinate efforts of groups of people who are concerned about the Bakke Decision, the rise of the Nazi party, struggling against Affirmative Action cutbacks, discrimination because of sex, race, class and other overt prejudices that we all have. It is time we all find out the facts on this campus, and the rest of the country for positive action.

Three Wounded at At Sobukwe Funeral

GRAAFF-REINET, South Africa — Shooting broke out here yesterday during a demonstration by black youngsters at an open-air funeral for national leader Robert Sobukwe.

Asked why the demonstrators had forced Buthelezi to leave, one black youngster said: "It's because he talks to (Prime Minister John) Vorster."

After the melee and the shooting, the ceremonies carried on without incident. Later in the day the body of Sobukwe, former president of the Pan-Africanist Congress, was taken to a cemetery for nonwhites, to be buried near his mother and one of his brothers.

Police said three young blacks with bullet wounds — one age 13, the two others age 18 — were taken to a hospital.

The gunfire erupted as demonstrators forced Chief Gatsha Buthelezi, chief minister of the Kwazulu black homeland, to leave the dusty sports field where part of the funeral ceremonies took place.

Screaming youngsters who surrounded Buthelezi scattered as the shooting broke out. Brigadier A.A. Coetzee, police chief in South West Cape Province, said no shots were fired by police and that the matter is under investigation.

Militant blacks argue that South Africa's white government is creating puppet states by giving self-rule to Kwazulu and other black homelands.

Buthelezi had been one of the last to arrive on a platform for the leading mourners of Sobukwe, a hero to millions of South African blacks, who died of cancer last month at the age of 53.

Black Womens Workshop

By WILMA TYNES
Nummo News Staff

Barbara Jean Love, professor of Urban Education, held a Black woman's workshop last Wednesday at the Malcolm X Cultural Center in Southwest.

The main topic of discussion was the Black family and the woman's role. We deliberated the methods used in bring up Black youth in America today as opposed to the methods used in the past, concluding with the resolution that Black parents have become so individualized that the childs development, as far as discipline is concerned, is lost. We determined that the need of the Protestant-Baptist Church was not only used for religious purposes, but to also create a community, and as a way to handle and release distress. Established were ten solutions on how to improve communications between the brothers and sisters in the area.

After her lecture-discussion, questions were raised pertaining to the Black woman, family, and community. One of the questions thrown out for discussion was "Why isn't there any sense of community between Black woman?" What the question means is simply why is there no trust, why is it that a sister finds she knows other sisters on campus, or in the community, but can't trust her for fear that the next day her business would be all over campus, or where ever. That is a question to be further discussed. The workshop, however, was very interesting. Two familiar faces attending were CCEBS Associate Director, Carol Carter-Brooks, and Academic Advisor, Carole Watkins, both participating actively.

Leroy Jones Speaks At Smith College

Marxist-Leninist Thinker

By W. J. WHEELER
Nummo News Staff

Mr. Leroy Jones is a member of the Black Artists Liberation Movement. This movement is directed towards Cultural Revolution through scientific thinking. Mr. Jones spoke about the movement and the history of black struggles in America at Smith College, Fri., Mar. 10, 1978 in Grayham Hall at 8:00 p.m.

Mr. Jones pointed out that the panthers made a big mistake by arming themselves and not realizing that they had become targets. Mr. Jones lashed Stokley Carmichael, Rap Brown, Huey Newton, and others because as he put it "Revolutionaries of the sixties did not fully realise the nature of oppression in America". He stated that liberation movements of the sixties were sectarian.

Mr. Jones stated that America is becoming more facist everyday. He also believes that America and the Soviet Union are constantly at odds all over the globe to determine what system will rule the world; Communism or Facism, Facism or Socialism?

Mr. Jones stated that authors Paul Lawrence Dunbar, Phyllis Wheatley, Richard Wright, and others coped out to the struggles of black people and either submitted to the ruling class or chose not to struggle at all.

Mr. Jones stated that young people who graduate from colleges and universities nation wide must decide what side they'll choose to be on. Whether they choose to capituate or struggle and work for the people.

Mr. Jones stated that Paul Robinson and D.r. W.E.B. Dubois were men who chose not to capituate but to continue to follow their line no matter what the costs.

Mr. Jones stated that the panthers and the Student Non-Violent coordinating Committee were too sloganized. S.N.C.C. used Black Power as it's collective idiology. The Panthers used Black Nationalism and Hate Whitney. These slogans while correct lines were as far as the two movement went to establish national independence for black people.

The correct line said Mr. Jones for the establishment of a socialist state is anti-establishment, anti-bourgeoisie values and anti-capitalism. He stated that this line can be institutionalized through Marxist-Lenninist idiology and the Black Artists Liberation Movement.

While in the Amherst, Ma. area Taj Mahal performed at local clubs and many of his fans still remember him.

N.N.: What are your plans for the future?

T.M.: I plan to wait and see what comes up. If something promising comes along such as a series for television I would be interested in doing somthing of substance, not the type of programs they are doing now.

N.N.: How would you classify your music?

T.M.: My music is music for the 21st century and beyond. I play towards tomorrow. What I do now I've wanted to do since I was very young.

N.N.: Good luck in the future Taj Mahal.

T.M.: Thank you very much I'll continue to play music so long as I can.

Hijacker surrenders peacefully

DENVER [UPI] — An airline hijacking that started in the sky above San Francisco with a threat to blow up a plane carrying 76 people ended peacefully on the ground in Denver yesterday when the hijacker surrendered.

A man the FBI identified as Clay Thomas, a 30-year-old resident of San Jose, Calif., took over the United Airline 727 shortly after it lifted off from San Francisco.

Officials said Thomas, claiming he was dying of threat cancer, stepped into the cockpit with a red and white vinyl flight bag and told the pilot he would detonate a bomb unless the plane was flown to Cuba. He later changed his mind and wanted to be taken to Memphis, Tenn.

"Shortly after takeoff a man carrying a flight bag which he said contained a bomb came into the cockpit," the FAA said. "The plane diverted to Oakland, where the hijacker let 68 passengers and four flight attendants off.

"The hijacker announced he had cancer and said, 'This was the only way out.' He said he wanted the plane refueled and wanted to go to Memphis."

The plane landed at Stapleton International Airport in Denver for another refueling and it was there that Thomas began negotiations with the FBI.

"We were negotiating about refueling the plane and unloading some of the luggage when all of a sudden the crew was able to leave the plane," said Ted Rosack, special agent-in-charge of the Denver FBI office.

The crew came out of the plane through an escape hatch in the belly and jumped to the ground. One of the crewmen was injured in the jump.

Rosack said agents found nothing inside the bag Thomas carried except a book, newspaper, "some other things" and a lollipop.

The jet landed in Denver at 6:48 p.m. EST and the FBI agreed during negotiations to allow refueling. At one point, the hijacker yelled at agents through the aircraft's radio: "For Christ sake, what are you trying to do, kill these people?"

Thomas then apparently changed his mind again about his destination, telling the FBI: "Look, if you guys are so hot to bust me and you want my bomb and you want me to give up all this —, you can just wait until I get of Cuba, okay?"

During the negotiations, Arnold Grout, 54, the pilot, told agents: "The longer you delay it the more excited Clay Thomas gets. As long as we're in the air everything is cool. When we get on the ground things get kind of excited."

Agents talked to him about one hour before the crewmen crawled through the escape hatch.

"We did not know the crew was going to escape but we were out in that area," Rosack said. "We had no advance notice of the escape."

The hijacker, dressed in a white shirt and trousers, threw his flight bag out of the plane and then walked calmly down the stairway to be arrested.

Begin spouts hatred for PLO

TEL AVIV, Israel [AP] — Prime Minister Menachem Begin vowed Monday "to cut off the arm" of the Palestinian guerrilla organization responsible for the weekend massacre on Israel's coastal highway. Mourners at victims' funerals called for revenge.

In southern Lebanon, travelers said villagers fearing Israeli retaliatory raids left their homes and trekked north, in a driving rain, away from the Israeli border. Israeli officials say the 11 terrorists who carried out the killings of sightseers and passersby on the Tel Aviv-Haifa road came from Lebanon by the sea.

Some confusion remainnd over the number of dead. Begin used the number 28 in a speech to Parliament. Police Commissioner Haim Tabori said 32 Israelis had died, and an army spokesman said 36 were slain, plus nine terrorists who died in the final gunfight over a hijacked tour bus.

Thousands watched and wept Monday as eight of the victims were buried at Ashdod, Haifa, Tel Aviv and Tiberias. At the funeral of Yaaqov Paz, a 22-year-old soldier killed while on leave, one of Paz's friends declared: "Someone will have to pay."

In a eulogy to Paz, Parliament member Haim Corfu said: "This spilling of blood will not be forgiven." At the funeral of 6-year-old Yoav Mishkal, Deputy Industry Minister Yitzhak Peretz declared: "The blood of Israel's children will not be left unavenged."

Begin told Parliament that the Palestine Liberation Organization, whose Al Fatah guerrillas said they had made the attack, was "the most despicable organization... in human annals outside of the Nazis," and that the PLO "doesn't attack any man or any place where there are soldiers, but has resolved to harm, kill and wound civilians only."

"We will cut off the arm of evil," Begin promised. "We shall in no way and in no circumstances agree that this hand be raised over a Jewish child or a Jewish woman."

In Washington, the White House announced Monday that Begin would come to the United States on March 20 for meetings the next two days with President Carter. Begin's arrival had been set for Sunday but was postponed because of the terror raid. The other major figure in the Middle East peace process, Egyptian President Anwar Sadat, was outside of Cairo and has made no comment on the raid.

In Lebanon, Foreign Minister Fuad Butros said his country "was not involved in any way" in the terror attack.

Terrorists hit Holland; seize many hostages

ASSEN, Netherlands [AP] — South Moluccan militants, a fanatical group that has terrorized Holland on and off for a decade, struck again yesterday seizing a government building and 50 to 60 hostages in a shooting attack that left at least six persons wounded, authorities said.

The four to six gunmen were demanding freedom for comrades in Dutch jails and a plane to fly all of them, along with hostages, out of the country, government officials said.

Police in armored cars quickly surrounded the modern-style office block in this northern Dutch city as the terrorists, said to be armed with pistols and at least one machine gun, fired bursts of bullets from upper-floor windows.

Officials said they feared that one victim lying out of reach in front of the building might be dead.

About 200 employees in the building, headquarters of the Drente provincial government, managed to escape through windows, some shimmying down firehoses, after the Moluccans stormed in. But some were gunned down from behind as they fled.

One of the wounded was a schoolboy shot as he walked down a street, officials said.

Militants among the South Moluccan immigrant community in Holland have made repeated terror strikes in recent years to dramatize their demands for Dutch help in winning independence from Indonesia for their Asian island homeland. The Moluccas and the rest of Indonesia are a former Dutch colony.

The area around Assen, 112 miles northeast of Amsterdam, has been a focus of the Moluccan terror campaign, most recently last spring when gunmen seized hostages in a train and schoolhouse and held out for 20 days before military assaults ended the sieges. Six terrorists and two hostages died.

Police said yesterdays raid began at about 10 a.m. as the Drente provincial council was about to meet in the building. There were reports at least two provincial legislators were among the hostages.

One Moluccan rode up in a taxi and dashed out into the main entrance, pulling out a concealed machine gun and opening fire, police said. The other gunmen ran in behind him.

At the Justice Ministry in the Dutch capital of the Hague, a spokesman said a letter had been received demanding the release of imprisoned Moluccans and a plane to fly the gunmen, the freed convicts and hostages out of the country.

The spokesman said 21 Moluccans are imprisoned for previous attacks, including seven for the 1977 raids.

The government refused to give in to similar demands last year, insisting that the terrorists first release all hostages.

SGA presidential candidates

Russell Swan

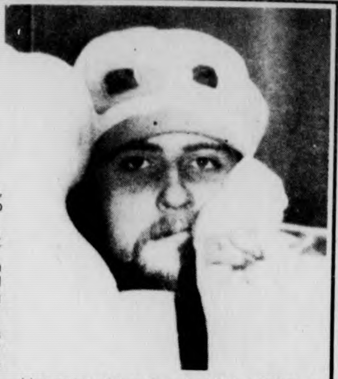
By JIM KASNER
Collegian Staff



Russ Swan
Background: Age: 19; Class: Sophomore, Residence: Pierpont; Past Positions: No positions held in SGA.

What are your impressions of the SGA as it operates now?

"The SGA is completely ineffective and a total waste of time and should be gotten rid of. (The SGA) seems convinced that playing (power) games has some significance."

Do you think students should have a larger voice in decisions on campus? And, if so, then how should this be accomplished?

It's definitely time to take a larger role and have more rights. Need to get the students together, united in mass action. The SGA should be turned into a resource center not be a policy making body. Students are getting shafted by the administration. We have almost no rights. The Student Organizing Project and the SGA are setting up a bureaucracy.

How would you assess the bargaining positions on each side of the faculty-administration bargaining sessions?

Either way students will get shafted. It doesn't really make much difference because neither side is looking out for students interests. Student representation is very important.

What do you feel is the best solution to the upcoming concert in the spring?

"The whole thing is kind of fucked. It's an example of how anything involved in the SGA gets fucked up. The SGA manages to blow every thing they do. With $37,000 to spend on a concert you can throw a really good concert. It's an example of waste and mismanagement in student government. My own solution — which I will not reveal now — I will reveal soon."

How do you feel the Student Senate bus service should be funded?

"I don't want to see a fee added to the bill. We should have a monorail from Southwest to the Campus Center for free.

How should the situation in Pierpont be resolved?

I don't have any solutions right now. Pierpont should definitely go student run. Matlack is completely confused on this issue. We need direct action; sit-ins, picketing, and there are other possibilities. Pierpont is a very unique dorm on this campus.

Property damage is always high in freshman and sophomore dorms. Matlack's contention is that Pierpont is almost inhuman living conditions. But if that's the case how come we don't want to leave."

Steve Ross

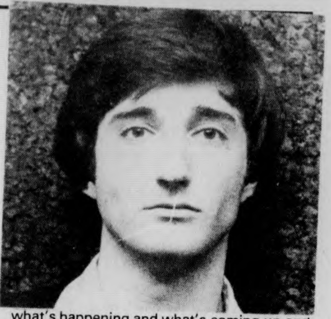
By ROBERT FALETRA
Collegian Staff



Steve Ross is a 20 year old junior running for Student Government Association President. He is majoring in Urban Regional Management. He lives in Patterson house and is from Needham Mass.

Ross has been active in house government and was an officer at large in RSO group resources. He has been a student senator for over a year and is a member of the Student Senate Government Affairs Committee and Faculty Senate Space and Calendar Committee.

In a recent Collegian interview he had these answers to student problems.

What are your impressions of the SGA as it operates now?

A: "It can be run more effectively and efficiently. There has to be more interaction between the president's office and students. The president's office should be directly responsible to the students as well as the senate. In order for the students to tell the president how to represent them, the students must be aware of what's going on."

"There has to be an opening of the president's office to tell the students what's going on and what's coming up. I am running on a platform that stresses a new direction for student government."

Do you think students should have a larger voice in decisions on campus? And, if so, then how should this be accomplished?

A: "Presently there are two ways for students to be heard. One way is through their senator. The other way is through the president. The senate should be sufficient for the majority of issues. If the senators went back to their constituencies and told them what's happening and what's coming up and then asked them how they should vote, it would be sufficient. The fact is this often does not happen."

How would you assess the bargaining positions on each side of the faculty-administration bargaining sessions?

A: "The thing they both have to keep in mind is they're here to serve the students and to provide a quality education. The student teacher ratio is very high here at UMass and if the teachers hold less class hours then the students will be hurt."

"The pay rate of the faculty has to be kept in check with other institutions of high education. A lot of faculty are leaving here simply because they can get more money elsewhere. In order to maintain the quality education that was being achieved here before the Dukakis administration's level funding, the professors have to be paid well."

What do you feel is the best solution to the upcoming concert in the spring?

A: "The best solution would be to have a black american music festival either this semester or next semester and to have a free spring concert. The senate has become committed to a black american music festival through a series of votes and it is tranditionally committed to a spring conert. People have to realize that one was never supposed to replace the other, but it became evident that there was not enough funds for both."

How do you feel the Student Senate bus service should be funded?

A: "It should be a joint effort between students, administration and faculty. The problem with the proposed plan to increase parking fees is the students would be paying twice.

How should the situation in Pierpont be resolved?

A: "It's clear that Pierpont is a unique community. More than anything it is wrong and against the students rights to evict them. The student government should act as a mediator and get the two parties together to try and work out a solution. You can't throw them out, it's their right to live whete they want."

Martin B. Quinlan, 26, was hit by a UMass bus yesterday morning on Massachusetts Avenue by the Hagis Mall, according to UMass police.

Quinlan was admitted to the UMass infirmary, where his condition was described as "not serious" by Diane Smith of the University Health Services.

The student a resident of Peabody, Mass. was struck by a UMass bus driven by William P. Jenkins, at 8:45 as Quinlan was getting out of his car, the spokesman said.

$3000 worth of jewelry and pewter was stolen from Baker-Winn Jewelers yesterday afternoon.

The jewelry and pewter were recovered shortly after the burglary occurred, when Wilfredo E. Sanchez and Robert Paolilli, both 17, were arrested for the burglary.

The two youths are being arraigned today in Hampshire District County Court.

Officer Jeffrey Roy answered the alarm and was aided by other Amherst police in apprehending the two who had ran from the store across town.

The two were arrested and charged on three counts: Breaking and entering in the daytime with intent to commit a felony, larceny over $100, and possession of burglary tools. One of the youths arrested was in possession of a knife, a police spokesman said.

Chief Maia commended the citizens of Amherst, commenting that the recovery was made possible, in part, by citizens who pointed out the perpetrators to the police.

David J. Ferriter of Pleasant Street, Northampton, was arrested for possession of a Class D Substance (L.S.D.) and possession of a Class C Substance (Marijuana), Saturday, UMass police said.

Ferriter, 21, was arrested in Prince House, however, he is not a UMass student, the police said.

No frisk of Geil's fans

A spokesman for the Union Program Council said yesterday that patrons of this Wednesday's J. Geils concert will not be searched for illegal smoking matter.

Also patrons will not be physically frisked as the council announced Monday. Those attending the concert will be asked to open bags, coats or rolled up garments at the door in order to expose any cans or bottles.

According to the Council, refusal to do this constitutes a breaking of the contract with the Fine Arts Center and the patron will be asked to leave. Refunds will be available in these cases.

Yesterday's Collegian had reported that the Council would be physically frisking patrons and looking for drugs. This drew a negative reaction by some according to a Council spokesman.

Voter drive stalled

The Amherst Board of Registrars yesterday decided to postpone action on a proposal to deputize volunteers to register voters for town elections.

Board member Vince O'Connor proposed that volunteers be allowed to conduct registration both at tables in public places and by door-to-door inquiry. This, he emphasized, would greatly help the problem of low registration among students and tenants.

Other members of the Board raised questions concerning the legality of going door-to-door and the liability of the town if a volunteer was injured.

State regulations were consulted but did not specify if door-to-door registration was allowed nor if a single deputy registrar or one from each major political party would be required. The proposal was referred to the town's legal counsel for an opinion.

Peterson—'well worth the wait'

Concert review

By DAVE GRAM
Collegian Staff

Oscar Peterson arrived in Amherst a day late, but his performance last night in the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall was definitely worth the wait.

According to Fine Arts Center spokesman David Letters, Peterson performed in Sydney, Australia Thursday night. He missed his connecting flight from Los Angeles on Saturday and was unable to make his originally scheduled engagement here Sunday night.

But by the time the jazz virtuoso sat down at the piano last night, he was showing no signs of jet lag.

The audience, 1800 strong, greeted Peterson's powerful and sensitive virtuosity with a succession of standing ovations, growing in intensity until the master brought the house down with his encore, Tenderly.

Peterson opened the program with a schizophrenic but well balanced rendition of "Body and Soul", beginning the piece with a series of cadenzas, moving into a walking blues, and closing with the cadenzas again.

He followed that old standard with a composition of his own, "Mirage" an uptempo piece with a heavy ragtime influence and strong melodic use of the left hand.

Peterson adhered closely to that style throughout the concert, drawing from the rhythmic traditions of New Orleans and the harmonic traditions of Western Europe. But that doesn't begin to describe the way in which he presented this melting pot of musical influences to his audience.

Peterson has been described by respected British jazz critic Benny Green ".... as one of the greatest soloists of all time, a player whose technique never obscures the lucidity of his thoughts or the wonderful buoyancy of his execution."

What most impressed this critics about Peterson's piano technique was his ability to fly in and out of the extreme ranges of the instrument and still maintain a solid melodic focus.

One of the best received pieces on the program was Peterson's "Tribute to Duke Ellington", featuring an up-tempo waltz rendering of the Ellington classic "Take the A Train", and ragtime-influenced versions of "Satin Doll" and "Caravan".

Born in Montreal on August 12, 1925, Peterson began studying the piano at the age of seven. In an interview after the concert, he said his decision to make jazz his musical medium was influenced by his older brother, who also played piano.

He said his decision to concentrate on jazz was also influenced by the fact that his parents "concurred with my desires."

Among the honors bestowed upon Peterson during his career are the Down Beat Award for best jazz pianist, which he has won for twelve consecutive years, the Playboy Award and the Grammy Award in 1975.

Peterson said the beauty of jazz is that it allows the musician the opportunity to partake in "momentary invention". Peterson is one jazz musician who exploits that opportunity to the fullest.

Amherst

By STEVE ROSENBERG
Collegian Staff

The Amherst Committee on Voter Registration and Elections called for some changes in nomination procedures for town elections at last night's Selectmen's meeting.

The Committee recommended that candidates who file for town wide offices other than the Moderator, School Board, or Board of Selectmen be required to receive 25 to 50 signatures for nomination.

Moderator, School Board, and Selectmen candidates would be required to be nominated by petition of 50 to 100 signatures. The Committee recommended there should be no preliminary elections held for these offices.

The Committee also recommended a runoff election for the three town offices if any candidate fails to receive 40 per cent of the vote.

The selectmen said they would look into the legality of the Committee's proposals.

The Selectmen also heard from an Amherst resident, Mrs. Ellen Davis who, in an emotional speech, complained that many people, like herself, are being forced to leave Amherst "because we do not have the material wealth necessary to live here." She placed the blame on high taxes, inflated rent, and excessive utility costs.

In another action, The Board of Selectmen received the resignation of James Saudade, the Housing Specialist of Amherst. Saudade will now move to Greenfield where he will head the Housing Rehabilitation program.

Belchertown

By RICHARD E. BARRELL

BELCHERTOWN — Selectmen here announced last night that they will seek a CETA employee for the historical commission.

Responding to a letter from the Historical Commission, the board endorsed the request that an employee be sought to help the commission complete a survey of the town's historical and architectural assets.

The job also calls for the new employee to aid the Commission in developing "preservation plans," and cataloging historical data to make it easily accessible to the serious student of history.

Selectmen also announced plans to compare two types of bucket loaders before a final decision is made on the purchase by the Town.

Selectman Kenneth H. Snow said that a Caterpillar and a Huff loader will be compared during a two or three day trial at moving gravel to be used in repairs along Bay Road.

In other business, the board announced plans for a meeting to discuss the use of land at Belchertown State School.

The meeting to be held at 10 a.m. Saturday, March 18, will bring together parties interested in the land located along Rt. 21.

In addition to officials from the State School, representatives of Town and State government will be at the meeting along with members of a group called Women in Agriculture.

The Board also received notice from the Secretary of State that a local group has announced plans to incorporate a new school in Belchertown.

To be called "The School for All Seasons" the school will provide a forum for elder citizens to teach skills to local residents.

The school is to be located on Federal Street and will be run by Mr. Douglas Warren.

Central Area

By DEBBIE WALLACE
Collegian Staff

Three SGA presidential candidates wooed supporters last night at the Central Area Council meeting.

Jay Flynn, former Central Area activities coordinator, said, "Area governments mean more to students than the Student Senate does and because of this an increase in are government funding is necessary. I've seen the senate spend $25,000 in one night, which was wasted."

The big problem, Flynn said, is that students don't know what is going on. "Making sure that dorm senators are more accountable to the students could remedy this. The president's role is to get people together to do the work, and I feel I can do this," Flynn said.

Another concern of Flynn's is the Student Organizing Project.

"SOP has wasted more than any other organization, about $250,000. I would abolish SOP," Flynn said.

David Barenberg of the Barenberg-Birmingham candidacy discussed the changes he thinks the senate needs to go through. Barenberg said "the senate doesn't deal with academics and students cannot presently get involved with issues that are personally affecting them."

Financial aid increase is a major concern with Barenberg who is presently talking with state legislators to increase the amount of financial aid allotted to state institutions.

"By law the maximum amount given to state colleges is only 25 per cent. It doesn't take much for things to change. It does take people getting together, talking, and having the resources to back it up. A small group can make changes possible, Barenberg said.

Herb Tyson of the Gordon-Tyson team said, "It is important to increase the impact SGA can have on the student's ordinary life. By forming academic councils, the senate should become involved in day by day issues to increase student participation. The senate isn't dealing with issues students are concerned with. Issues like the $20 meal tax increase and the Campus Center renovations are issues which are relevant and need to be discussed."

In its only other business, the council unanimously voted to give an additonal $200 to the Central Orchard Hill spring concert.

Superb talent makes 'Major Barbara'

Theatre review

By E. PATRICK McQUAID

Major Barbara, by George Bernard Shaw; directed by Jim Cavanaugh; at the Mt. Holyoke College Laboratory Theatre, March 14, 15 and 16; box office 1-538-2406.

Attending commencements, funerals, and speeches in general was never a popular pastime of this critic and thus Shaw has never been my favorite playwright. So swallowing my prejudices, I took my seat at the Mt. Holyoke Laboratory Theatre determined to take an objective look at their production of Major Barbara.

I was soon won over by a superbly talented cast under the direction of Jim Cavanaugh. This drawing room, "morality play," is set in Edwardian England when a slowly passing Victorian era was reluctantly giving way to more carefree times.

The situation is clearly stated in the confrontation between Barbara Undershaft, a major in the Salvation Army, played with effervescence by Jennifer O. Campbell, and dear old dad, Europe's richest munitions manufacturer; a role that Walter Boughton plays all-too-well.

The irony is that the younger generation is clinging to old notions while Undershaft senior claims he is Dionysus incarnate, a living celebration. We are easily taken in by his smooth talk and so is Barbara who finally sheds her uniform to inherit the family fortune.

Adolphus Cusins, played as convincingly as possible by Jeff Avick, gladly dismisses his life as a poet and professor of ancient Greek for the life of a multi-millionnaire when he opts to accept the Undershaft fortune and marry Barbara.

The audience especially appreciated the part of Lady Britmart, Barbara's mother and Undershaft's estranged wife. Laura Barriere captured the role of the meddling upper class mother exceedingly well.

Paul Wildman and Bradford Whiteman received standing ovations for their portrayals of two down-and-outs who square off against each other at the Salvation Army headquarters.

Mark Variades: Class: Sophomore Major: Business Past Positions: Senator Residence: Van Meter North

Platform: Make student government responsive to student needs through true representation by delaying votes in Senate for one week to allow Senators to talk with constituents use other methods for better representation. Reevaluate and revise Student Organizing Project; terminate Project as last resort. Allow representation in Senate by residence not interest groups and any other group (Third World). Suggestion Box outside Dining Commons. More student input on decisions, positions develop according to student interests.

SGA Power: Develop power with concerned leaders who work hard. Will back words with actions.

Spring Concert: Oppose Black American Music Festival since students wanted traditional Spring Concert. Favor traditional Spring Concert — all types of music. Have Black American Music Festival at later date.

UMass after one year in office; changes coming from student suggestions; less irresponsible spending, no structure change, leadership change.

NON-ENDORSEMENTS: Amherst Towing, Richard Nixon, Michael Dukakis.

PLATFORM: Eliminate administration, replace it with professionals; remaining positions filed with student interns from related academic departments; Whitmore will become a condominium; Pierpont residents will be put in Whitmore; Pierpont will be a bastille for the administrators.

Savings from not having an Administration will mean more athletic scholarships; the hope is to make the Athletic Department not only self supportive but partially supportive of the University. The ultimate goal is to place as many UMass students in 1980 Olympics as possible. The Senate will be asked to resign, and replaced with benevolent dictatorship; Three concerts will be held in the spring; Black American Music Festival concert to be decided by the students and the Bess-Arabian concert will be held for the oppressed Bess-Arabians.

SGA POWER

No power — "that's why we're getting rid of it."

SPRING CONCERT

Not satisfied — we want three

UMASS, (one year later if elected)

No administration. Whitmore a condominium and Pierpont a bastille; more athletic scholarships; no senate Benevolent dictatorship!

Donald Bishop

Background — Age: 20, Major: undeclared, Hometown: Marlboro, Mass. Residence: Washington dorm, Positions: Presently student senator and member of Government Affairs Committee, formerly Government Affairs Chairperson, member of Government Affairs Committee and member of Board of Governors.

Platform issues — Information dissemination by holding all motions in senate for one week for student reaction through senator; Increased accountability of senators by recall of inefficient senators through House Council; Representation of students through Presidents Council; Support of Mass State Student Association (MSSA), a student lobbying force in legislature.
Endorsements — Endorsed by Washington lower dorm council.
SGA Power:

The student government has the power to implement real change at UMass if the students are together. The student government is all students and along with the MSSA we can control education.
Black American Music Festival:

Bishop does not support senate decision fully. Reason: We still don't have a Spring Concert but we do have a free concert.
Changes foreseen if elected:

Students made aware of issues through information dissemination. Increased accountability of senators, presidents council representing students, MSSA a viable force in the legislature, use of referendum to get student voice.

Jay Flynn

By JON KLEIN
Collegian Staff

Jay Flynn
Background: Age: 21 Major: Political Science Hometown: Worcester Class: 1980 Past Positions: Senator Co chair of Governmental Affairs Committee; Advocate on Attorney General's staff Board Central Activities Board; Residence South Amherst Endorsements; none
Platform:

Increase communication with Information Telephone for complaints activities and other information. Encourage senators to work on dormitory newsletters. Support student run coop housing. Supports lease. Terminate Student Organizing Project. Have students recognized by legislature as collective bargaining agent through statewide student effort. Abolish Third World caucus.
SGA Power

Students can get power by getting information out to students, using petitions writing legislators, "ott administrate administrators" by getting facts, going to administrators.
Spring Concert

Black American Music Festival would be best for the Fine Arts Center Cage or a fall event. Spring Concert should not be limited to Black performers; should be best talent. Supported two concerts once situation was still unresolved by this semester.
UMass one year later if elected

There will be increase communication, more confidence in the SGA, more confidence in ability to change campus. Less dollar waste of student money. More student say in how university is run. Well on way to collective bargaining.

Green & Lawrence

By JACK GALLAGHER

Backround: Greene, Howard, Age: 20, Major: Urban Planning, Home town: Needham, Mass., Experience: president of Patterson House, treasurer of Resources, Judaica, and former president of Resources Judaica, Year of graduation: 1979, Residence: Patterson House.

Lawrence Paul, Age: 22, Major: Economics, Home town: Fairfax, Va., Experience: SGA senator, Year of graduation: 1979, Residence: Patterson House.

Endorsements: none

Platform issues: Heightening the awareness of students to the SGA. Making them more concerned with their role in student government.

SGA Power

"At this time, no. There are too many people concerned with own egos in the SGA. When we're elected we plan to heighten student awareness knowing that change will come when thousands of people care instead of just a handful."

Spring Concert

Yes and no. We like the idea of a concert but it's been handled badly. The concert is wrapped in politics. In our opinion, there's no excuse why this University shouldn't attract national talent."

One year later if elected

"We will heighten student awareness to such an extent that any issues involving the students will be widely known and opinions from all groups will have a place to be voiced and heard. Through organizations such as a more representative senate the individual will have a direct line to the people who run the government."

Miners ignore Taft-Hartley; continue strike

[AP] - All but a few tf the nation's 160,000 striking coal miners ignored a federal back-to-work order yesterday, and the handful who returned to the mines had virtually no effect on coal production.

In Pennsylvania, hundreds of club-carrying pickets took to a road in a 150-car caravan to shut down non-union mines. But most other areas were quiet, with union mines remaining idle even in the absence of pickets.

It was the first real test of whether the United Mine Workers rank and file will obey a Taft-Hartley court order obtained last Thursday by President Carter.

But with the order still not in full effect in some areas, a Justice Department spokesman in Washington said thereu y action to force compliance. Spokesman Mark Sheehan said the administration expects miners to gradually return to work this week.

Meanwhile, bargainers for the union and coal companies took a pause in negotiations in Washington. They reported some progress over the weekend, but said they were not on the verge of a settlement. Each side used the day to work on its own positions on specific issues.

Since the strike began Dec. 6, rebellious union officers and rank and file members had already scuttled two tentative settlements on grounds that they eroded union medical benefits, did not equalize pension benefits among old and younger retired miners, and allowed companies to discipline those who lead wildcat strikes.

The strike, which was in its 98th day yesterday, has cut national coal production in half, forced power companies in much of the Midwest and midAtlantic regions to ask for or order power conservation, and thus led to tens of thousands of layoffs.

Last Thursday, a federal judge granted the Carter administration a temporary backtowork order under the TaftHartley Law, and by yesterday the Justice Department said the necessary papers had been served on virtually all UMW locals in the country.

Over the weekend, and on Monday, local union leaders were performing their legal duty to pass the word on to members, and to have mines inspected by union safety committees — a step needed for reopening.

But while union leaders and locals can be penalized for failure to comply, there is no mechanism for forcing individual miners back to work. And at most mines that reopened yesterday, no miners showed up.

Even when miners did report, there were usually too few to form maintenance or mining crews, and the companies sent them home.

One of the few mines where work was done was in Keystone, W.Va., where 30 members of a 150-man shift showed up at 8 a.m. First reports said there were not enough men to mine coal, but there were enough for maintenance work. The local involved was one of the few which had voted to accept the most recent contract settlement.

A 30-member maintenance crew also showed up for work at a Pittsburg & Midway Coal Co. mine in Amsterdam, Mo., which has been damaged by harsh weather, according to coal company spokesman Jim Garnett. Mining was not expected there for several days.

Picketing is specifically forbidden by the back-to-work order, and only a scattered few pickets were reported outside union mines.

In western Pennsylvania, however, roving pickets appeared in force. Carrying sticks, baseball bats and pipes, some 400 men in a caravan of 150 cars roved through the countryside, heckling and shutting down non-union mines that had been operating, state police said.

"If any mines are open they shut them down, then they move on," said state police Major Homer Redd. "We've had some rocks thrown, but most of it's heckling. So far there hasn't been too much damage compared to other strikes we've been through."

A spokesman for Consolidation Coal Co. said about 30 pickets had shown up at one union mine in Pennsylvania at midnight Sunday, but "there wasn't any problem. They just wanted to make sure no one went to work."

While some union locals elsewhere completed their safety inspections in short order, some safety committees from District 23 in western Kentucky were giving that area's strip mines a stringent — and timeconsuming — going-over, according to Wayne Neal, cha a UMW grievance committee there.

D'Estaing weakens French left

PARIS [AP] — France's leftist alliance finished behind the coalition of President Valery Giscard d'Estaing in first round parliamentary voting Sunday, seriously weakening leftist chances to end 20 years of center-right rule.

There were signs that the shaky leftist alliance would have trouble uniting in time for next Sunday's runoff election.

The center-right coalition, however, was expected to have little trouble uniting behind its strongest candidate in each race.

The left had been expected to do substantially better, with pollsters predicting it would take 54 per cent.

Socialist leader Francois Mitterrand blamed the poor showing on confusion created by the Communists over the issue of how much to nationalize if the left won. Communist nationalization of the Socialists led to a noisy quarrel that fractured the alliance last September.

Others said much of the prediction for Socialist success was based on apparent new support from educated middle-level executives or government clerical workers.

They say these Frenchmen, basically moderate, may have been more willing to complain to poll-takers than to actually vote for leftists intent on putting Communists into the cabinet.

Complete returns from the 491 voting districts gave the leftists 45.1 per cent, with another 6.5 per cent going to groups expected to vote left next Sunday.

The ruling coalition got 46.5 per cent, with an additional 1.9 per cent going to voters who likely will back them on Sunday.

Stock prices in Paris shot up an average of 10 per cent as it became clear that the left lacked the 53 per cent it was thought to need, because of gerrymandering, to win a parliamentary majority.

Sunday's turnout was more than 83 per cent of the nation's 35.4 million voters, a record in national parliamentary balloting.

Mitterrand and Communist chief Georges Marchais disagreed Monday over how to mend differences and pool strength for a united attempt to capture a majority in the National Assembly.

Analysts say that to win next Sunday, the Socialists and Communists must agree not to compete against each other, and have the weaker leftist withdraw in each race. Any candidate who got more than 12¼ per cent of the vote Sunday can run in the run-off election.

Marchais is demanding that the two parties first agree on a government program and divide up ministries, then discuss pullout of candidate.

The Communist stand was seen as an indication Marchais would not make across-the-board commitments to back Socialists now that chances appeared dimmer for a leftist government with Communist cabinet ministers.

There is wide specualtion that Marchais would rather see the left lose than see his party as the weaker half of a Socialist-led coalition.

Even if the left's pullout bargaining worked, the alliance of Socialists, Communists and Leftist Radicals appeared in poor shape to win power after its showing Sunday.

Senate changes treaties, supporters receive boost

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Senate resoundingly adopted a second change in the Panama Canal treaties yesterday — assuring U.S. warships right of first passage in times of emergencies — amid indications that supporters of ratification were close to victory.

The proposal by the Senate leadership, co-sponsored by 78 senators, was approved by a vote of 85-3.

The amendment was the second part of the so-called "leadership amendment," designed to lure a two-thirds majority for approval.

The Senate is scheduled to vote Thursday on the first Panama Canal treaty which gives the United States the right to intervene to defend the canal after the year 2000 and guarantees the waterway's perpetual neutrality.

A vote on the second treaty to turn the waterway over to Panama on Dec. 31, 1999 is expected in early April, possibly April 6 or 7.

Assistant Senate Republican leader Ted Stevens said yesterday President Carter has the votes to get the Panama Canal treaties ratified but warned the House may balk at passing key implementing legislation.

Stevens, R-Alaska, a treaty critic, told reporters he talked with the president by telephone Sunday and Carter stressed that rejection of the treaties would damage the presidency in foreign affairs.

News in Brief

Action halts training move

[HERSAY NEWS SERVICE] — The federal volunteer umbrella agency for the Peace Corps and Vista, Action, has abandoned a controversial plan to move its training meetings out of states that have not ratified the Equal Rights Amendment.

Action director Sam Brown told a House subcommittee meeting several weeks ago that he decided to move the training meetings out of Atlanta, Chicago and St. Louis to Baltimore, Detroit and Albuquerque because women members on his staff did not want to attend meetings in states that had not ratified the E.R.A.

Last week, however, Brown changed his mind after several Democratic Senators complained to U.S. Attorney General Griffin Bell that shifting meetings for "political purposes" exceeded the power of a federal agency and amounted to "blackmail."

Brown said that while he personally favors the E.R.A., his former position was "in error."

'Kudzu" director speaks on film

By LAURA KENNEY
Collegian Staff

UMass alumna Marjorie Short has projected herself as a filmmaker by being nominated last spring for an Academy Award for her documentary film "Kudzu", her thesis project at Boston University.

Short yesterday spoke to a group of about 100 after the screening of her film, which is about the fast-growing kudzo vine found plenteously in the south.

Short directed and produced the film while a graduate student at Boston University, completing it in 1976. Since then she has entered her work in many film festivals, received several awards, culminating in her Oscar nomination last year. "Kudzo" is now being distributed by Pyramid Pictures.

"If you get an (Oscar) nomination, it's almost as good as winning," said Short. "It puts you on the map." She said distributors like to get films with many awards, because they are then more valuable and more attractive to people. "There is a race between distributors to grab as many (Oscar) nominees as they can."

Short is a 1970 graduate of UMass, who majored in English and minored in theatre. She became involved in films here, and enrolled in 1973 as a graduate student in film at Boston University.

She got the idea for her thesis project while she was visiting a friend in Georgia and learned of the kudzu vine. She then discovered a poem on the vine by southern poet James Dickey, whom she contacted and obtained for an appearance in the movie.

Short also was able to obtain footage of Jimmy Carter as he was campaigning in Boston before his election, who gave his opinion of the kudzu vine. According to Short, the Carter appearance improved the saleability of her film.

"Kudzu" was shown recently on WGBY-TV in Boston and will soon be shown on public television.

NOW justifies ERA extension

[HERSAY NEWS SERVICE] — The National Organization for Women has denied that it is changing the rules in mid-game by asking for an extension of the ratification time for the Equal Rights Amendment.

N.O.W. recently filed legal briefs with Congress asking that the legislative body extend the deadline for ratification of the E.R.A. past 1979, the seven-year limit originally imposed by Congress in 1972. The organization contends that there is nothing in Article V of the constitution, or in previous Supreme Court rulings which prohibits Congress from extending the deadline.

N.O.W. President Eleanor Smeal, quoted in New York's Majority Report newspaper, says that Congress originally set up the seven-year deadline for ratification of amendments to prevent them from floating around indefinitely when they were no longer relevant because of changed political, economic or social conditions.

New birth record stirs controversy

[HERSAY NEWS SERVICE] — Birth certificates requiring a child's mother to record the number of spontaneous or induced abortions she has had are raising strong objections on the part of California women's groups.

The birth certificate put out by the California Department of Health in January also requires mothers to answer questions about ethnic background, level of education, weight gain during pregnancy and drug or alcohol abuse.

The "Los Angeles Times" reports that the California Commission on the Status of Women has strongly criticized the new birth certificate, saying that such excess information might fall into the wrong hands.

The Commission charges that the birth certificate "far exceeds what is required to record a new birth" and constitutes an invasion of privacy.

A new game from housing office

To the Editor

The housing office, with the help of SGA co-president Jon Hite, has come up with a new room choosing game for students to play. They were planning on announcing it after vacation leaving students who dislike it[which is everyone that I've talked to]only one week to complain, which is too late.

So here is the game:

If you are planning on staying in the same or another room in your current dorm, then you sign up with the H.R. on April 5. The same as before. The fun comes in changing dorms. If you wanted to change dorms then you have to fill out a housing preference card [remember freshman orientation] with your first three choices and return it to the housing office. When they are in[I haven't heard of a date yet], there will be a lottery for each dorm to see who gets in. This is an effort to stop H.R.s and people already in the dorm from letting their friends in. It will give anyone an equal chance for getting in the "good" dorms. Sounds good? How about roommates who want to move into a dorm together? Or how about the person who wants their friend to move in since their old roommate is leaving? As far as current roommates, if through the lottery they both happen to get in the same dorm, they will be able to get the same room. But if they are trying to get into a "good" dorm their chances aren't that good of getting in, and two people who want to live together may end up in separate dorms

If you want a friend from another dorm to move in with you he must be entered in the lottery and be a winner. There is also the chance that you do not get any of your choices. Then what do you do? They are planning on letting the winners know the finals[I'll believe it when I see it] and who has time to run around looking for a dorm or even to arrange with the H.R. of the dorm they "won" for the room they want.

I am writing this letter because I want people to know that it won't be as easy to move into another dorm. I also want students to have time to complain before it's too late. If you don't like the system let the people who made it know. Call the Housing Office[5-2100] or talk to Jon Hite in the SGA presidents office[or who ever might be there after Thursday, they should work for you] they might be able to help. We SHOULD be able to get the old system back if we want it.

Abhorrent murder of 30 by PLO

To the Editor:

We, the members of the UMass Zionist Alliance, abhor the murder of 37 Israelis, and the wounding of 70 others in a recent act of terrorism. On Saturday, March 11, Palestinian terrorists landed on an Israeli beach approximately twenty miles south of Haifa. They seized two buses and transferred the passengers to one bus. The bus, filled with 70 sightseers, exploded into flames during an exchange of fire on the outskirts of Tel Aviv. Passengers had been tied to their seats, and the bus was rigged with explosive devices.

The death of over 30 innocent Israelis, was an act of cold blooded murder. But more than that, this savage incident was indiscriminate -- murder for the sake of murder. The target was not a political source or military installation. Women and children died in this pointless attack.

A Palestinian military spokesman in Beriut said the attack had been carried out by members of Al Fatah, the largest guerrila group in the Palestinian Liberation Organization [PLO].

In the past, there have been other incidents, such as 23 school children being shot by PLO terrorists at Maalot. Kiriat Shemona is a town named after 8 people who were slain in a similar terrorist act. And the list goes on...

An act such as this should be condemned by any humanitarian. We can never sanction murder, and we condemn anyone who supports this kind of act.

There will be a candle-light memorial for Israeli victims of terrorism. It will take place tonight at 7:30, outside the Student Union

Another Soviet dissident held

To The Editor:

It has been one year since Anatoly Scharansky's arrest by the KGB. During this time he has been held incommunicado in Moscow's Lefortovo Prison. Anatoly Scharansky is a 30 year old Jewish mathematician who is regarded as a central figure in the Soviet dissident movement. He is being accused of treason and espionage under Article 64 of the Soviet Criminal Code. If convicted, Scharansky could be sentenced to death. Authorities still refuse to set the date his trial.

Scharansky's only crimes are that he has applied to immigrate to Israel and he has been a spokesman for a group of Russian dissidents monitoring Soviet implementation of Human Rights Provisions in the Helsinki Accords

Soviet reluctance to uphold these provisions has been marked by a recent deadlock over this issue at the Belgrade talks, and by sharply stepped up persecution of dissidents over the past year. In Scharansky's case close friends and members of his family have been interrogated by the secret police. Other dissidents are subjected to physical and psychological harassment, false arrest, denial of visas, and threats to their lives.

Anatoly Scharansky's plight has be prompted international outrage. 136 Belgian mathematicians have appealed to the Kremlin. The Canadian Parliament has unanimously denounced Moscow's persecution of Scharansky and other dissidents. Deans from 72 U.S. Law Schools have petitioned Brezhnev. The French Communist daily, L'Humanite has appealed to the Kremlin on Scharansky's behalf. Even members of Congress' Helsinki Commission have nominated the members of the unofficial Helsinki Watch groups, including Scharansky, for the Nobel Peace Prize. So have the parliaments of both Denmark and Norway.

In the past widespread public pressure has prevented the Soviet Union from imprisoning such dissidents as Alexander Solshenitsyn and Andre Sakharov and has permitted the emmigration of thousands of Jews. It is now feared that only a massive outpouring of international support can save Scharansky's life.

An International Hunger Strike in behalf of Anatoly Scharansky has been called for Wednesday, March 15. On this campus students have organized a table to facilitate the sending of letters of protest to the Soviet government. There will also be an all day presentation in front of the Student Union of guerrila theater to dramatize Scharansky's struggle. Letters can be sent independently to the following Addresses:

Secretary General Leonid Breznev
The Kremlin, Moscow RSFSR, USSR

Ambassador Anatoly Dobrynin

Comic strip offensive...

To the Editor:

This is in response to a comic strip "Wally Dorf" by Rob Ranney, published in the Collegian March 6.

Along with many other women, I find this cartoon very offensive.

The first frame is a woman looking bored, thinking "Women's Week-bah! This is more optimistic liberalism than I can stomach in one week." She then goes on to think, "Frankly, I'd rather be in the Blue Wall getting leered at." In the third frame, a pregnant woman winks at her. In the fourth and last frame, the woman thinks, "By a man, I mean!"

This is outrageous on four accounts [at least]. First, is the insinuation that Women's Week is "optimistic liberalism." Second is the suggestion that women actually liked getting leered at anywhere [including the Blue Wall]; and third, that there is any connection between being winked at by a pregnant woman and being leered at in the Blue Wall. The most outrageous aspect, however, is this suggestion that not only do women go around leering at other women, but that this is general behavior to be expected at Women's Week.

I cannot really say I find it ironic that this blatantly sexist and heterosexist cartoon was pulished in the Collegian edition devoted primarily to the events at Women's Week, because this sort of thing is so typical. This cartoon should have by no means been printed. I hope that in the future, the Collegian staff will exercise better politics in their editorial function and not condone such oppressive material through their newspaper.

...censorship charged

To The Editor:

This is concerning the matter of censorship in the media. More specifically it deals with the comic strip that was to be published in the Friday Collegian -- "Wally Dorf". I find the matter more than upsetting that a public institution of higher learning should resort to such tactics as blocking the printing of this strip. Once again it appears that bureaucracy is trying to legislate morals. Time and time again this practice has proven not only futile but detrimental to the free quality of society that we are upholding. Must I resort to quoting the United States Constitution? Before this simple matter gets out of hand, I urge most sincerely to put aside this foolish behavior and proceed to uphold the principle of free press so vital to this student body.

Vicky Fortino

Ed. Note: The strip not printed in Friday's Collegian contained a cruel joke considered lacking in the liberal standards of good taste. The Collegian, like all publications, reserves the right to decide on the appropriateness of material contributed by its writers and artists.

Another housing nightmare

kevin knobloch

The UMass administration has been accused of being unethical and dishonest in the past and its latest venture is certainly both of these.

The reader will easily remember the dormitory overcrowding mayhem of last fall, which resulted when arecord 5,100 applicants were accepted to the University. For as long as four weeks, hundreds of students were placed in lounges, tripled in double occupancy rooms and even put up in the Campus Center hotel. As though it were a glutton for punishment, the admissions office, having already admitted5,100 freshpersons for the Fall, 1978 semester, is in the process of accepting 800 to 1,000 more students. A repeat of last year'snightmare can be the only outcome.

A conceivable excuse to account for such gross overcrowding may haveexisted last fall, as the Admissions Office generally accepts more applicants than available spaces and relies on the assumption not all of those accepted will choose to attend UMass. But, that was last year. As the fall semester rapidly approaches, the Admissions, Registrar's Offices are guilty of irresponsibly and deliberately planning to overstuff the dormitories.

To realize the extent the administration is willing to fill the available housing spaces to beyond its capacity, the following statistics should be considered. The total on-campus residential capacity at UMass is 11,500 people. Assuming that 90 per cent of those accepted are admitted in the fall, which is not an unreasonable assumption given the current trend of state school popularity, 5,400 freshpersons will join some 4,000 remaining sophomores in the the dorms. That leaves only 2,000 spaces for the junior class and those seniors who wish toremain in the dormitory environment. As discovered from last year's housing dilemma, only a minor percentage of juniors will find refuge off-campus via a hastily granted housing exemption

However, in an attempt not to be unduly harsh with administration officials, it is only fair to report Whitmore has taken some measures to ease the shock unsuspecting entering students will receive upon their arrival in September. The physicalplant has already ordered and paid for 1,000 temporary Army cots.

From Whitmore's perspective, there is reason to what appears to be an irrational procedure. The Massachusetts State Legislature, which decides what portion of the taxpayersfunds will go to UMass, has been after the Trustees to raise more in student revenue to slow the spiraling costs of higher education. Since UMass students were subject to a tuition hike and a series of fee increases only last year, it is not politically feasible for the Trustees to raise the rates again so soon. The alternative, it seems, turned out to admit more students while ignoring the housing limitations.

The additional tuition money provided by these additional students is not the only benefit to the University. Students who reluctantly accept temporaryhousing in a lounge or triple pay the same rent as those who live in regular rooms and the rent money is pocketed by the state treasury. Those students who are repelled by the inhumane housing situation and withdraw receive only a percentage of their tuition, room and board and fees in return, the amount depending on whether they leave immediately or wait a few weeks before departing.

A further defense of overcrowding may be argued. During the past few years, an average of 33 per cent of the entering freshpersons graduate four years later. This has resulted in declining tuition and housing revenue. In a predictable response, the Trustees have decided to ignore the cause of the problem and flood the residential areas with new students in hopes the averageof graduating students will rise. That the high percentage of dropouts in the past is most likely directly related to the poor conditions and inadequate services found in the residential areas, not to mention the overcrowding, is apparently inconsequential to those in charge.

There is no doubt that the administration's plan, which has emerged only as rumor among the Collegian staff and a handful of Heads of Residence thus far, is fact. Those with complete knowledge of Whitmore's actions certainly include Gerald Quarles, housing assignment coordinator, John Findley, area management coordinator in Southwest and William Field, dean of students.

But, it is also apparent that knowledge of the deliberate overcrowding will be vehemently denied by housing officials when incoming students discover the fate awaiting them this fall. While the Heads of Residences and their underpaid Resident Assistants helplessly try to untangle the mess handed them by their employers, while absorbing the wrath of outraged students and their parents, Whitmore will be publicly placing the blame on computer misprints, employee foulups and the like. It is suddenly crucial that the blame be appropriately assigned long before the freshperson class of 1982 arrives.

Liberal senator worried

By George Sommers

Senator Edward Brooke is a veteran fence straddler; politics forces him to be. He is a man of several contradictions. He is a liberal Republican, one of the last of a vanishing breed. Brooke is also the most prominent Republican for overwhelmingly democratic Massachusetts. The senator was easily re-elected in 1972, the same year in which George McGovern carried Massachusetts alone among the states in his bid for the presidency. Brooke is also the most visible black in the G.O.P. It was not until very recently that the Republican party seriously decided to do something about their meager showings among black voters.

Edward Brooke is becoming visibly concerned about the right wing of his party. Many G.O.P. conservatives believe the party should be ideologically pure; i.e. nobody to the left of Spiro Agnew need apply. In the past year, Brooke has been edging slowly rightward. A while ago, he lamented the "dirty" and disorganized White House, and the wearing of jeans of some of the aides. As Chief of Protocol Evans Dobelle (who coincidentally was the Republican mayor of Pittsfield, Mass.) remarked, conservatives like orderliness and formality. On key issues, Brooke's votes are no longer consistently liberal.

The issue that is nearest and dearest to conservatives' hearts currently is the Panama Canal. Many rightwingers are positively jingoistic about keeping the canal. New Hampshire Republican Governor Meldrim Thompson accused those favoring the treaties of being "Benedict Arnolds." Bumper stickers reading "Don't Castroate Panama" and "Keep the Canal, give away Carter", are all the rage among conservatives. Some G.O.P. conservatives asked Minority Leader Howard Baker to step down for announcing his support of the treaties.

Brooke is officially undecided about the treaties, which puts him in a bind. It is an election year for him, and he is worried about a primary defeat from Avi Nelson, conservative Boston radio commentator. On the other hand, Vice President Fritz Mondale indicated in an interview with the Boston Globe last week that a democratic opponent to Brooke might receive White House support if the Bay State senator votes against the treaties. Ironically, several conservative Republicans, including many '76 Reagan delegates, sent a letter to Nelson, urging him not to run. Apparently, local G.O.P. party officials realize that the party succeeds only in destroying itself when it tries to purge the liberals. This leads to the conclusion that Brooke is worried about his status with in his party at the national level.

Given his unique status in Massachusetts politics, it would be a mistake for Brooke to vote against the Pamama Canal treaties. Obviously, Brooke is in office thanks to the votes of thousands of liberal democrats. If he alienates them, he could be in hot water.

Creativity paranoia

by Carolyn Mooney

Creativity paranoia - It's most prevalent just after childhood, when finger-painting and sand castle-building days have passed. I think I peaked creatively when I was about eight years old and used to write plays for my third grade class to act out. But then I was afflicted - first I stopped making handmade birthday cards and valentines for my parents, and then started feeling nervous about drawing a picture, until one day I was afraid to even pick up a paintbrush. Suddenly, all artistic or creative activity had ceased. I began categorizing things into "can do" and "can't do": I couldn't draw people. I couldn't grow a few simple carrots. I couldn't, if I were dancing, forget what I looked like and just dance the way I felt.

But even worse than "can't do," is "don't do." I have known peopole who don't draw, don't dance, and don't sing. Why?

For one thing, we are subjected to and surrounded by endless artistic talent - a short walk past the craft tables in the campus center any weekday morning will verify that - but it is concentrated into the hands of a very few, talented people. So we tend to judge our efforts according to what we have seen and liked elsewhere, whether in a museum or on the wall of someone's dorm room, and feel as though we can't compare.

I used to get so frustrated because other people, in their books, in their poems, or in their artwork, said so perfectly something I wanted to say but couldn't, and they said it first. Well, maybe we shouldn't set such high standards for ourselves, . After all, more often than not, the work we admire is probably done by professionals in their fields. When we were little kids, we weren't afraid to create something new because we were unaware of what could be done and what others before us had done. Is it possible to return to this state of mind? Maybe that's what Lewis Carroll did, when he wrote his brilliant Alice in Wonderful at age thirty-three.

Another reason for placing limitations on our abilities is that we are afraid of failure. Recognized achievers (in sports, academics, or other areas) often hold this attitude. But being afraid to fail is far worse than actually failing, because failing at least implies an t- t.ryone should ae allowed to fail at something without feeling bad.

And finally, we are afraid to express ourselves artistically because we are afraid to begin, and there is nobody to push or prod or oven encourage us. But everyone has some creative potential, for which they need an outlet. For example, psychologists say that gardens are an excellent outlet for middle -aged businessmen because they become responsible for nurturing a living plant and are later rewarded.

Maybe I'm finally getting over my creativity paranoia, because I'm ready to start using my own ideas again. Even if they don't materialize into what I'd hoped for (if my clay pots collapse on the potter's wheel) well, at least I won't be wondering what I could have done, because I'll have tried! And to try something new, I think, is the first step towards self-expression.

Students urged to get involved

To the Editor:

Through no effort of the Collegian it has come to my attention that an election for president of the Student Government Association is about to take place. There are a number of candidates running for this office, some serious others not quite so serious. We have heard a lot of rhetoric and it is all beginning to sound very similar. Basically all candidates agree that the SGA as it stands now is inept and inefficient. But what worries me is that many of the people who are telling us this are members of the Student Government Association, and are now candidates for president. The ambiguity is obvious. If these people couldn't change the system when they were in it, what makes them think we're going to believe things will be any better if they are in charge of it.

I urge all students to get involved. This is our student government and it can only be as good as we make it. I also urge all students to look carefully at the credentials of all the candidates. If they are members of the Student Senate or the Student Organizing Project [SOP] or have been involved in some organization ask them what they have accomplished in that organization. If they can't tell you anything concrete or they start by saying I have worked on this and that, then obviously they have done little or nothing for the students they so preciously desire to represent, and I would urge you not to vote for these candidates. Perhaps, just like the presidential elections in 1976 it should be an outsider who can best understand the interests of the average student and not some egotistic political hack who will continue to promise us everything, but not give us a damn thing once s-he is elected.

HELLO!
HELLO!

Your Birthday

TUESDAY, MARCH 14

Born today, you are ultimately just. You may do things that seem unfair, but your actions will prove to have been correct. You make a distinction between lawful and fair, for you recognize that there may be discrepancies between the letter and the spirit of the law. You base your actions upon the latter.

You may have to explain your actions to those with a more conventional morality. Because you have a gift for making your point clear without alienating anyone, you manage to extricate yourself from difficulties with little trouble and often a lot of fun.

You possess an internal balance that makes it impossible for you to overdo one attitude. All your emotions are well-balanced. You have the ability to see many sides to a question, though you will act only in accordance with your view. Thus you may confuse others, but never yourself.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 15

PISCES(Feb.19-March 20) — You can rationalize errors away in your mind but not in those of others. Admit ignorance.

ARIES(March 21-April 19) — If you will tackle duties one at a time, all will be accomplished by evening.

TAURUS(April 20-May 20) — Take personal stock this morning. You may be more guilty of injustice than you realize. Make amends in PM.

GEMINI(May 21-June 20) — Join one whose goals match yours. Work must be undertaken immediately.

CANCER(June 21-July 22) — Help another. You will feel better about your success if you haven't hindered someone else's.

LEO(July 23-Aug.22) — Orient yourself to the changes at work. Demonstrate your flexibility.

VIRGO(Aug.23-Sept.22) — Try to escape from under another's thumb, or your career will suffer.

LIBRA(Sept.23-Oct.22) — Seek compatible company today. You need to feel there are many like you and who like you.

SCORPIO(Oct.23-Nov.21) — You can contribute to loved ones' contentment. Don't argue; state your views openly.

SAGITTARIUS(Nov.22-Dec.21) — Sympathy is what's needed to set a loved one back on his feet. Lend an ear.

CAPRICORN(Dec.22-Jan.19) — Opportunity is short-lived today, but if you hurry you will have a chance for real gain.

AQUARIUS(Jan.20-Feb.18) — Don't cut corners, or you may also cut yourself off from an offer of help.

New Mexico questions Fullerton player eligibility

DENVER [UPI] — Western Athletic Conference Commissioner Stan Bates said yesterday he had received a report that a player on the Fullerton State basketball team may have been ineligible.

Fullerton, which upset fourth-ranked New Mexico 90-85 Saturday in the first round of the NCAA playoffs, reportedly used the player, Mike Linden, during the game.

Bates said he had submitted information about the alleged ineligibility to Jess Hill, commissioner of the Pacific Coast Athletic Association, of which Fullerton State is a member.

"I called them on it and I assume they will check it out," Bates said.

The Titans are scheduled to meet San Francisco Thursday night in the NCAA Western Regional Playoffs in Albuquerque, N.M.

Bates said the report, which he received from the University of New Mexico, indicated Linden may have played for a professional basketball league in New York.

"The first thing they'll have to do is find out whether he was ineligible," Bates said. "I have no idea whether he played with a professional league."

Bates said if a determination is made that Linden was ineligible, he interprets NCAA rules to provide for an individual rather than a team penalty.

"As I understand the NCAA rule, if a man is declared ineligible, it would have to be after the tournament and the penalty would be on him as an individual," said Bates. "It apparently would not be a team penalty."

Bates said the determination of eligibility would have to be made by the NCAA.

New Mexico Coach Norm Ellenberger said he knew nothing of the report.

"I'm in the dark about it," Ellenberger said. "It is something that was stirred up elsewhere."

Intramural hoop scoop

Intramural basketball playoffs (men's and women's) have begun, and have advanced now to the semifinal round. In the men's semis (Boyden tonight at 5:45 p.m.) Unique N.Y. will take on the MacKimmie Lions (court two) while on court 1, the Free Agents face Beta Kappa Phi. The winners naturally advance to the finals (Wednesday 5:45 p.m.) while the losers will square off to decide third place.

In women's semifinal action tonight, the Sows will face Sugar and Spice (5:45 p.m. court 6) while the Pumas do battle with 'Oh, Shoot' (5:45 p.m.) Same situation here — the winners meet in the championship game Wednesday night (5:45 a.m. and the losers match up to decide third place.

Quarterfinals were played last night, and here's the story of those:

Unique NY, on the strength of Al Eiford (24 pts.) and a tenacious full court pressure defense, forced the Connections into numerous turnovers, leading the NY'ers to a 54-26 victory.

So effective was the pressure applied by the NY'ers, it forced the Connections into an early timeout to discuss the matter. The timeout didn't help much as the NY'ers pressured the man with the ball to the point it was obvious the Connections were going to have a rough game dealing with it.

The Connections led early at 4-0, and were tied at six, before Unique went on to score six unanswered points, mostly because Eiford was able to get free inside. A bucket by Moses Williams (10 pts.) put the Connections down by four, 12-8. But by the half, Unique was up by 14, 24-10, a lead that was insurmountable in the second half for the Connections.

Baseball record doesn't tell score

By ART SIMAS
Collegian Staff

Sports pages at this time of year traditionally remind us that the baseball season is just around the corner. And the Collegian, despite its bold and rebellious ways, feels this is a tradition that must be kept.

The UMass baseball team will soon be let out of its Cage to fly south. But before speculating on the returns of the grueling ten game schedule the Minutemen will play in Miami during vacation, we must put things in perspective with a quick refresher of last season.

At a quick glance, a 20-17 record really might not make a very favorable impression on anyone. But, that record of the 1977 UMass baseball team is very deceiving.

Ten of the games lost were decided by one run, and in four others UMass was nudged by two runs. It looks like the Minutemen had a hard luck season but Coach Dick Bergquist said he has no alibies. "We finished strong, winning nine out of our last twelve games," he said.

With the necessary background out of the way, its time to see where the Minutemen stand now, as the 1978 season looms in the not too distant future.

Into its sixth full week of training, the team is looking forward to its annual spring trip. Miami, Florida is the destination on March 16 where the Minutemen will play a 10 game schedule including a six game tournament with Southern Illinois (ranked 3rd in last year's final poll), Miami (9th) and Westchester University of Pennsylvania. Also on the schedule are Bolling Green, Florida International and Wesleyan.

Although New England weather is not conducive for baseball, Bergquist said that in March "the players should be ready; they've been working hard for six weeks. The Florida teams will be into their season but our players are used to practicing inside..I don't think it should be that disadvantageous."

On the mound UMass will be led by senior Tom Nigro (2.14 E.R.A. 5-4 last year) whose four losses were each by one run. He bested Miami last year 3-2 pitching eleven innings.

Supporting him will be Doug Welnec, a "key performer" according to Bergquist. Welnec injured his back in April limiting him to 45 innings of play. Reliever Dave Tewhill (3-4, 3 saves) is also expected to see plenty of action. Competition from last year's junior varsity pitchers and others is spirited for the remaining spots on the staff.

Returning with big bats are infielder Ed Skribiski and outfielder Mike McEvilly, both of whom played the majority of last year's 37 game schedule. Skribiski tied the UMass record for hits (50) in a season, toting a .357 batting average. McEvilly rapped four homers, led the team in RBI's (27) and batted .310.

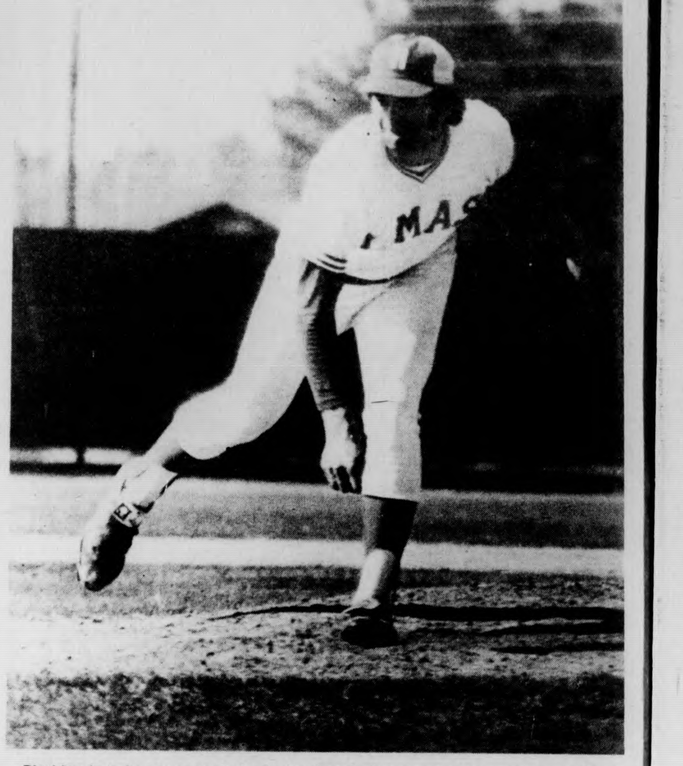
Returning to the infield along with Skribiski are first baseman Dale Stone, Catcher Charles Ciccone, Leo Kalinowski at third, Mike Stockley at second. The outfield will most likely consist of McEvilly, Neal Lojek and George Kelley. Bergquist said catcher-designated hitter John Czerapowicz is "doubtful at this moment because of an injury to his arm sustained while playing football."

Daily workouts have been held in Boyden's main gym and the Cage. "There we have two pitching machines for the hitters while our pitchers will do some throwing against live batters," said Bergquist.

"The pitchers are throwing every other day at reduced speed building up to every third day or 100 pitches at full speed," he added.

Speaking of speed, the wheels on the basepaths may not be turning so often this year. Out of 78 attempted team thefts last year 55 were successful. "I'd say we have average speed, I can't say we're really fast, but we do have some people who can steal" Bergquist said.

Commenting on the 1978 season Bergquist said that "the infield up the middle and the outfield look good defensively and two of our pitchers, Nigro and Welnec, could be as good as any two pitchers in New England."



Pitching is only one aspect of winning baseball, but a very important one. When it's good, things run smooth. When it's off, it could make for a long game.

Ah, yes, lacrosse!! The fastest sport on foot! UMies go absolutely nuts over a game. Nothing like a hot, Saturday afternoon watching Garber's Gorillas do their thing. 'The Chief' (Kevin Patterson, 33) has gone now (graduated) but hopefully has left the thrill of victory behind for all to enjoy.

An "unreal" problem

If you look at our United States, there are a lot of things wrong with living in these fifty states. Big problems with no easy, ready-to-serve solutions; problems like people eating dog food because of a lack of money; modernized overcrowded, polluted cemented cities; nuts who kill kids whose frisbee has hit their car and the racism that exists in sports.

While racism may not seem to be a major problem when compared with the aforementioned ones, it may be one of the easier ones to solve because most of us come in contact with sports. Whereas the other problems may take years and thousands of dollars to solve, racist attitudes are a personal problem that each individual can deal with when involved in a sports activity.

Racism exists across the whole country, and in each one of us (yes, even us here at UMass-Amherst); its quantitative level just differs. The issue of racism in the U.S. is too large of one for one person like me to deal with in this small space in the Collegian (needless to say, it is not a sports issue). However, the issue of racism in sports does belong on these back pages.

A look at White-Black relationships in our four major sports will point out problems many of us might have ignored. Remember that sports is not the real world. Though it exists at a predominant level in the male-oriented lifestyle, many seem to forget that the supposed rationale for their racist views were formed in the real world and therefore should be dealt with there. For some reason, racists views have been extended to the competitive games of the unreal world of sports.

Baseball (major league) started out as an all-white enterprise; they built the fields, made the rules, owned the teams, and played the game. Jackie Robinson broke the color barrier but not after going through hell.

Had he given up, pro baseball could have turned out like pro hockey is today. Baseball at the lower levels (high school little leagues), though I can't get the actual facts, is still up for grabs; but since it is played basically in the suburbs and country towns (as opposed to the cities) I would claim it to be still basically a white-orientated sport. There may still be some animosity towards Blacks getting on baseball teams (college, pro), but at this time, I could only speculate that on some college teams, skill would be looked at first, color second.

Pro hockey was basically the Canadian game before it came down to the U.S. and alternated between playing the sport and exciting the fans through fisticufffs. It has been, and for all intents and purposes, will always remain a white sport. When you go to a hockey game (at any level) you expect to see mostly white players, because people recognize it as a white sport (as a P.E. major I took hockey class last year: I got the longest stares standing on the bus in hockey equipment). As far as I'm concerned, the sport can stay that way. (Remember the bucks it takes to put a kid through hockey).

Football is the integrated sport. Blacks play it. Whites play it. Everything's cool. There is no stereotype of a football player, at least not dealing with race. It must come from the fact that football can be played anywhere, city or country; in the middle of the street or some old ladies back yard.

What I'm leading up to is the biggie: basketball. The stereotypical picture of a basketball player is a Black guy, who can dribble between-his-legs, jump as high as the rim, and shoot. (Note: this is not the view of professional players but rather the average anybody — the man on the street).

Blacks know it is their game; they've played it, mastered it, taken it over. Whites know it; some accept it, some don't. The problem heightens.

When an all-Black team plays an all-white team, say in a pick-up game, the black team doesn't want to lose, and the white team wants to win. The black team has to win, first because they're black, and second because being black that makes them the better team.

The white team, naturally, because they want to beat the black team-thus proving they are better. (This does not happen in all pick up games, and is naturally specualtion, based on my opinion).

Why can't the two teams just play the game? Because this stereotypical 'black sport' theory (fact?) won't die.

Remember the next time you play basketball, whether you're black, white, Oriental or whatever: in a pickup game or intramurals; the idea behind the sport was enjoyment, entertainment, improvement, (and fun). Only a loser likes to lose.

How you accept a loss is a different story.

Remember its not the end of the world. It's only a game.

UM violates safety code

By MICHAEL P. DORAN
and CHRISTOPHER H. SCHMITT
Collegian Staff

UMass will need to spend $8.7 million to bring dormitories and University-owned family housing up to health and safety code standards, according to an audit of the UMass housing system.

The audit, conducted by the firm of Wallace, Floyd, Ellenzweig and Moore, and requested by the Amherst campus administration, says $2.8 million is needed for immediate work to correct fire and safety code violations which could pose a threat to dormitory residents.

Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs Robert L. Woodbury last night said he doesn't know where the money to make the repairs will come from.

"Every university in the country is facing the problem of deferred maintenance," he said.

The Legal Services Office has written to the state Attorney General's office requesting the Attorney General investigate the alleged violations.

Sources told the Collegian the Attorney's General's office is looking into the violations and may soon launch its own investigation. A spokesman for Attorney General Francis X. Bellotti last night said he was unaware of the investigation.

The five towers in Southwest and the seven-story dorms in Orchard Hill pose the greatest fire danger, according to the audit. The audit recommends work be started immediately to improve fire detection and control devices.

Other immediate work needs to be performed replacing windows, repairing leaky roofs, and replacing damaged doors, wiring and light fixtures, according to the audit.

"I'm sure we're aware of most of the things that need to be done," Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery said last night.

The audit, submitted to the Office of Residential Resource Management, was conducted to provide a basis for recommendations concerning management of facilities, and also compliance with minimum University building standards and maintenance.

In addition to the code violations, the audit also recommends $3.9 million be spent to restore dorms to original conditions, and $6.5 million for selected modernization.

In all, the audit recommends $18.8 million be spent for housing system renovations.

Renovations to selected dormitories announced last week are unrelated to the audit and stemmed from an independent study by the UMass Environmental Health and Safety Office.

Those renovations include heat sensors and other work in various dorms on campus.

The major repairs needed to restore dorms to original conditions are painting, replacement of carpeting, replacement of acoustic materials, and also repair of electrical and mechanical equipment, according to the audit.

Included in the modernization, the audit says $1.5 million will be needed to bring seven residence halls into compliance with state and federal regulations for the handicapped. The report fails to specify which dorms, but the dorms to be modernized will be selected based on geographic location on campus.

Another item cited for modernization was improvement of energy efficiency for which the audit recommended $3.9 million.

Maintenance is presently funded by student room rents under the terms of management and service agreements between the state and building authority and UMass trustees.

The agreements say students will pay for maintenance only of the area in which they live (e.g. Orchard Hill, Southwest). State funds, in the form of capital outlays, may be used only for major repairs.

"If we had maintained the dorms in the proper standard, rents would be astronomically high," Bromery said.

"Our contentions is that since student rents are paying off the bonds (that financed construction of the dorms) the state would help subsidize the maintenance on something which they will eventually own," he said.

Once bonds are paid off, the state becomes owner of the dorms.

One-hundred-fifty-thousand dollars has been appropriated for the fiscal year 1979 for planning to renovate dorms to comply with the handicapped code.

Bromery is seeking $3,850,000 in capital outlay, but Massachusetts Governor Michael S. Dukakis' state budget only allows some $1,970,000.

Audit reveals $ debt

By MICHAEL P. DORAN
Collegian Staff

The UMass Building Authority owes the UMass-Amherst campus $2.4 million, according to a financial audit of the residence hall system conducted by the Boston firm of Peat, Marwick, and Mitchell.

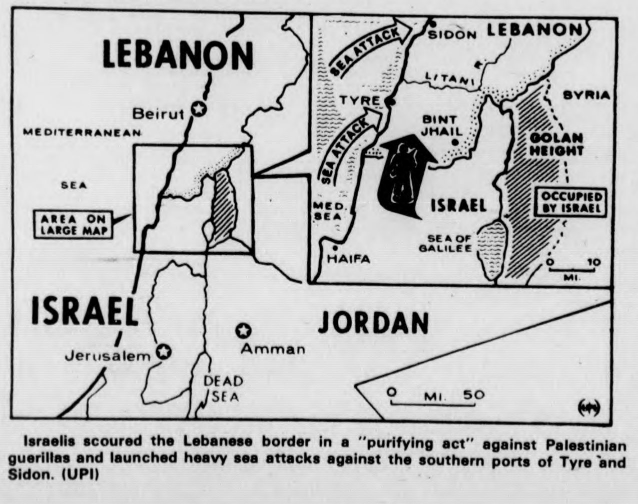
The audit recommends this money be applied against dorm bond debts to free money for repair and renovation.

According to the audit, money received from the U.S. Dept. of Housing and Urban Development to subsidize the Sylvan area residence project, along with money from excess construction and bond reserve funds, is not being applied to the residence halls.

According to chapter 733 of the enabling legislation for the building of the dormitories, the bond reserves being held by the Authority are larger than required.

The financial audit, in conjunction with the physical audit conducted last summer, recommends management and service agreements, which control the way funds are allocated for dormitory maintainence be changed to allow more money be applied to repairs and debt payments.

The financial audit, which was submitted to the UMass-Amherst administration, was the first financial audit of the residence system. Chairman of the UMass Board of Trustees Joseph P. Healy declined to comment, saying that he had not seen the audit.



Israelis scoured the Lebanese border in a "purifying act" against Palestinian guerillas and launched heavy sea attacks against the southern ports of Tyre and Sidon. (UPI)

Israel attacks Lebanon by air, sea and ground

TEL AVIV [UPI] — Israel launched a massive air, sea and ground assault against Palestinian guerrilla strongholds in Lebanon yesterday in reprisal for the deaths of 32 Israelis in the worst terror attack ever in the Jewish state.

Israeli infantry, backed by tanks, artillery and warplanes, surged through gates in the electrified fence that stretches across the 30-mile length of the Lebanese frontier.

In Beirut, Palestinian officials said the Israelis deployed naval forces near the two main southern ports of Sidon and Tyre. The guerrillas told of Israeli attempts at seaborne landings and helicopter-borne assaults on the coast.

A witness on the Israeli side of the frontier reported fires and explosions at the Palestinian strongholds of El Hiam and Beaufort in southern Lebanon.

"You can hear the boom of guns, many guns," he said. "The hills are on fire. Lots of armored personnel carriers and tanks are heading into Lebanon."

A United Nation spokesman in New York said U.N. observers in southern Lebanon reported "heavy Israeli air attacks" in the area.

A Palestinian official in Beirut said guerrillas and leftists were resisting the Israeli advance, but there was no independent confirmation of contact between the opposing forces.

Military sources said the assault was bigger than Israel's massive two-day attack against Lebanon in September 1972 in retaliation for the Munich Massacre staged by Black September guerrillas.

Israelis said the new thrust into Lebanon was in reprisal for the worst Palestinian attack ever in the Jewish state — the bus attack Saturday that killed 32 persons and wounded 85 others.

Nine of the 11 Al Fatah guerrillas were killed and two were captured.

An Israeli communique said the attack was a "purifying operation along the length of the Lebanese border."

The communique said Israel had no intention of attacking Syrian peacekeeping forces in Lebanon, the Lebanese army or the civilian population.

But diplomatic observers expressed concern about the possibility of the drive touching off clashes between Israeli and Syrian forces.

"The goal of the operation is to root out the bases of the terrorists in the area of the border and to damage the special bases from which the terrorists left for operations deep inside Israeli territory," Israel said.

Syrian troops are based north of the Litani River, which runs roughly parallel to the frontier and empties into the Mediterranean about 10 miles north of the border.

Cashin residents voice concern over space

By MARK ULRIKSEN
Collegian Staff

Sixty concerned Cashin residents jammed into their lounge last night served to dramatize the lack of spaces and resources available for Sylvan Area students.

"There are 470 students here," said Jim LaMacchia, Cashin head of residence, "and we are packed into the one public space for the entire dorm. This is our study, lounge, classroom, T.V. room, and piano room; all in one."

The students gathered to present three petitions to housing administration officials concerning Assistant head of residence-student ratios, temporary student assignments in the Sylvan Area, and lack of program space.

LaMacchia demanded the addition of four AHR positions to the existing staff. "The student staff ratio in the Sylvan dorms is 135:1, he said. "In all other dorms on campus, the ratio is one RA per 30 students."

Community Development Center Director, Sally Freeman admitted the ratio problem was high on her priorities list, but cited the lack of state funds available to add new AHR's.

"Over 99 per cent of our state budget is fixed," she said, "that's how tight the situation is we're dealing with. If we're looking at restaffing as a way to give us money, we need to look at all the residence halls, not just Sylvan."

LaMacchia countered that each floor is entitled to two RA's. "All we're asking for is one AHR per floor," he said.

"The AHR's are in our budget request," Freeman said, "but it still depends on the amount of money the state gives us. I'm not terribly optimistic about the money going into the system."

She concluded the overall staffing pattern on campus may need to be changed in order to reach equity.

Money was also an issue for the Cashin AHR's. One assistant pointed out that their work load is approximately 24 hours a week, while they are paid for only 10.6 hours of work.

"What we're talking about here is parity," LaMacchia said, "we understand your constraints as administrators. We want you to understand our constraints as human beings."

The residents also expressed concern that the over-crowding that occurred last fall does not happen again. "We will not accommodate any 'temporary' assignments in Cashin" reads the students petition. Cashin was 94 per cent full last semester, a percentage Acting Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs Rob Woodbury described as "optimal." Cashin's occupancy fell to 87 per cent this semester, a declined the students attribute to the dorm's lack of facilities.

Despite pleas from Freeman and Woodbury that inequities will continue without state money, the students felt the administration didn't realize the extent of their situation.

One student concluded, "Sylvan's problems are unique. We want to know what the administration can do for us, not for the rest of the university."

Disconnected phones ring

By DAVE GRAM
Collegian Staff

People trying to call UMass students whose phones have been disconnected are hearing the phone ring indefinitely rather than being told the phone has been shut off, the Collegian learned this week.

Robert Moriarty of the UMass Telecommunications Office last night said the New England Telephone Company has two different types of phone shut-offs.

According to Moriarty, when the phone company decides to disconnect a phone for non-payment of a bill, they employ a 10-day waiting period during which the phone is considered temporarily disconnected. After the 10-day period, the phone is termed permanently disconnected, Moriarty said.

It is during the initial 10-day period that the disconnected number is not hooked up to the phone company's recording that says "The number you have reached, 546---- has been disconnected."

A spokesperson for New England, when questioned about this policy, said yesterday, "Generally, the bill is payed very shortly after service is cut off, and there are so many of them that we don't bother hooking up to the recording ... "

Peter Rider of Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group (MassPIRG) said he thought the policy is "probably legal," but "It seems like an improper thing to do."

Bromery discusses garage funding

By CINDY REGET
Collegian Staff

Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery yesterday met with the Park and Transportation Service Committee to discuss the history of the Campus Center garage and answer questions about its funding.

The question of bus funding was not decided or discussed but of one the committee members after the meeting said the solution will likely be an increase in the rate of parking sticker fees in September.

Bromery said the idea for Campus Center complex originated 15 years ago when students expressed interest for a student center and worked with administrators on the plans.

Bromery said the complex was expected to attract many business conventions and other organizations and would therefore subsidize itself. Administration and student representatives reached an agreement in which students would pay a fee to fund the campus center, but would not have to pay for the funding of the garage.

The garage has not subsidized itself due to its poor location and because the campus center never attracted the predicted amount of people, Bromery said.

He said the garage became a "white elephant" in the hands of University administrators and, after a "long and heated debate", it was decided the only way the garage would pay for itself would be to incorporate it into the Park and Transportation Service. Bromery said this action violated the agreement made earlier with the students.

After giving the garage history, Bromery answered questions from the members of the committee, and emphasized five major points:

The garage should not be funded through the budget because it would result in a cut in the number of professors, courses offerings, and physical plant workers. Bromery said the funding of the garage through the budget would be extremely detrimental to the University community.

SGA president duties

To aid students in their selection of a presidential candidate, a brief outline of the responsibilities and powers of the president is presented.

The two primary duties of the president are to represent the Student Senate, and function as a student trustee. Representing the senate entails recommending students for appointment to various committees, such as Legal Services Organization, Student Organizing Project, University Committees, and Search Committees. The functions of student trustee is to create direct communication between the students and the board of trustees and administration.

Additional presidential responsibilities include holding a bi-monthly meeting of the President's Council, meeting with presidents of area governments, Greeks, and commuters and keeping all parties up to date on current issues.

Major presidential powers include the ability to veto any bill passed by the senate which the president feels is not in the student's best interest.

Referendum on ballot

Elections will be held across campus today and tomorrow for Student Government Association president, Campus Center Board of Governors and Student Senator seats.

A referendum, also on the ballot, proposes a two dollar per semester fee for the Union Program Council which organizes concerts. According to Bob Humphreys, spokesman for the referendum, which will provide the Council with $70,000 the referendum will lower student ticket prices, make better talent available to the Council and "guarantee a spring concert."

The council is a Recognized Student Organization which has presented various concerts in the past, most recently Elvis Costello and Randy Newman.

The category none of the above will appear on the presidential ballot. The category on the ballot to allow people to runs the elections, agreed to put this category on the ballot to allow people to show their displeasure with the candidates and not to "make a joke of the elections or whom they are pissed off at the SGA," said committee co-chair Marcy Levington.

Another view comes from candidates Bob Melia, who is supporting "none of the above". Melia said the category was a "disgust barometer" for students to register displeasure with the student government.

If "none of the above" wins the student government president will be chosen by a convention of the Senate and Area governments.

New humor magazine

The Last Marble, a humor magazine beginning publication next semester, will fulfill a need for satire in campus publications, according to future editors Andrew Jacobson and Mike Soltys.

Jacobson and Soltys feel at present no outlet exists for students interested in humor, whether reading or writing it. The magazine is to be a newspaper-type format. Material will include humorous articles, short stories, poems, cartoons, and anything else in a satirical vein.

The Last Marble needs writers, although anyone with an excess of creative ideas is urged to contact the editors at 546-6814.

SGA campaign on TV

Student Government Association presidential candidates will air their views tonight at 7:30 in a discussion on Channel three of the Community Cable Access TV. The Union Video Center, formerly the Student Video Project, will broadcast the show.

The one hour panel discussion will include Bill Sundstrom, Collegian-Editor-in-Chief, Brian DeLima, former Student Senate speaker, and Dan Salce, Collective Bargaining Negotiations Observer.

Vet school wins support

The proposed New England Veterinary School at Tufts University in Medford, Mass., has garnered the support of the New England Caucus of State Legislatures.

Lawmakers from the six New England states met at the Rhode Island Statehouse on Saturday and voted to ask their state legislatures to approrpiate money for the school.

The proposal was introduced by Massachusetts Sen. John Parker.

Although the size and intensity of Israel's advance into southern Lebanon was uncertain last night, local Middle East observers said they expect military action to be limited to that region.

"I have no reason to think otherwise," said UMass diplomat-in-residence William Dodd Brewer.

Brewer, who spent more than 20 years in the Middle East as a foreign diplomat, said the tragedies of yesterday's assault and the recent Al Fatah terrorist attack on a busload of Israeli tourists are the loss of lives and the loss of opportunities for a Mideast settlement.

Raids and retaliatory strikes have been "the bane" of U.S. attempts for a settlement in the area for the last 30 years, Brewer said.

Recent events will probably have some effect on Egypt-Israel relations, he said. They make it "difficult for (Egyptian President Anwar) Sadat to maintain his position that 'we really have got to try to keep in contact with the Israelis,' " he said.

Smith College professor Donna Divine said yesterday's Israeli strike was expected after the weekend attack that ended in 32 Israeli deaths. Divine teaches Middle East politics and leads seminars on the Arab-Israeli dispute.

"I don't think it's surprising," she said in a telephone interview. "I don't think it's atypical of the policies the Israelis have been following."

From the information available last night, Divine said she did not expect yesterday's assault to escalate from southern Lebanon and predicted it will have an "ephemeral effect" on relations in the Middle East.

Meanwhile, members of a UMass Zionist group expressed concern for friends and relatives living in Israel, and told the Collegian they would be willing to go to Israel if war broke out.

With some reports indicating it was the biggest Israeli military operation since the 1973 Middle East war, UMass sophomore Yitzhak Santis said he was worried about people he knows in Israel, particularly a cousin in the Israeli reserves.

"I'm really scared for my cousin, for the Israelis, for the Arab people, for everybody," he said. "Nobody wins a war; everyone loses."

Yitzhak and another member of the UMass Zionist Alliance, Elizabeth Kent, said they hope yesterday's action by Israel does not escalate into war, but if it did, maintained they would go to Israel to work on a kibbutz, day care centers, or wherever needed.

Kent spent four and a half months on a kibbutz by the Israel-Lebanon border in 1973.

Faculty Union considers action over pay raise

By CHRISTOPHER H. SCHMITT
Collegian Staff

Massachusetts Society of Professors Chairman Larry S. Roberts yesterday said the faculty union is considering taking legal action against the UMass administration over raises the administration recently gave to academic chairmen and department heads.

"We are considering the matter carefully," Roberts said. "We are consulting with legal staff."

Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery, who is also UMass senior vice president of faculty relations, said if the faculty union should challenge the pay raise, it would not be living up to an earlier administration-faculty poll agreement.

The administration last week granted the chairmen and department heads a 2¼ per cent salary increase. Faculty members at large received nothing. The increase was granted to all other state employees by the state legislature last year.

The agreement said a poll would be taken of the academic chairmen and department heads as to whether they desired to be included in the faculty union. The administration and the faculty would then petition the Massachusetts Labor Relations Commission to redefine the make-up of the faculty union if the chairmen voted against inclusion in the union. The chairmen presently are in the union. The administration has said the chairmen should not be in the union, while the union has said they should be.

The agreement to poll came after the administration refused to recognize the faculty union so long as the chairmen were included.

The results of the poll last month showed the chairmen voting 32 against inclusion, 27 for inclusion, and two for no agent.

Bromery said giving the chairmen raises is merely the administration's part of living up to the agreement.

Roberts, however, said the granting of the raises was not justified because the change in make-up of the union has not been formally made by the Massachusetts Labor Relations Commission.

"Our position is that the department chairmen are in the unit," he said. "It will stay that way until they (the labor commission) change the decision."

Bromery disagreed.

"We don't have to redefine the unit," Bromery said. "The two parties can redefine the unit. Its just like a contract."

Fuller, Ali to lead future ed seminar

By CLAUDE TETREAULT
Collegian Staff

Learning tomorrows, a conference sponsored by the UMass School of Education and directed by the Future Studies Program, will discuss and explore the possibilities and responsibilities for education in America.

The four day seminar scheduled for April 21, will be keynoted by Buckminster R. Fuller the legendary designer, philospher, poet and futurist. Fuller will be scholar-in-residence with the Future Studies Program of the UMass School of Education this spring.

Elise Boulding and Hazel Henderson, two leading woman futurists, will also be speakers at Learning Tomorrows. Boulding, a sociology professor at the University of Colorado, is the author of four books, including her most recent A View of Woman Through Time. She is a member of the advisory board at the UMass Future Studies Program.

Hazel Henderson, the co-director of the Princeton Center for Alternative Futures and member of the Future Studies Program here, will also speak at the conference. Dean of the School of Education Mario Fantini said of Boulding and Henderson:

"Dr. Boulding had led the way to her future in her cross-cultural study of such issues as the role of woman in society, family life and peace education. Hazel Henderson, meanwhile, has challenged traditional economic theories while championing a redefinition of human interpendence."

"Dr. Kenneth Clark, a renowned psychologist, is also scheduled to participate in the Learning Tomorrows Conference. Clark, a former president of the American Psychological Association, has done extensive research on the psychological effects of segregation of children, and is currently professor emeritus of psychology at the City College of New York.

Other participants include Jonathan Kogol, author of the famed "Death at Any Early Age". He will evaluate the impact alternative education can have on future learning. Roy Edelfelt of the National Education Association and William Smith, Teacher Corps director, will describe their work in American education.

In addition, Muhammad Ali will comment on new challenges to U.S. education based on his experience aiding inner-city school children and his involvement with the Black Muslim Faith.

These major speakers, along with Fantini, Harvey Scribner, Sidney Simon, Dwight Allen, and Gerald Wienstien, will present their latest thoughts on education and its impact on society.

In addition to the guest speakers, the public will participate in seminars, panel discussions, workshops, film screening games and simulations.

The Learning Tomorrows Conference, scheduled for April 18-21, corresponds with vacation in most Northeast schools. Teachers, administrators, parents, school board members, concerned students and general public are invited. It is expected that several thousand will participate.

Bill Hasson speaks about Roy Ayers cancellation

By ANGELA THOMAS
Black Affairs Editor

In light of the recent rumors circulating about the upcoming Roy Ayers concert, Bill Hasson, Program Coordinator of Student Activities, in an interview yesterday spoke about the reasons behind the cancellation of the concert.

Hasson began by saying, "The concert could have come off, the money was available."

According to Hasson who had been in frequent contact with the booking agency for Roy Ayers, the concert was scheduled for April 17, in the Fine Arts Center. The cost for obtaining Ayers would have been $4,000 with tickets for UMass students selling at prices of $4.00, $3.50, and $3.00.

To help sponsor the concert various Third World RSO groups were contacted. "Letters of commitment had been received from Norman Morgan of BCP, Gail Anderson representing Afro-Am, and Van Jackson, director of The Cultural Center," said hasson. Apparently caught in the red tape of business transactions, the money allocated to the concert by Third World organizations never went through the necessary category changes in time to be cleared by the Finance Committee that meets every Wednesday.

"We couldn't keep the agency waiting, they wanted a definite answer before the money was available, and you can't make an offer if you don't have the money," remarked Hasson.

Speaking of the upcoming Seventh Annual Black Musicians Concert to be held here during the weekend of March 31 thru April 1, Hasson spoke of the significance of such an event, "It is internationally recognized in the music world, and is written about in Japan, Europe, and Africa."

In reference of Dexter Gordon who will be performing April 1, in the Student Union Ballroom, Hasson commented that Gordon is "one of the outstanding saxophone players today."

This year represents the first time the Annual Black Musicians Concert will be held at three different colleges consisting of UMass, Amherst, and Hampshire College. The planners of the concert view this as an important beginning toward the promoting of community cooperative involvement.

Admission for the concert is free and is recommended by Hasson to arrive early for the scheduled performances. In the words of Hasson, the Seventh Annual Black Musicians Concert "promises to be a snap."

The II World Youth Festival to be held in Cuba, was the first order of business at the New Africa House Steering Committee meeting, held yesterday. The festival is to take place in Havana for nine days from July 28 to August 5, with 16,000 students from 90 countries throughout the world attending.

Approximately 400 delegates will be chosen from the Amherst-Springfield area. Other delegates will be chosen from the major cities in the U.S.

Encouragement is given to all women, political activists, athletes and young industrial workers between the ages of 15 and 35.

The cost to attend the festival is about $400 dollars, but the local festival committee based in Springfield, has asserted that no applicant will be turned down solely on the basis of money. The committee has assumed the responsibility of establishing a fund to aid in the cost of the trip. There is also a table set up in the campus on Thursdays from 9 a.m. to 12 p.m.

Racial slurs forces black teacher to resign

WINCHESTER, Mass. [UPI] — The Winchester school committee has accepted the resignation of Charlene Clinton, a black high school Spanish teacher who they claim was forced to quit due to racial taunts and students' misbehavior.

Ms. Clinton said Monday on one occasion a class at the predominantly white school repeatedly chanted a racial epithet at her while she tried to teach.

After the unanimous vote to accept her resignation, school committee chairman Robert S. Frank said it was "unfortunate" for any qualified professional teacher to have to resign from the system, because she had been subjected to racial slurs; and because disciplinary problems have gotten so out of hand that she could not effectively teach."

Ms. Clinton left her job last Wednesday, citing personal reasons. She said "a progression of incidents," both racial slurs and overall disciplinary problems, led to her resignation.

Frank said "We have to be careful that any teacher receives sufficient administrative support so that the teacher is not driven out ... by attacks or because of disciplinary problems."

But, another school department spokesman said Ms. Clinton had first asked "for more support" from the school administration before resigning.

Winchester is a predominantly white, upper-middle-class town of 22,000 residents.

Milk causes heated controversy over racism and sexism

Milk — traditionally the food of health and vitality — is at the center of a controversy over racism and sexism.

The Los Angeles Times reports a $1.5 million (dollar) ad campaign by the California milk Advisory Board uses television, magazines, radio and supermarket ads which say (quote) "The milk-white look is a trim, healthy body, a clear clean complexion." The ads reportedly contain numerous pictures of white women.

Consumer, minority and women's groups are charging that the ad campaign is sexist and racist and have called on Governor Jerry Brown and Agriculture Director Richard Rominger to stop the campaign.

Lawyers for Consumers Union, the San Francisco National Organization for Women, the California Citizen Action Group and Black Women Organized for Action are calling the ads (quote) "tasteless and insensitive." They say (quote) "It distinctly conveys the message the beauty, vitality and desirability belong only to white women."

A question of objectivity

By JULIE MELROSE
Collegian Women's Editor

Three years ago, members of the UMass Third World community occupied the Collegian office to express their dissatisfaction with the paper's handling of Third World news. They felt that Third World news was underrepresented in the paper, and voiced concern over material reflecting racist attitudes previously published in the Collegian.

Prior to the take-over, Black Affairs staff members attempted to sensitize others working at the Collegian to the needs of the Third World community, but the situation did not improve. The office occupation was a last resort. The major things the occupiers asked for were guaranteed space in the paper, adequate coverage of Third World news and increased awareness of and sensitivity to Third World issues on the part of everyone involved with the Collegian.

Racism, sexism and classism are three of the main issues currently being dealt with in American society. As Third World, women's and poor people's issues assume more prominence in the public eye, situations similar to the one described above are becoming increasingly common.

From a very early age, people growing up in America are given a clear message about what is or isn't "newsworthy." The history books used in American public schools are filled with the history of the "pale male." The author's choice of what is or isn't important enough to be included in those books contributes to our continuing sense of priority.

When people educated under this system begin working in the public media, they carry that sense of priority with them. Since they have been taught to believe that the actions of white males, (particularly those in positions of authority or power), are more significant than the actions of those who have not traditionally held power in this country (i.e. Third World persons, women, poor people), they will tend to give greater coverage to issues and events involving white men and white male-created institutions.

There has been a controversy in the media as to whether such a thing as "objectivity" exists. "Objective" is defined in the "Webster's New Collegiate Dictionary" as: "expressing or involving the use of facts without distortion by personal feelings or prejudice."

The fact is that those who work in the media are human beings subject to the prejudices of the society in which they live. "Objectivity" in any given society reflects the values of that society. Material deemed "objective" in a society biased against Third World persons, women and poor people may conceivably reflect racist, sexist and classist attitudes.

"Objective" media coverage as it stands now in America protects the status quo. If individuals working in the public media are genuinely concerned with the issues of racism, sexism and classism, then media coverage from Third World, feminist and lower-class perspectives will be accepted as valid alternatives to the "objective" media coverage prevalent in America today.

Super powers in conflict

By JAMES LEWIS
Black Affairs Assistant Editor

It looks as if the two world super powers — the United States and the Soviet Union — are finding it difficult to come to terms over issues in Africa and in the Middle East, this is causing a "siding up" of the world.

On one side there is what is left of the Arab Front; Saudia Arabia, Algeria, Syrians, Iraq, Iran, Libyans, Palestinians, South Yemenis, with Soviet Union backing, against Egypt, Israel, and the United States.

In Africa, the Soviets have already shipped over one billion dollars worth of military equipment to Ethiopia. It is estimated that there are from 11,000 to 20,000 troops from Cuba there also. The U.S. is selling and shipping arms to Somolia, probably over one billion dollars worth, also.

There is strife over Rhodesia. Britain and the U.S. are looking for the best way to leave the country without the Soviets taking over (Britain controls Rhodesia). It is clear that the super powers and their allies are vieing for control over the oil in the Middle East, and the new frontier of Africa.

There is also the issue of Anatoly Shcharansky, the jailed Jewish computer specialist of the Soviet Union. The Soviet Union is anti-Jewish, and this is a symbolic trial. Mr. Carter issued a personal statement in defense of Shcharansky last June 13th, and he made a direct warning to the Kremlin that the trial and a heavy sentence could prevent any ratification by the U.S. Senate of a new strategic arms treaty. The Soviet Union has completely ignored Carter.

If trends continue the way they are going, the diplomatic ties between the Soviet Union and the U.S. will be cut off. It could happen like this:

—Cancellation of planned visits to Moscow in the next few months by three U.S. Cabinet members: Secretaries of the Treasury, Health, Education and Welfare and Commerce.

—Elimination of some perpheral trimmings of detente such as joint scientific profects.

—No chance at all of any early Senate ratification of an arms control treaty.

—No shift in Congress toward easing the U.S. law that restricts Soviets access to U.S. trade markets.

Dr. Zibigniew Brezinski, the U.S. national security advisor was quoted recently as saying "The fact of the matter is that if we used all of our nuclear weapons and the Russians used all of their nuclear weapons, about 10 per cent of humanity would be killed. Now this is a disaster.... But.... it's not the end of humanity... (200,000,000 Americans and 200,000,000 Russians equal about 10 per cent of humanity)."

Brezinski did ask for a 47 billion dollar increase for the U.S. military. Presently, the U.S. defense budget is about 125 billion.

It should be clear how close WWIII was when the Soviet Union revealed the missiles on the island of Cuba. The attitudes of these leaders and the struggle for control of Africa and the Middle East should be watched and noted.

Progressive film series presents Harvest: 3000 Years

The progressive film series is sponsored each semester by the commuter collective (area government for commuter students at the University of Massachusetts in Amherst). The series offers the community a change from the usual fare to be found at the university.

By offering films that deal with relevant social issues, we hope to help broaden peoples' perspectives as well as stimulate discussion.

All films will be shown in Thompson 104 on Tuesday evenings at 8 p.m. [except where noted]

All films are free of charge

If you have any comments, criticisms, or questions please stop by and see us at 404 Student Union or call at: 545-2145.

HARVEST: 3000 YEARS, set in contemporary Ethiopian tells the real life story of a peasant family's struggle for survival under virtually fuedal conditions on the farm of a wealthy landowner. The films pace and visual style is geared to the rhythms of daily life, providing a sensitive, almost anthropological portrayal of the details and drama of everyday reality. A tragedy which disrupts the daily routine of the family (comprised of three generations, including a teen-aged son and daughter who contest the traditional social roles expected of them), the tyrannical role of the landowner, and the visionary but revolutionary impact of a local 'madman' — all are dramatized with amazing forcefulness.

The film Harvest: 3000 Years will be shown on Tuesday, March 28, in Thompson 104 beginning at 8 p.m.

Andrew Young reverses stand

UNITED NATIONS [UPI] — U.N. Ambassador Andrew Young, in a sharp reversal of his own stand, said Tuesday Rhodesian Prime Minister's "internal agreement" with black moderates had "marked some progress" toward acceptable black majority rule and independence in that country.

Young told the U.N. Security Council that "we must examine the so-called internal settlement dispassionately" and said the United States was ready to join Britain and all parties in the Rhodesian conflict in a new effort to shore up the "inadequacies" of the Smith pact.

On March 3, Smith signed an agreement with three black moderates calling for a form of black majority rule, but with a white minority veto, starting Dec. 31 — a pact that has drawn criticism from black African and other Third World nations.

Young himself initially said the Smith agreement, reached without representation from the black guerrilla Patriotic Front, would pit "black on black" in civil war.

When British Foreign Secretary David Owen said the Smith plan represented a "significant first step," the American accused the British of a "sell-out."

But the official Washington-London position is neither acceptance nor rejection of the Smith agreement, and Young's address to the Council Tuesday indicated he had moved back to that middle-of-the-road line.

"Compared with the kinds of settlement proposals which Smith has entertained in the past," Young said, "the Salisbury agreement marks some progress."

"We must not resign ourselves that the birth of a new nation must be bloody and violent," he said. "We must take a longer perspective."

"We must examine the so-called internal settlement dispassionately."

But, he added, "I am the first to recognize that anything Mr. Smith negotiates merits the most careful scrutiny."

Young also said he was "willing to credit good faith" to the three black moderates who negotiated the Salisbury agreement with Smith.

Leaflet hoax revealed

By K. STEPHEN SHAIN
Fine Arts Editor

In what appears to be the best organized hoax in recent UMass history, hundreds of leaflets advertising an alleged "Cuban Cultural Night," to be held on Saturday, March 16 (sic) in Grayson dormitory, have been circulated throughout the campus community. Denying any connection with the leaflet or the event, Venceremos Brigade leadership claims that the appearance of such a leaflet on campus is, in itself, an attempt to discredit their organization and undermine its credibility.

According to Joyce Chestnut, Head of Residence in Grayson House, no such event has been scheduled for either this Saturday nor for the sixteenth as advertised in the flyer. Inundated by phone calls, by curious students seeking verification on the date and Brigade members wondering about the validity of the leaflet, Joyce claims that if such an affair were planned for Grayson recreation room, she would in all certainty know about it.

Attempting to attract students to the event, the perpetrators of this hoax have advertised the availability of food, wine, and beer as well as a performance by an unnamed Afro-Cuban band for a 75 cent admission price.

Students are warned that the "Cuban Cultural Night" planned for Grayson House will not happen and are urged to report any distribution points or personalities connected with the leaflet to the Collegian.

Country Club can still exclude women

[HERSAY NEWS SERVICE] — The Burning Tree Country Club, one of the nation's most prestigious all-male clubs, can legally continue to bar women from its membership even though it receives special tax breaks from the state of Maryland.

Maryland's Attorney General ruled last week that the club, which has had the patronage of former President Gerald Ford, former Attorney General John Mitchell, and some of the nation's biggest corporate leaders, receive tax breaks in the form of reduced property tax assessments. The tax breaks are being withdrawn by the state from clubs that are found to discriminate against blacks and other minorities.

According to the Attorney General, however, the clubhouse would incur considerable expense in trying to build accomodations to serve both sexes. The Attorney General added that the Burning Tree Club, unlike other clubs, "does not play host to women at any other time or any other place." The Attorney General said that the Club's pro shop, separate from the clubhouse, allows entry to members' wives only by appointment on specific December days prior to Christmas.

Burning Tree, according to its own history of operation, has deleted the "male" membership requirement from its constitution "to register its freedom from bias toward the dears."

The bastion of the all-male club was breached only once about 23 years ago when a small airplane traveling over the Montgomery County countryside developed trouble and was forced to land on the golf course.

School film boosts 'play' with rapists

[HERSAY NEWS SERVICE] — Despite vocal protests from parents and women's groups, the police in Ottawa, Canada, will continue showing high school girls a film advocating "playing along" with rapists.

The Ontario provincial Attorney-General has told the protesters that, "In summary, the film of which you complain is entertaining but impractical and possibly dangerous in its recommendations." But because it does not break any laws, the Attorney General claims, he can't take action.

The Ottawa Rape Crisis Center has attempted to counteract the film in question by sending speakers into classrooms where it is shown. They do not, however, have sufficient staff to cover all screenings.

Protester Rita Rosenfeld charged that "the Ottawa police have in their possession at least two other anti-rape films, which they claim are not as 'entertaining' as the one we're objecting to."

Meany answers queries on unions

[HERSAY NEWS SERVICE] — AFL-CIO President George Meany was asked at the huge labor organization's mid-winter sessions why the 34-member AFL-CIO executive council is all male. He replied that the unions "somehow or other do not come up with women at the top of the structure. They don't come up with a woman president."

Meany said that many unions with large female memberships tend to choose male leaders. He added, however, that even though he himself supports the Equal Rights Amendment, he would not support special efforts to get a woman elected to the executive council.

Meany explained that to him that "is not the democratic way."

'Strangler' joke results in suit

[HERSAY NEWS SERVICE] — A Los Angeles woman has filed a $1 million damage suit against Los Angeles officers who, she says, frightened her by telling her they were the Hillside Stranglers.

Thirteen women have so far been strangled and brutally murdered by what police believe may be one man, or two working as a team which has become known as the Hillside Stranglers. Police believe the strangler, or stranglers, may be even posing as police to capture victims.

Beth Anne Shannon stated in her claim that last December two officers were driving her around Los Angeles looking for a man she said resembled a composite drawing of the Strangler.

Shannon says when she asked the officers to let her out of the car, one officer turned to her and told her, "Well, I hate to tell you, but it's us." The other officer, she says, remained silent.

Shannon says she was so frightened by the officers' behavior, she jumped out of the car and returned only after the police radio convinced her the men were bona fide officers.

One officer received a reprimand and the loss of two days' salary for the incident. The other officer was not disciplined.

Shannon, supported in her claim by the National Organization for Women, says she has suffered "emotional injury," and both personal and job-related problems since the incident.

NOW, in the meantime, has demanded that the two officers be suspended pending the completion of a sensitivity course, or dismissed if they refuse to take the course. NOW says that the two officers received merely a "handslap" for a "joke which has now mushroomed into an insult to all of the women in the city of Los Angeles."

Divorce favored in Irish Republic

[HERSAY NEWS SERVICE] — Contraception and divorce are becoming heated topics in the Irish Republic.

Ninety-six per cent of the populationin the republic is Roman Catholic, but 42 per cent of those Catholics favor legalized divorce and 25 per cent support legalizing contraception. The Irish government and the Catholic Church have long opposed any liberalization of existing laws.

The government recognizes divorces which are granted outside the country, but in a strange catch-22, will not allow divorced persons to remarry in Ireland. Such remarriages are considered bigamous and the resulting offspring illegitimate.

The government, oddly enough, also bans the sale and distribution of contraceptives in Ireland, but will allow them to be imported for use. Currently, some 100,000 Irish women are said to be using contraceptives.

Sexist job titles replaced in index

[HERSAY NEWS SERVICE] — The U.S. Department of Labor has just published a revised edition of the Dictionary of Occupational Titles which replaces the sexist job titles in the last 1965 edition.

Instead of "linemen" or "foremen" or "workmen," for instance, industrial and technological companies should now be hiring "supervisors" and "operators."

Such titles as "scrub woman" or "cigarette girl" have now been changed to "cleaner" or "cigarette vendor."

The new Dictionary of Occupational Titles is designed to make it easier for employers to hire women for all jobs, and to make it more difficult to discriminate in pay between men and women with the same job descriptions.

Chinese woman joins Peking assn.

[HERSAY NEWS SERVICE]

A 105-year-old woman named Jan Ta-Kou became the oldest parliamentarian in the world by taking part in the Fifth National People's Congress in Peking last week.

Jan Ta-Kou is the chairman of an association of poor and middle class peasants in the Kwangsi Region near the Vietnam border. She made the journey to Peking by plane.

Said Jan Ta-Kou upon her arrival in Peking "In the old society I suffered wretched poverty. Today, elected deputy at over 100 years of age, I have come to Peking to see our perceptive leader Chairman Hua Kuo-Feng and to give my opinion on the affairs of state."

K-gartens expand despite less kids

[HERSAY NEWS SERVICE]

The U.S. Census Bureau reports that the number of children enrolled in America's kindergartens and nursery schools has increased dramatically over the last decade, despite a decline in the actual number of children under the age of five.

The report shows that the number of children aged three to five declined from 12.2 million in 1967 to 9.7 million in 1976, while the enrollement in kindergarten and nursery school increased from 3.9 million to 4.8 million.

The Census Bureau says the sharp rise in small children going to nursery school is due to the increased number of Mothers in the Labor Force and a rise in the number of women who want to pursue interests outside the home.

Vegetarian females show less cancer

Doctor U.D. Register, Chairperson of the Nutrition Department of Loma Linda University, has found that women who are vegetarians are much less likely to contract breast cancer than are their meat-eating counterparts.

Register studied the health of more than 24,000 vegetarian women. During an eight-year period, he found that deaths from breast cancer in California were 28 per cent less for vegetarians than for women in the state who ate a traditional Western diet.

The Cancer Research Journal reportedly corraborates Register's studies in a table which outlines deaths of vegetarian and meat-eating women. The incidence of death due to breast cancer is markedly higher in the Journal's outlines for women who ate meat.

New contract may end miners strike

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Coal operators and United Mine Workers negotiators agreed yesterday on a tentative settlement of the 99-day-old coal strike five days after a federal judge ordered miners back to work under the Taft-Hartley law.

United Mine Workers President Arnold Miller and chief industry negotiator Nicholas Camicia jointly announced the agreement — the third reached by the negotiators during the long strike — in mid-afternoon after both sides met for three hours and lunched together.

The main bargaining talks recessed on Sunday while representatives of the two sides broke into smaller groups to work on individual issues. They remained in telephone contact on Monday and resumed the fullscale talks yesterday.

"We think we have a package that would be very good for the union, very good for the country," Camicia said. President Carter was described by his chief spokesman as "pleased and encouraged" by the agreement.

But reactions among the union locals, who have virtually ignored last Friday's court injunction ordering them back to work under the Taft-Hartley law, was mixed.

Miller said he would call the union bargaining council to Washington to start the lengthy ratification procedure. UMW general counsel Harrison Combs said he expected the council to meet Wednesday.

If the council approves, the settlement must be ratified by the 160,000 union members — a process which could take 10 days.

The council turned down one agreement with the Bituminous Coal Operators Association, and the rank and file voted by better than 2-to-1 against a revised proposal.

Neither Miller nor the BCOA revealed details of the new settlement but sources close to the talks said the miners won several favorable revisions of the rejected proposals:

—Elimination of a work stabilization clause that would have imposed penalties against miners who lead wildcat strikes, reinstating the 1974 contract language which calls for an arbitration board to review any such discipline.

—Lowering, to a maximum of $200-a-year for working miners and $150-a-year for UMW pensioners, the amount to be paid for doctor's visits and drugs under the health care plan. The rejected contract called for annual deductibles of between $300 and $700. Hospitalization costs would remain entirely covered by the plan.

—A wage increase of $2.40 an hour over the three-year period, boosting the average miner's wage from $7.80 to $10.20. The figures were the same as in the earlier proposal.

—An immediate increase in pensions for miners under the 1950 Pension Trust to $275 a month, instead of phasing the hike over three years.

"We've been in the process, since Feb. 6, of giving back," said an industry spokesman.

The industry did win union agreement to a production incentive clause allowing individual mining companies to pay bonuses to miners who dig more coal than a set target, with approval of each affected union local required.

The agreement was reached without the presence of government mediators. Both sides had been angered by administration hints individual mining companies should negotiate separate contracts with union districts and locals.

In Ohio, union officers were critical of the incentive clause.

"I don't think the incentive clause should be in there whatsover," said Ken Conoway, president of a local at Powhatan Point, Ohio. "It will mean more injuries and more fatalities because miners would be getting paid to take an extra chance."

"I don't think it's going to go," said Frank Dwyer, vice president of UMW Local 1619 in Indiana, Pa. "I really don't because we had a good insurance policy — probably the best that any working man had or one of the best — and negotiating on a lower payment of our contribution to insurance policy is not

"I don't think it's going to go," said Frank Dwyer, vice president of UMW local 1619 in Indiana, Pa. "I really don't becase we had a good insurance policy - probably the best that any working man had or one of the best - and negotiating on a lower payment of our contribution to insurance policy is not really the whole thing."

Greenberg discusses Jews in America

By DIANE BURAK
Collegian Staff

Joanne Greenberg, author of I Never Promised You a Rose Garden, presented her views on Jewish identity, mental illness, and deaf education last night in Thompson 104.

Speaking to an audience of 200, Greenberg explained the title of her presentation, "passing the heritage from hand to hand like a hot potato and wincing between the toss and the catch" referred to the position of modern Jews in America.

She said she is "punished" because there is not a large concentration of Jews where she lives near her present home in Golden, Colorado. "I am punished by feeling I am the last Jew," she said.

Greenberg said she would protest at the proposed Nazi march in Skokie, Illinois, if permitted by the canon law. She said she would go to support the survivors of the holocaust who live in Skokie, but would not go with any violence in mind.

Greenberg said "what had been lost (in the holocaust) is something we haven't paid attention to..." The Jewish people she continued, have "never dealt with the joy... that was unlived," and the songs that were unsung. She said it is up to modern Jews to sing these songs.

At one point during the lecture, Greenberg sang "Meetings", one of a group of songs she wrote for a county mental health association.

When asked about I Never Promised You a Rose Garden, Greenberg replied that when she left the hospital where she was institutionalized in 1951, "I swore I would never have anything to do with a mental hopsital again." She said in those days "you had to lie" about being in a mental institution. "I faked it."

She said her writing was prompted by a response to a Jew in America who had to go to trial in Jerusalem. She said all of the covering up of the holocaust "came up like an undigested bad dinner." An article stating that the holocaust Jews were passive and that the holocaust was a response to a death wish provoked her anger. She said her book is the most autobiographical of her novels, but added "it's a work of fiction.. of compression."

She said there is a confusion between Deborah, the main character in the book and herself. She said she receives many letters from mental patients "who want more than I can give them." She said the identification is a "terrible thing" and she suffers "like hell" from those letters.

When asked about the movie version of her novel, she replied, "How does the shin feel about the foot that kicks it?" She said she gave the movie a "C" for effort. She told the audience she did not receive money for either the movie or the song that carried her original title.

Greenberg's lecture was translated into sign language. She recently co-authored a paper about problems in educating deaf children and said, "What is happening in mainstreaming is wrong." She felt it was wrong to put a deaf child, who was not prescreened, into a public school system.

She said it was wrong to put all the children into public schools when there are trained counselors and teachers in schools for the deaf. Greenberg brought up cases of children who can't lipread and those who enter classrooms not "prepared to do anything but laugh at them."

She said she has positive feelings about being a Jewish woman and was never taught to look down on the skills of housewifery. She said "Judaism is what goes on in the house, really."

She said her grandmother told her "This is the way it is. Woman is the footstool of a man. A man speaks, a woman listens.... Never come to the table with a sour face...." she said with a laugh.

★Bromery on CC garage

The UMass community composed of administrators, faculty, staff and students, are interdependent on each other, and must therefore work together to achieve goals, Bromery said.

Bromery said the problem of bus service funding was not due to the ineffective management on the part of the students. He said the students assume the greater part of the financial burden on campus because students and parents pay taxes which go towards funding the University.

The state may pay 10 million dollars toward the Campus Center, which Bromery said would lower the campus center fee.

The chancellor emphasized the University must deal the garage issue because the problem will only worsen in time.

★Telephone

"Obviously," said Rider, "if someone calls a number and it just keeps ringing, the caller will assume that the person they are calling just isn't there. The caller has no way of knowing that the number has been cut off."

Rider said MassPIRG was not aware of the UMass situation until hearing about it from the Collegian. He did say that this is the type of issue that MassPIRG and its affiliated telephone lobby, Telephone Consumer Action Group (TelCAG) get involved with.

Flynt's condition turns to critical

ATLANTA (UPI) — Hustler magazine owner Larry Flynt, shot by a sniper March 4, took a turn for the worse yesterday, and his doctors listed him in critical condition and hooked him up to a respirator.

In a prepared statement, doctors at Emory University Hospital in Atlanta said Flynt's "infection and the deteriorating pulmonary status continue as his most threatening problems."

Flynt and his attorney, Gene Reeves, were hit from ambush in Lawrenceville, 30 miles from Atlanta, as they strolled to the Gwinnett County courthouse where Flynt was on trial for distributing obscene material.

Both men were taken to Button Gwinnett Hospital, where the 47-year-old Reeves remains in guarded condition.

Flynt, 35, underwent two operations at Button Gwinnett to repair his stomach wounds and was later transferred to Emory for a third operation to remove a bullet and bone chips.

Nerves in Flynt's spinal column were damaged by the bullets, resulting in paralysis from the mid-thigh down. Doctors said the sex-magazine publisher has less than a 50 percent change of regaining use of his legs.

Since last Thursday, Flynt has remained in serious condition. Monday, doctors said Flynt was trying to fight off an intraabdominal infection and sepsis (blood-borne bacteria), and he had contracted pneumonia. They also said Flynt required blood transfusions to combat gastrointestinal bleeding.

Tom Sellers, a spokesman for the Emory physicians, said Tuesday that Flynt's gastrointestinal bleeding "has been controlled by arteriographic occlusion of the bleeding vessel."

Sellers said arteriographic occlusion was an elaborate internal X-ray technique used to identify the source of the bleeding.

But because of Flynt's "diminished pulmonary status, he has been placed on mechanical ventilation (a respirator) for pulmonary support," Sellers said.

Flynt's vital signs remain stable, Sellers said.

Gwinnett County Police Chief John Crunkleton issued an appeal for information leading to the arrest of the assailant.

The chief, who said police have had no major break in the case, said authorities are particularly interested in talking with people in the vicinity of the downtown Lawrenceville shooting over a week ago.

Chem plant explodes

STEUBENVILLE, Ohio [UPI] — An explosion and fire ripped through a chemical plant yesterday, spewing a cloud of chlorine gas cloud into the downtown section and forcing thousands to flee.

At least 54 persons, including 24 city firemen, were overcome.

Two of the firemen were in intensive care at Ohio Valley Hospital.

The fire was brought under control about four hours later, and the Ohio Environmental Protection Agency had an emergency response team at the site monitoring the air.

"We're not sure how intense the chlorine is," said Ken Schultz of the EPA. "Some of the chlorine was in a powder form and was being washed into storm sewers and some of it no doubt burned."

About 3,000 persons were ordered from the area.

The police had a cruiser with a loudspeaker going up and down the streets telling people to get out of the area. Nearby schools, homes and businesses were emptied.

Housing letter to Attorney General

To the Editor: an open letter to the State Attorney General's Office

Pursuant with our telephone conversations on 3-13-78, I am writing to request that the Attorney General's Consumer Protection Division initiate an investigation of the sub-standard living [dormitory] conditions existing at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst. It is the contention of students at the University that conditions exist in violation of state law, specifically Article II of the State Sanitary Code: Minimum Standards of Human Habitation, and that among these conditions are violations which severely and immediately endanger the lives and well-being of students. We further contend that as consumers in this Commonwealth of housing which is sub-standard, with regards to the aforementioned state law, we are entitled to the swift and deliberate efforts of the Consumer Protection Division in investigating, analyzying, and forwarding the results of such investigation to the proper authority[s] in the Commonwealth.

Specifically, the students contend that the following Code violations exist: Violation of Regulations 3.1, Sec. B, subsections a and b, 3.2, 6.1, 6.2, 7.1, Sec. B, 7.2, Sec. C, 7.5, 7.6, 7.7, 9.3, Secs. A and B, 11.1, 11.2, 11.3, 13.1, Sec. A, Subsections a,b,c, and d, 13.1 Sec B, subsections a,b,c, and d, 13.1, Sec. C, 14.2, 14.3, 14.4, 14.5, Sec. A, subsection b, 14.6, Sec. A, subsection b, 15.1, 15.2, 15.3, 15.6, 15.9, 15.10, 17.1, 29.1, 29.2, Secs., a,b,c,f,g,h,k,o,p,t.

The students contend also that since their exists no local board of health as required in the Code which is willing to assume jurisdiction for the premises of the University, the Consumer Protection Division should assist the students as consumers of public housing in their efforts to establish jurisdictional authority for said premises.

If you have any questions concerning this request for an investigation, please feel free to call me at [413] 545-1995, at UMass, Amherst. Thank you for your efforts regarding this matter.

Commendations for IWW work

To the Editor:

I would like to thank the University community for its support and participation in making International Women's Week a success for the second year. Many students, staff, and people from the community contributed energy and support to organizing and running the workshops and special events.

Special thanks to the many area newspapers and radio stations who did an excellent job of dispersing information and covering all of the programs. I can't help but think that it is unfortunate that what went on in media last week was special and not normal. The Collegian articles covering the workshop topics were very informative and relevant to all of us, men and women. It has been brought to my attention that the women's staff is now struggling to maintain some priority on space throughout the year. I support this idea not just for the Collegian but in all areas of student activities programming until there is a balance in the presentation of women's and men's culture.

Title IX imposes legal responsibility on the University to recruit, employ and promote the victims of discrimination, both directly through employment and indirectly through the programming, services, educational events, and resources of the complex.

International Women's Week is definitely a good beginning providing valuable resources and new ideas which should lead to constructive changes and more equality.

Support women's news page

To the Editor:

Everywoman's Center and the Women's Studies Program urge the Board of Editors of the Collegian to improve the Collegian's coverage of women's news by allocating one full ad-free page of the Collegian per day to the Women's News Department of the Collegian, with that department having full control of that space. The women of the Women's News Department of the Collegian have worked hard and long to insure that adequate and accurate reporting of women's news and events appear in the main body of the Collegian, and have been continually frustrated by the lack of support, which sometimes becomes overt hostility, on the part of the Collegian toward these efforts. It is essential that the Collegian recognize, by the allocation of this space to the Women's News Department, the importance of coverage of events of interest to women, and the reporting of news and information relating specifically to the women on this campus. As we are directly concerned, in our work at the University, with the quality of life and education available to the women who attend the University, we see daily evidence of women's needs for information about the issues affecting them and the resources on campus and in the community which are available to them. The Collegian's allocation of this page to women's news would be one way of beginning to make this information easily accessible to the women on campus. As a student newspaper the Collegian has a responsibility to publish news which affects directly the women students on this campus, and to make a clear statement, through the allocation of space, of their commitment to women's news.

We urge all students who share our concern to attend the next Board of Editors meeting, Wednesday at 7:00 in the Collegian Conference and voice their support.

Room choosing letter corrected

To the Editor:

I would like to correct some misinformation that appeared in yesterday's Letters to the Editor. The topic of the letter was the new room choosing policy and how it affects people signing up for dorm rooms for the fall semester.

Room choosing will be April 5. If you wish to stay in the same dorm, you merely sign up with your Head of Residence. The HR will assign you to the room you choose on the spot. If, however, you want to move to another dorm, the process this year is a little different than before.

Every Head of Residence will have housing preference forms. If you want to move to another dorm you pick up a form from any HR and fill it out. The form lets you pick your top three dorm choices. It also asks you whether you want a roommate who smokes or not. After the form is filled out you can return the form to the Housing Office in person or by mail. Boxes will also be placed in the Dining Commons. The forms will be processed by the Housing Office and returned to you, with your next semesters dorm circled. At that point it is up to the HR in the dorm you have been assigned to place you and your roommate. If two people, who are in the same dorm want to live together then they just tell the HR of their plans and they are assigned to the same room. This aspect is similar to the current process.

The advantage to this new system, and the main reason I support the change, is that it provides each student who wants to move into a new dorm with an equal chance of getting in. In the past the system was not fair to people trying to get into popular dorms and those dorms which were recently renovated because current residents would literally recruit their friends to sign up as their roommates. In doing so students who weren't "in the know" would be excluded from the dorm of their choice unfairly. In effect if you didn't know someone, or have pull, you were "redlined" out of your favorite dorm, even if you signed up first.

Under the new system, if there are 30 spaces in dorms, and 25 people who want to get in, you're golden. If there are 40 people who want to get in, then the 30 people who get in are selected by lot. This is especially fair to freshmen, who haven't had the time to build up the contacts necessary to succeed under the "good ole boy" system we used to have.

As for the weak arguments presented yesterday for the maintaining the old system, I can only conclude that the author has a friend somewhere.

Another insulted by 'Wally Dorf'

To the Editor:

I found the March 9 Wally Dorf comic strip totally disgusting. It was an insult to my dignity and to all women that such a sexist comic strip was allowed to be printed — especially during Women's Week. To imply that the typical woman can substitute unnatural sex for the art of making love is degrading. Personally, I think that Rob Ranney should "play with" and "arouse" his imagination into creating more decent and intelligent sources of humor.

Kathy Rochester
Janet Bell

UPC seeks referendum support

To the Editor:

In the SGA elections today and tomorrow, a referendum question will determine the future of the Union Program Council [the UPC]. The referendum seeks to fund UPC sponsored concerts and services directly through a separate fee on the semester bill.

We at the UPC feel this referendum is very much in the student interest. It would guarantee funding of all future Spring Concerts. It would lower student ticket prices for other UPC events in the Fine Arts Center, the Cage, etc. With a known budget we will be able to secure those top-name acts which plan their tours well in advance.

The Union Program Council is attempting to become the production organization for musical events on campus. Our new service Cross Campus Concerts will offer free production expertise to student groups planning shows and concerts.

We want you to have all the music you can handle. Guaranteed funding means guaranteed concerts. Vote YES on the referendum.

The Union Program Council

Apparel article in poor taste

To the Editor:

In the March 13 Collegian, there appeared an article on student appeal. This particular article dealt with the various majors, stereotyping the students and describing whatever fashions were supposedly "in" in each of the various majors. It was apparently supposed to be humorous satire. However, it sadly missed its mark.

One statement I particularly took offense with was "Anyone you can smell before you can see is probably from Stockbridge." In one sentence the writer managed to insult the entire student body of the Stockbridge School. A public apology is probably in order.

Simply being on the staff of the Collegian does not automatically make a person an "expert" in the field s-he writes about, whether it's sports, politics, or, in this case, fashion. Nor does it entitle writers to pass judgements on various segments of the student population.

One wonders why the Collegian does not show a little more discretion in choosing the material it prints. Not to practice censorship, of course, but to let its writers know that what they write may be offensive to people who have done nothing to deserve such insults.

Furthermore, I suggest that the writer of the article in question keep his-her articles to him-herself until that time when s-he can produce articles which are worthy of being printed in a newspaper of the collegiate level.

Marilyn L. Vennell

Poster pulling by presidentials

To the Editor:

It is apparent to anyone who glances at the ground that competing SGA presidential candidacies are tearing down each others posters. A good move, some might say, for their propaganda is irrelevant and an eyesore. Tear them all down.

A thoroughly understandable sentiment, but if we dig a little deeper, the implications of the candidates actions are ugly. They are ripping down rivals' posters because they are willing to do anything to win. This ends - justifies - the - means - mentality demonstrates that they hold the students on this campus in implicit contempt, for they believe that their own precious political futures are more important than the students right to make an informed decision on the basis of reading all the flyers.

This mentality will influence their actions as president. If as candidates they are willing to sacrifice students' interests to their own selfish purposes, they will likely continue to do so if elected president.

Such childlike behavior in the scramble to become child-king is revealing. Truly their actions speak louder than their words. The candidates have distinguished themselves by their utter lack of mature behavior. None of them deserve to be elected.

Julie Rubin

Experiences at Mine Workers' rally

By KYLE HOFFMAN

On Friday, March 10, at 8 p.m., I was one of twelve people who boarded a van headed for Charleston, West Virginia. Not your usual weekend jaunt, I was travelling with the Revolutionary Communist Youth Brigade to attend a rally for the coal miners. The rally had been called for on Thursday by the Miners' Right to Strike Committee to show that, contrary to media-based belief, the miners are not isolated from other workers in the country. Despite having only two days notice, and the refusal of most media to publicize the event, there were several hundred of us, from Denver, Detroit, Chicago, Pittsburgh, Kalamazoo, Amherst and Boston, New York, New Jersey, the Midwest and the Southeast.

Assembling in front of the Federal Building in Charleston at 2:30 Saturday afternoon, we began our march. The UMW led us. They covered their faces with bandanas to conceal their identities, as it would have been worth their jobs and their freedom to have been arrested. The Taft-Hartley law is in effect, and it is illegal to encourage the work stoppage. Joining in this illegal activity with great spirit came the Steelworkers' Union, the United Autoworkers, the Electrical Workers' Union, the National United Workers' Organization (NUWO), the Unemployed Workers' Union. Was this what the media meant by lack of support? The RCYB and other support groups brought up the end of the march. We marched four abreast around the block to rally in front of the jail. The police followed silently as we chanted. "Jimmy Carter, you can't hide! We know you're on the bosses' side!" "Cool off? Hell no! Taft-Hartley's gotta go!" "The hell with the ruling class! We are the working class!" "A victory for the miners is a victory for us all!"

T.V. cameras were rolling. AP and UPI buzzed along the sides. We held our signs high: "The Steelworkers' Union says: 'Victory to the miners! No sell-out in '78!" "Students say: 'The hell with Taft-Hartley!" A spokesman for the Right to Strike Committee addresses the crowd. "Brothers and sisters! The Taft-Hartley law has been invoked in what President Carter calls 'the national interest'. The nation is made up of working people, and any national interest must be in their interest. And it does not benefit the workers of this country to be ground down and sold out!" The workers assembled around him cheered. "The media have been telling us the miners are selfish, against the rest of the country, and that nobody supports us. If that were true, we wouldn't be here today to fight. This strike is no longer just the miners against BCOA. With workers supporting us around the country, it's become something else: the working class against the capitalists who would drive us down! And I think we should give a big cheer to show our solidarity!!" Banners and fists waved, and we cheered as hard as we could. People drove by, honking their horns, waving their fists, and cheering their support also.

The march continued. The consensus among the supporting unions and groups was clear: The miners have seen National Guard and the Taft-Hartley Act before, and that's never made them work yet. "What it comes down to is: the companies need us, but we don't need them!" The old slogans still hold. You can't mine coal with bayonets. They'll let Taft dig it, and Hartley can haul it.

As the march neared its destination, the solidarity of the people became more and more clear. We were not just desperate women, men, Blacks, Anglos, Hispanics, Iranians, Chinese. We were a solid block of support for the miners, their families, and the working class over the world. The feeling that ran through amazed me. The media had given me a picture of southern "rednecks" who hated college kids and Communists. Yet there I was, a college kid marching with the Communist Youth Brigade. The speakers from the miners and NUWO told us of the inevitable workers' revolution, when the capitalist class will be overthrown. Funny how the "Commies" blended in so well with everyone else.

The march moved to the local high school so there could be more openness without fear of arrest and identification. Press coverage was halted. The supporting unions and groups spoke and gave the miners their spiritual support and financial donations.

The media coverage of the miners' strike has been almost unanimously on the companies' side. The press has been telling us that the miners are just a scrappy bunch of troublemakers hated by the rest of the nation's workers. This rally was important in that it proved the media wrong. Media misrepresentation of the strike includes lack of coverage altogether with regards to positive reaction to the miners. Although AP and UPI reporters and photographers covered the rally from beginning to end, the Boston Globe printed only one picture of one miner, and the New York Times ran one small article. They ignored the fact that this was a major event attended by upwards of five hundred people who weren't miners. the Collegian disregarded the rally completely.

Misrepresentation also includes an inadequate explanation of some of the Union demands. In their own words, some of the miners' key demands are:

1) The right to strike, with no binding or compulsory arbitration.

2) Medical benefits and pensions: here the miners are fighting, not for something new, but for something they've lost, and something they deserve. Medical expenses used to be covered in the contract; now the miners must pay. No contract is acceptable which ties pensions and benefits to the tonnage or person-hours of production. Disabled miners and widows must be full pensions.

3) Wages: A hefty wage increase that includes a cost of living allowance that keeps up with inflation. Mining is the most dangerous job in this country, and the miners must be paid accordingly.

4) Safety: It is imperative that miners be allowed to refuse unsafe work, without fear of losing their jobs.

Safety committees must be comprised of miners themselves. We must realize the bias of the media. "All the news that's fit to print" really means all the news that the bosses see fit to have printed.

The decision of the rank and file is to not go back to work, but to fight until they win. When I boarded the van Friday night, I had no real idea of what was going on down in West Virginia. Now I realize that the miners are strong and sure, and that nationwide support of their struggle and strike does exist.

Can't vote for anyone

frank denton

A rash of nascent administrators has materialized once again. The student government assembly is beset by the presidential hopes of journeyperson politicians. And once again, we are wielding a rubber stamp of approval.

Campus politics have been homogenized into a bland blend of warmed over issues. This rechauffe is primarily compromise. Were it a compromise of reconciliation between two antagonists, it would be somewhat palatable. However, our "leaders" have chosen moral compromise.

One cannot, on this campus, cater to every wheeze, hack, and snuffle who happens to be running an RSO group. One cannot even reconcile most of the RSO groups within themselves, much less with the Student Senate. A politician who fails to acknowledge his-her inadequacy at doing so is deceiving some of us.

I realize deception and bottled speciousness are the standard stock in trade of recondite rhetoric. Despite this, I resent any implication that my interest can be adequately served by an individual who claims to commiserate with half of liberal Amherst, as well as the Amherst Women's League for the Local Preservation of Young Albino Weasels.

Protesting these misguided attempts at philanthropy, several harlequins sanctified the humble croaks of SGA nominees last week. One can — and many did — label their burlesque presence as harassment or apathy. It would be more properly identified as a remonstaration against the unctuous elocution of the student government.

The point of these clowns was well-taken: we will not know what the real priorities are until next year. Will any of the nominees step forward to tell the blacks s-he cannot support their worthy cause(s) because s-he is spending most of his-her time working on my academic gripes? Will s-he reprove me for thinking s-he had time for my concerns when I can plainly see s-he is devoted to the homosexual groups on campus or to getting a Student Union? I think not.

I think that in our righteous rage, we have escalated the type of leaders we protest elsewhere.

I think that in our righteous rage, we have escalated the type of leaders we protest elsewhere. They construe gutless platforms and worry the issues until they fall, beaten, into a form they think we will like to hear. Our leaders are yes-persons, and they are pandering to us.

Well, mighty leaders, I say no. I am, sanely enough, apolitical (although not anti-political). I cannot vote for anyone who does not have the moral courage to step out of the abstruse debate to declare something I do not want to hear. Disagreement has never constituted lack of respect.

I cannot vote for the clowns. They are the most honest people running for Student Government President at the moment; however, they have all hidden behind a protective veil of slapstick and sophomoric pundits. They are too insecure to survive the test of a real vote of their capacities.

I cannot vote for an image. Several candidates have suddenly realized that their flabby silhouettes require padding and prodding for the public eye. Wherefore this panic-stricken palaveration unless they are flabby because they have done nothing? They have been willing to spend senate funds to primp their egos; how much more would they spend as president on equally dubious propositions?

What, then, shall I vote for? Temperate, learned, and rational thought? Moral fiber? Tears and dreams? Certainly not for the people.

If you, too, find those odious orifices unpalatable, there is an option. There is, to our great relief, a column marked "none of the above." Or, you could exercise your own flabby lack of character and not vote.

Program council's SGA endorsement

To the Editor:

At this time the Campus Center Program Council and the Union Program Council would like to announce their endorsement for the candidacy of Shelley Gordon and Herb Tyson. In the past year we have had an opportunity to work closely with these two. The programming committees receive funds from the Board of Governors for activities held in the CC-SUB complex. As officers of the Board Herb and Shelley have been instrumental in making our programs a success. They have assisted us in securing funds and office space. They have helped in relations with the administration. As people Herb and Shelley have also been involved On several of our shows they have worked as ushers and security.

We feel Herb and Shelley are the best candidates, not just because of what they have done for us, but because they have a general concern for students.

We would also like to ask students for their support on the referendum. If you vote yes it will do the following things:

1. Increase the number of quality concerts.
2. Keep student ticket prices low.
3. Guarantee funding for Spring Concert.

Protest at Davis Cup

To the Editor:

This weekend thousands of people will be flocking to Nashville, Tennessee for the Davis Cup Tennis Tournament. Not everyone will be there for the sport. This weekend thousands of people will be in Nashville to proclaim their outrage at our government's legitizimation of South Africa and its oppressive and racist regime; to proclaim their outrage at the fact that the U.S. has opened its doors to South Africa when almost every other country in the world has shut them out; and to proclaim their support and encouragement for the people of South Africa who have steadfastly stood strong in the face of government oppression.

The Revolutionary Student Brigade is organizing a special contingent in the demonstration called by the NAACP — the Soweto Brigade. Inspired by the courageous efforts of the youth and students of Soweto, the RSB has chosen to represent them at the Davis Cup. Youth and students have always played a vanguard role in rebellion. And just as the youth of Soweto brought the eyes of the world to attention, so the Soweto Brigade of American youth will carry their message to the people of this country.

Our demands will be: South Africa out of the Davis Cup; victory to the people of South Africa; U.S. out of South Africa; super powers, hands off; fight imperialism and national oppression from the U.S.A. to the U.S.A. [Union of Southern Africa].

The Soweto Brigade will be declaring that the youth of America will not accept the discrimination that they face here either. This tournament is part and parcel with the rulers of this country declaring that they're turning the clock back on the fight against discrimination in this country. They started with their attacks on affirmative action and support for the Bakke case, which says discrimination isn't happening anymore, and now with the Davis Cup they're issuing an open challenge to minority people and all those who hate injustice. They're saying to the world that this is one country where racism and discrimination are free to flourish.

This is not just a sports event, it's a test of strength between those who stand behind national oppression, discrimination and racism, in South Africa and right here at home, and those who stand against it. Last year in Los Angeles, protests blocked the Davis Cup. Now they have been moved to Nashville. The Ku Klux Klan was sent to attack the coordinator of the demonstration, carving the word "nigger" into his stomach. But the South is no hiding place. The civil rights movement of the 60s, the freedom marches and the Black Liberation movement proved that.

We can have an effect at the Davis Cup. Already protests have forced some corporations to withdraw support for the tournament. By politically isolating the Union of South Africa, we can force the eyes of the world to focus on their oppressive and racist regime. Just as the civil rights movement of the 60s brought new legislation for equality and affirmative action programs into being to deal with inequality, so our efforts will have their impact. [Here at UMass the trustees have been forced to divest of stocks in corporations in South Africa.]

Join the fight for liberation in South Africa! Carry on the fight against all oppression here! Join the Soweto Brigade! For more information contact the Revolutionary Student Brigade at 256-0501.

Don't mark 'none of the above'

To the Editor:

The idea of voting none of the above has been given a lot of play in the Collegian lately. Monday there was an editorial and a cartoon taking up about a third of the space on the editorial pages. Both implied that voting none of the above will effect change in the SGA. Actually, the opposite will happen.

What will happen if none of the above gets elected, or at least makes sure that no one gets 33 per cent of the vote? Then the right to pick the president goes to the electoral college. That's right, the Senate will pick the president. The very body that this idea is supposed to change will gain more power if you vote none of the above.

Let's face it, an election is supposed to elect someone. No matter how you vote, someone will get elected. All voting none of the above does is take away your right to vote. It changes who elects the candidate, but nothing else. Be a responsible voter. Look at the issues. Vote for the best candidate.

China's socialism column applauded

To the Editor:

I would like to applaud Charlie Bagli's summation of the current political scene in China. In his article of March 3 Mr. Bagli discussed some of the "socialist new things" that were being developed in China. He wrote, "During the Cultural Revolution many of these new things were initiated ... for example ... sending educated youth to the countryside; ... revolutionary committees ... to name a few."

In view of the recent elimination of the revolutionary committees by the present Chinese leadership [as reported in the New York Times, March 7], I feel his article is most timely. In these days when so many revolutionaries unquestionably accept all that happens in China, it was refreshing to see someone with the courage to stick by their principles and uphold the advances made during the cultural revolution — in spite of the fact that the new Chinese government is reversing them.

Law aids segregation

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The administration yesterday condemned a new anti-busing law, which the Justice Department has said is constitutional, as bad policy because it will encourage court desegregation battles.

The law limits the Department of Health, Education and Welfare's authority under the 1964 Civil Rights Act to require busing for school desegregation.

The legislation, passed Dec. 9, probably will have its greatest impact on HEW efforts to desegregate Northern and Western schools.

Court-ordered busing is not affected.

The law "is bad public policy because it limits our ability to work out desegregation plans cooperatively with local school officials and, instead, forces the matter into the courts," said HEW Secretary Joseph Califano.

"If the issue before the court were whether this legislation is good policy, we could not defend it," the Justice Department said in an opinion filed with U.S. District Court in Washington last month.

Title VI of the 1964 Civil Rights act forbids federal aid to schools which discriminate on the basis of race or national origin. HEW is charged with enforcing this provision.

But the new legislation prohibits HEW from using federal funds "to require, directly or indirectly, the transportation of any student to a school other than the school which is nearest the student's home."

Cape town threatened

PROVINCETOWN [AP] — The picturesque Cape Cod art colony of Provincetown has declared an emergency because gasoline seeping near its main water supply is threatening the drinking water needed for the thousands of tourists who jam the town in the summer.

Town, state and federal officials met yesterday in Hyannis to discuss the emergency and a way to find alternative water supplies, said Page McMahan, a member of the town's water commission. The meeting was described as a fact-finding session, and no decisions were made.

An estimated 2,000 to 3,500 gallons of gasoline from a service station's underground tank may be seeping through 600 feet of sand toward a field of seven wells providing most of Provincetown's water, according to Ms. McMahan and Mike Frimpter of the U.S. Geological Survey.

"Nobody really knows how much leaked," said Frimpter.

The wells, which provide 750,000 gallons of water daily when operating fully, have been closed since December when the leak was discovered at Watts Amoco Service Station in neighboring Truro, said Ms. McMahan.

"There is no danger today or tomorrow," said Ms. McMahan.

Civil service jobs soar

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The administration said yesterday it has added 450,000 workers to public service job rolls in the past nine months.

President Carter and Labor Secretary Ray Marshall, in separate statements, announced 753,000 public service jobs had been filled under the Comprehensive Employment Training Act, exceeding the target set last May.

There had been less than 300,000 persons in public service employment when the economic stimulus package was signed nine months ago with a target of 725,000 CETA jobs by the first week in March.

"This demonstrates the CETA system is an effective fiscal policy tool that can move rapidly against the problem of unemployment," Carter said. "This rapid expansion of the public service jobs program was done without the creation of a large new federal bureaucracy."

In the same period, private industry provided 2.6 million new jobs and the nationwide unemployment rate fell from 7.1 per cent to 6.1 per cent.

Carter said the growth since last May has been concentrated much more heavily among disadvantaged workers than before and he had asked Congress to reauthorize CETA to devote 100 per cent of the new resources of the program to the disadvantaged.

"The successful expansion of the public service jobs program within such a short period of time reaffirms my faith in the ability of the government to deal directly with serious economic and social problems," he said.

During the jobs buildup, Marshall reported:

—The participation of blacks increased from about 25 per cent to nearly 33 per cent through September 1977.

"Conservation is the only economic alternative to the energy problem," according to Henry Lee, director of the Massachusetts State Energy Office. Lee's discussion of the Massachusetts energy dilemma was the second of a series of lectures sponsored by the UMass Energy Coalition. (Staff photo by Judie DelFrate) expected by a concerned world. On Monday, Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin vowed that he would cut off "the evil arm" of the Al Fatah guerrillas.

★ Israelis mount attack

President Carter had cautioned Begin against a retaliatory attack. Shortly after the assault began, the State Department in Washington warned the use of U.S. weapons in the raids would violate the terms of arms sales to Israel.

Egyptian President Anwar Sadat described the attacks on the Israeli bus as "an irresponsible action" and indirectly appealed to Tel Aviv not to hit back.

An official in the Palestine Liberation Organization's foreign information office in Beirut said last night Israeli bombers pounded the towns of Bint Jbeil in the south central border region, the nearby village of Maroun er Ras and the town of Taireh. There were no immediate reports of casualties.

The official said an unspecified number of Israeli tanks was also crossing the frontier early Wednesday near the town of Rmeish, in the vicinity of Bint Jbeil.

The night was clear and cold as the Israeli armor clanked across the border. Witnesses said planes dropped flares and residents of Israeli border villages were ordered to their bomb shelters.

The announcement came over loudspeakers that competed with the boom of artillery and crash of mortar shells.

Children in the underground shelters said they could not sleep and they sang instead, witnesses said. One of the songs was "Heiveinu Shalom alechem" — "We have brought peace unto you."

The last Israeli strike into Lebanon came in November when warplanes hit guerrilla camps to retaliate for the deaths of three Israelis killed in a border raid. Lebanese reports said more than 100 persons were killed.

Your Birthday

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 15

Born today, you have great strength of character. As a child you always told the truth, even if you gave away your part in wrongdoing. As an adult you will stand by your principles even if it means forfeiting material success. The satisfaction gained from knowing you have behaved according to your standards makes up for the losses you may suffer.

You are a highly emotional individual. You will be tempted to pacify inner turmoil in ways not in keeping with your conscience. Conscience always triumphs, however, and with less struggle as you get older. You are fascinated by mystery. In your relationships, it is the one with the veiled character whom you befriend first.

You enjoy considerable popularity among your peers. Many admire your integrity, and your sympathetic gestures toward those less fortunate than you earn the gratitude of all who know of them. Praise may embarrass you, but you relish and work for it.

THURSDAY, MARCH 16

PISCES(Feb.19-March 20) — Determined action toward new goals brings conflict with co-workers.

ARIES(March 21-April 19) — Don't let your anger over another's demands show. You could spoil a chance for gain.

TAURUS(April 20-May 20) — A blow to the ego may make you keep a low profile. Be encouraged in PM.

GEMINI(May 21-June 20) — An erstwhile jealous suitor may reappear to hinder emotional progress.

CANCER(June 21-July 22) — Submit to necessary authority to start the project at work well.

LEO(July 23-Aug.22) — Pessimism has no place today. Be cheerful; lead the way toward an optimistic and responsive evening.

VIRGO(Aug.23-Sept.22) — The relationship recently established by you and a friend may puzzle others. Explain.

LIBRA(Sept.23-Oct.22) — Ambition must be mixed equally with humility if realism is to guide actions.

SCORPIO(Oct.23-Nov.21) — A strong push toward real gain takes up your morning. Fun comes after noon.

SAGITTARIUS(Nov.22-Dec.21) — Don't let another take advantage of your lack of perspective. Stop, look, listen.

CAPRICORN(Dec.22-Jan.19) — You may think twice about activities allowed children. Look again at possible rewards.

AQUARIUS(Jan.20-Feb.18) — The home-loving Aquarius ends the day happily. Others suffer anger, frustration.

Vibraphone and violin in duo

Reviewed by Bili Sundstrom

Sitting in the orchestra pit at the Academy of Music can be a mixed blessing. What one loses in terms of comfort on the little wooden folding chairs and from straining one's neck just to see the performers' knees, one gains in getting to watch the techniques and facial expressions of great musicians.

And Saturday night brought a couple of outstanding ones to the Academy — vibraphonist Gary Burton, followed by 70-year-old violinist Stephane Grappelli.

Despite the contrasting styles of the two featured artists, they have played together on a number of occasions, including a joint effort on the album, Paris Encounters. Avid listeners of Burton's otherwise "modern" sound may have noticed an element of the country swing which finds its root in Grappelli's vibrant violin style.

Burton's new quartet includes his phenomenal partner — bassist Steve Swallow, a hot young trumpeter named Toru Okoshi, and drummer Gary Chaffee.

Okoshi, whose performance was only occasionally marred by the use of some sort of off-key octave synthesizer, added a tight cutting edge to the quartets sound. His soloing was highly creative, drawing from a variety of modern trumpet styles with ease and taste.

Swallow is a complete electric bassist — a competent soloist, but moreover a powerful foundation to the group who can shift from bright post-bop pieces to plodding neo-blues to funky jazz-rock numbers.

Drummer Chaffee appears to be the only debit since Burton changed the quartet's membership. While solid and competent, Chaffee is not yet a replacement for his predecessor, Bob Moses, who was a sensitive and innovative member of the group before Burton's personnel change.

Burton himself walked onto the stage looking like the guy next door and proceeded to play vibes the way he always does — better than anyone else who has ever played them. A master both of the technique and the harmonies of his instrument, Burton plays complex and rapid compositions flawlessly, and without the tonal monotony one often associates with vibraphones.

While the Burton set was solid, Grappelli stole the show with a display of violin virtuosity and a superb group of accompanists, the Diz Disley trio.

Grappelli's soloing ranged from sweet renditions of ballads to country swing at a furious pace. Grappelli combines marvelous solo runs, some "serious" violin styling and a great musical sense of humor into every number.

Guitarist Diz Disley brought his two British buddies, guitarist Ike Isaacs and bassist Brian Torff, to round out the quartet. Disley's under-the-breath remarks during the concert were well-received — at one point during an Isaacs solo, Disley muttered, "Hot shit, man." All four musicians were incredibly sympathetic as accompanists, and their clever arrangements and unpretentious soloing brought the audience to its feet when the concert ended. Grappelli returned for one encore, "Sweet Georgia Brown," and left the stage having convinced most skeptics that his melodic style is anything but obsolete.

Cunningham dazzles with movement

Merce Cunningham and Dance Company
Reviewed by SHARON TRUE

Split-second timing, complicated, subtle rhythms, intense concentration, instant changes in direction, and dance, dance, dance -- that's what Merce Cunningham and Dance Company zapped a full house with last Wednesday night (March 8) at the Fine Arts Center. In addition to seeing the concert, I was able to interview Cunningham dancer Meg Eginton. A few remarks from that interview will follow this review.

First, the concert. The four works performed were "Torse," "Sounddance," "Inlets" and "Squaregaem," all choreographed by Merce Cunningham, with music, or rather, sound accompaniment by John Gage, David Tudor, and Takehisa Kosugi.

"Torse" is aa incredibly fast-paced, complex, visually and kinesthetically dazzling work. Balletic ports de bras (carriage of arms), epaulements (positions of shoulders), and legwork, interspersed with modern dance contractions, assymetrical shapes and uneven rhythms are performed at breakneck speed.

The dancers come together, disperse, dash off stage, dash back on; dancing in contrapunctual clusters and other groupings in all parts of the stage. The intense concentration of the dancers (who relied solely on themselves for rhythmic impetus), the sound of swishing feet and landings heard over the barely audible score (various machine bums and other noises) and the complexity of the dance created an atmosphere of urgency, of adventure.

The dancers were not quite in synch at first, and one man's overzealous, abrupt shifts in epaulement were a bit distracting, but overall this work left me breathless for more.

More came. Even more intense than "Torse" is "Sounddance." The stage is bathed in glaring yellow light, and the sound accompaniment is equally glaring, even grating at times (low-frequency dentist drill, static, needle scratching a record, that sort of thing, performed by David Tudor). The dancers, one by one, burst through a slit in a heavy, carefully draped and folded curtain set (designed by Marck Lancaster, along with the lighting and costumes) and, working again in the constantly shifting clusters and floor patterns, added another turn of the screw by manipulating each others' bodies into lifts, falls, shoves and supports. If one dancer had gone out of step, a few bodies would have surely landed splat on the floor.

The clusters often contrasted in rhythmic quality — pitter patter feet and flowing arms for example — and the dancers' focus was sharp and precise. The tension created by the glaring light, the bursting entrances and exits through the slit, the interdependent, again fast-paced movement, the rhythmic contrasts, and the ingratiating music was enormous. Pleasureable, no — but effective, YES!

A foggy stage, dimly lit, a huge silver disc that ever so-slowly traversed a sky-blue backdrop from left to right, and bubbling, gurgling sounds (water trickling through miked conch shells — John Cage) set the tone for "Inlets," a quiet, serene, captivating work, perhaps about the harmony of unspoiled nature, perhaps about a mythical otherworld, perhaps ... whatever, it was a

David Wertman Sun Ensemble
Reviewed by SHARON TRUE

Burning inscense, a crowd of about 40 people, including a couple of cavorting children, video cameras, TV lights, audiotape decks, mikes, dancers and musicians were all brought together last Friday night at the Unitarian Meetinghouse for an informal evening of fine music.

The musicians were the David Wertman Sun Ensemble, featuring John Hagen, David Swerdlove and Greg Wall on saxes; John Zieman, synthesizer; John Sprague, flutes and percussion; Jay Conway, drums, and David Wertman on bass. Their music was a virtuosic style of jazz, with particularly brilliant solo variations by Swerdlove, Conway and Wertman.

The group of dancers, Lisa Simon, Patricia Bradshaw, Steven Hamm, JoAnn Murray, Barbara Goldfarb, and Yves Toussaint, improvised during the first and third sets of the musicians on a small area before the stage.

Dance improvisation is fascinating for me because I love to watch how different bodies move, and to sense those wonderful, spontaneous moments where everything "works" — group dynamics, rhythmic patterns, shapes, drama....

These dancers had their share of these moments — I remember in particular a swaying, rounded arms motif that a couple of dancers explored, a prowling hunter-hunted duet between the two men, a huddle of the whole group opening and closing like a flower, and the slowly collapsing line of interlocked dancers that ended the performance.

A few bothersome aspects of the dancers' performance were their occasional lapses in attention to the exciting rhythms of the music, the overextended length of time they performed (they should have taken a break during musicians' solos) and a lack of focus — by this I mean there was too much "everybody do your own thing."

I am all in favor of bringing dance into informal spaces, as this group has. These dancers have only worked together for a short while — I feel that with time and a deeper awareness of each others' bodies and energies they will prove to be a strong and unique complement to the great sounds of the David Wertman Sun Ensemble.

Finley says A's sale is near

ROCHESTER, N.Y. [UPI] — Oakland A's owner Charley O. Finley said yesterday the chances are good his American League club will be sold to a Denver business group, thus averting what he called a "potential bloodbath in the Bay area" during the upcoming season.

Speaking at a Rochester news conference, the feisty owner said odds of a transaction being worked out are "70-30".

He based his optimism on several recent phone conversations, including one yesterday, with San Francisco Giants owner Bob Lurie.

The deal being discussed, Finley said, would have the Giants playing half their home games in Oakland.

"That deal would be best for everybody concerned," Finley said. "There's no way the Bay area can support two teams. If the deal isn't worked out Lurie and I will take a bloodbath financially."

Finley reiterated his desire to leave the game for health and financial reasons.

"I'll be damned if I'm going to pour what little money I have left on some jocks," he said.

And he blamed commissioner Bowie Kuhn, as usual, for running him out of baseball, saying, "his highness wants to see me out."

And Finley added, "there might be something more going on than meets the eye", referring to a possible movement to oust Kuhn. He wouldn't elaborate.

The owner labeled his fellow owners as "suckers" and said he doesn't blame today's players for trying to get astronomical salaries.

"If I were a player I'd do the same damn thing because you have all these suckers willing to pay these salaries," he said.

"I'm not condemning the athletes, it's all because of the stupidity of the owners and the idiot running the game."

Cop says Lyle confessed

GOLDEN, Colo. [UPI] — Heavyweight boxer Ron Lyle confessed to a police detective that he fatally shot one of his former employees last New Year's Eve, according to testimony at the fighter's preliminary hearing.

Both first and second-degree murder charges have been filed against Lyle for the fatal shooting of Vernon "Rip" Clark at the boxer's home.

Lt. David Dial of the Lakewood Police Department testified Monday he received Lyle's call about 6:20 p.m. Dec. 31 and asked the detective to come to Lyle's house.

Dial said he saw Clark's body on the living room floor of Lyle's house and said the boxer told him Lyle and Clark had had an argument about money.

Dial said he asked Lyle if Lyle had hit Clark. "No. I shot him" the detective quoted Lyle as saying.

Lyle's younger brother, Phillip, testified Clark came to the home in the afternoon.

Lyle's younger brother also said he saw a 9-mm pistol on a coffee table and Clark's body on the floor.

Phillip Lyle said he and other family members were watching television in the basement when they heard loud voices upstairs and then heard a shot.

"I noticed my brother sitting in his den chair," Phillip Lyle said. "He was just sitting there. I asked him what had happened and he didn't say anything."

Correction

In Monday's column, I stated Muhammad Ali served in prison for three years. What I meant to say, and what I should have elaborated on, was that Ali had been away from the ring for that period. He spent the three years after he refused to be made eligible for the draft (on the grounds he was devoting his professional life to preaching and he qualified for an exemption because he was a Muslim minister) appealing to the courts, and losing, until finally the Supreme Court reversed the decision. This all started in 1966, after Ali's last title defense, against Carl Mildenberger, the European Heavyweight Champ. His trouble with the courts lasted three years, and he resumed his illustrious career in 1969.

NFL owners help receivers open up game

PALM SPRINGS, Calif. [UPI] — National Football League owners yesterday adopted a major rule revision to protect pass receivers from being bumped downfield and also approved several other rule changes designed to generate more scoring.

At their annual meeting, the NFL owners made a major change by narrowly approving the new rule benefiting the receivers.

Under the new rule, a pass defender can bump a receiver only once in a 5-yard zone from the line of scrimmage and may not bump him downfield. Previously, a receiver could be bumped within three yards on the line of scrimmage and again downfield. Each defensive back was entitled to hit the receiver once.

The 28 owners approved the rule change on a vote of 22 in favor, three against and three abstaining. Twenty-one votes are needed to adopt a rule.

Commissioner Pete Rozelle said the rule change would "certainly open up football."

Rozelle said the 5-yard zone was adopted instead of a 3-yard area from the line of scrimmage to "give officials a better chance to judge if the defenders are going after the receiver."

In another rule change, the owners voted 27-0 with one abstention to liberalize the interpretation of offensive holding in a move designed to give linemen a better chance to protect the passer.

Under the rule, an offensive lineman may extend his arms from his body and have his hands open while confronting a defender. Previously, the lineman's arms had to be close to his body and his fists clenched.

By a 24-1-3 vote, owners approved a rule change that will allow a double-touched pass (one touched by more than one offensive player) to be caught by any offensive or defensive player. The rule also stipulated that a ball batted forward by an offensive player will result in a 15-yard penalty from the line of scrimmage. The ball can be batted backward, however.

Jacobs flies, US dies

MILAN, Italy [UPI] — Franklin Jacobs of Paterson, N.J., captured the men's high jump yesterday but the Europeans generally humiliated the United States at the first U.S.-European indoor track and field meet.

In 21 men's and women's events, the 17-nation European team won 16 competitions for 141 points while the American all-star squad took only five for 80 points.

With a crowd of 11,000 in Milan's sports palace screaming him on, the 20-year-old Jacobs cleared the bar at 7 feet 5 inches to win his event.

Jacobs, who until Sunday night held the world best of 7'-7 1-4" in the indoor event, made three futile stabs at 7'-7 3-4".

At the European indoor championship Sunday, Vladimir Yashchenko of the Soviet Union smashed the world best and surpassed even his own outdoor world record by passing the bar at 7'-8 1-2". Soviet officials would not allow the exhausted Yashchenko to compete against the U.S. team, but the 19-year-old Russian made a surprise appearance to wish the Italians "arrivederci."

"I have all next season to take the record away from Yashchenko and I'm in no hurry," said Jacobs. "Tonight just wasn't the right night."

Jacobs, who says high jumping is like flying over the moon, has his sights set on other goals.

"I really only high jump so that later I'll be able to jump higher in life — I'm majoring in business management, and this is a good way to get people to notice you and recognize your name."

Somewhat less stoical about his victory was 23-year-old Herman Frazier of Philadelphia who was slipped into the men's 400-meter race at the last minute when Benny Brown pulled out.

"I did it, I won," shouted Frazier, who was clocked in 46.48 seconds.

Vesco Bradley of Fort Lewis, Wash., won the men's jump with a 25'8" leap — well ahead of second-place finisher Ronald Desruelles of Belgium at 24'-10 3-4".

In the men's shot put, Al Feuerbach, a hefty 30-year-old from Los Gatos, Calif., earned five points for the United States with a 66'-10 1-2" toss. His teammate, Colin Anderson, failed to appear.

The Americans were impressive in the men's 400-meter relay. Thanks to Frazier, they whipped the Europeans in 3 minutes 8.9 seconds to 3:09.5. However, the Europeans said the 400 meter relay is not a usual indoor event and it was included only at the Americans' request.

Otherwise, the meet was a disaster for the Americans, who took only five second places. Stan Vinson finished second to Frazier in the 400-meter event and Sharon Dabney of Philadelphia was runner-up to the Soviet Union's Marina Sidorova in the women's 400 meter. She was timed in 53.27 seconds — an American indoor best — to Sidorova's 53.01.

The biggest upset of the night was by Sweden's Linda Haglund, who defeated indoor record holder Marlies Oelsner of East Germany in the women's 60-meter run. At the European indoor championships Saturday, Oelsner led the field with a time of 7.12 seconds. Yesterday Oelsner was clocked in 7.32 to Haglund's 7.19.

Emiel Puttemans of Belgium provided the night's most excitement with a last-lap burst that carried him past Switzerland's Markus Ryffel in the men's 3,000 meters. Puttemans, who lost to Ryffel Sunday, won in 7:49.5.

soothing change of atmosphere after "Sounddance." The movements reminded me of animals — prancing, springing, flying, pawing, tapping. Cunningham did an eloquent solo, with innumberable subtle gestures of all parts of his body.

As the disc moved across the backdrop, the lighting began to brighten, reaching its highest intensity at "high noon." Suddenly the lights went out. Gradually, they came up again, with the sundisc in eclipse. Morris Graves did the stunning decor for "Inlets."

The exquisite poignancy of this dance was the result of faultless timing, moments of stillness, of alert repose, and of the dancers' complete unself-consciousness. My one criticism is that there was little floorwork done to contrast with the standing and aerial movements — something I noticed in the other works as well. In many ways, Cunningham's style of modern dance is as ethereal as classical ballet.

That was the concert. In the interview, Meg Eginton spoke a little bit about what it means to be a Cunningham dancer.

Don't miss the terrific exhibit at the Fine Arts Center Gallery (now until March 17) of sets created by Jasper Johsn, Robert Rauschenberg, and Andy Warhol for some of Cunningham's dances. Imagine dancing among them!

Derek goes to Penguins but Red Wings object

DETROIT [UPI] — The Detroit Red Wings yesterday charged Pittsburgh with illegally tampering With Derek Sanderson when the Penguins signed the one-time NHL Rookie of the Year as a free agent.

The former Boston Bruins star, who signed with Pittsburgh Monday, had been practicing with Detroit's Kansas City farm team, hoping to win a spot on the Red Wings in a comeback effort.

Sanderson had been sent to the Detroit farm club last week by Red Wings General Manager Ted Lindsay, who appealed to NHL President John Ziegler to help settle the dispute.

"Although we had not signed Derek to a contract, we had incurred considerable expense with him," said Lindsay. "The actions of the Pittsburgh Club, Sanderson's agent Bob Wolfe and Derek himself somehow destroys your faith in people."

Lindsay and Red Wings coach Bobby Kromm had looked Sanderson over during team practice last week at Olympia Stadium, but said he was not yet ready to make the club.

"We had a rehabilitation program set up with him," Lindsay said, "with the hopes that he could help our Kansas City team the remainder of the season, continue on a program during the summer, come to camp and not only make our club, but be able to help us."

Sanderson, 31, broke into the NHL with the Bruins in 1966, winning the Calder Trophy in his first year in the league.

He remained with the Bruins until 1973, when he signed with Philadelphia in the World Hockey Association for what then was said to be the highest salary of any professional athlete.

Sanderson later returned to Boston and a succession of trades saw him sent to the New York Rangers in 1974, St. Louis in 1975 and Vancouver in 1977.

Palmer worries way into Hall

MIAMI [UPI] — For years, baseball's biggest hypochondriac was Luke "Old Aches and Pains" Appling, now in the Hall of Fame.

Today, it's Baltimore's Jim Palmer, who's a cinch to wind up there some day, too.

"Nobody in the world takes better care of himself than Jim Palmer and he has one of the best conditioned bodies I've ever seen, but in his own mind, he always feels there's something wrong with him," says Ralph Salvon, the Orioles' exceptionally competent, hard-working trainer who has been taking care of ballplayers for more than 25 years.

"We were always concerned about Jim in the beginning. He'd come in and say his arm didn't feel well. He'd say he had a headache, a stomachache or a toenail that was bothering him. We were always worried, but then we found out that whenever he complained, he'd always pitch his best. He's definitely a hypochondriac and he knows it. If he doesn't, he should."

By definition, a hypochondriac is one who goes around depressed because he imagines he has physical ailments. Despite the weight of evidence against him, Palmer denies he's a hypochondriac.

"I've been hearing that all my career," says the Orioles' good-looking 32-year-old right-hander, who has won 20 or more games seven times and the Cy Young Award as the American League's top pitcher three times.

I don't think I'm a hypochondriac at all. When he was managing the Orioles, Hank Bauer told me 'your sore arm is all in your head.' So I said to him, 'How come every time I throw, my arm hurts, not my head?' "

Last year, Palmer finished with a 20-11 record for the Orioles even though he suffered a whiplash in his neck when former teammate Fred Holdsworth accidentally ran into him in the outfield during batting practice in May. He also came up with a tennis elbow in June.

Fred Holdsworth wasn't looking where he was running and hit me on the right side of the head," says Palmer. "They didn't believe I was hurt because I didn't miss a turn, but I was 6-1 when I got hit and I went to 8-8 before my neck felt right again. Sure, I complain, but that's part of the game, isn't it?"

One of the reasons nobody paid much attention to Palmer's complaints last season was because he pitched 319 innings, more than anyone else in the league, and finished fourth in strikeouts, with 193.

Early in his career, in 1967, back and shoulder troubles nearly finished Palmer. He spent two seasons in the Minors before getting rid of his problems. Subsequently, Palmer was on the disabled list 42 days with a torn shoulder muscle in 1969 and for six weeks with a sore elbow in 1974.

Still, the lanky 6-3 Oriole ace can't compare with Luke Appling when it comes to the total number of disabilities either real or imagined.

Appling, who played shortstop for the White Sox, earned his nickname because he was always complaining there was something wrong with him.

Now in his 60s, he's helping the Atlanta Braves as a special hitting instructor, and when I ran into him at West Palm Beach the other day, sure enough, he put his hand on his chest and told me he wasn't feeling well.

"I ate something this morning and it ain't setting right with me," he said, wrinkling up his face. "I don't know what it is."

When I asked him if he remembered some of his more serious problems during his career, he went on for more than five minutes.

"There was this day I had 17 stitches put in my leg and played the next day," he said. "Another time I got hit in the eye with a ball in Boston — Vern Stephens hit me — and the doctor said, 'Don't play,' but we went to Cleveland for our next series and I was in there. (Bob) Feller was pitching, too.

"Then there was the year my ankle was busted. They had to wire it up, but I played 81 games that year and hit over .300, and you know something, the man wanted to cut my salary. Imagine that!

"The way I look at it," said Appling, hitting a ground ball to one of Atlanta's kid infielders, "if you got a little something the matter with you, it makes you a better ballplayer. Mind you now, I said a little something. Not anything real serious, you know what I mean ... "

Lions knock off NY'ers; face BKP in IM Finals

Two excellent teams, Unique NY and the MacKimmie Lions got together last night in men's intramural semifinal action, teamed up with a superb officiating (Steve Jefferson, Dave Foster) and put on a clinic in hoop that was well worth watching. Unfortunately, someone had to lose; the Lions came away with the upper hand, a 36-27 victory over the NY'ers.

The Lions will now take on Beta Kappa Phi in the championship game tonight at 6:30 on court (Boyden Gym).

BKP came out of the starting blocks a little on the slow side as the Free Agents hung tight. At halftime, the frat-men led 21-13, but it was only a matter of time before they got cooking and pulled away to a 38-21 victory, eliminating the Agents from further action (there is no consolation game for third place this year). For BKP, Pete Rankowski and Dan Smith combined for 19 points with Jim Pollatta chipping in another eight.

Many felt the NY-Lions should have been in the finals, but if BKP and the Lions play the brand of basketball that has brought them both this far (no reason they shouldn't) this could be some matchup.

In the NY-Lions game, first half action saw both defenses hang tough early, forcing each other to take only good shots. The game stayed close because of this, but Unique NY slowly found itself slipping into foul problems. At halftime the Lions were up by five, 17-12 due to the hot hands of Ernest Colemone (5 pts.) and Ike Bradshaw (6 pts.). Meanwhile, NY'ers big man Al Eford was doing his thing and had 10 points at the break.

The NY'ers came out flying in the second half and employed some of their full-court-pressure show. NY'ers Irv McNight (who had an unbelievable block of a shot in the first half) hit a baseline jumper early, before Steve Winston made an excellent twisting drive to the hoop for a layup, equalizing McKnight's hoop.

Unique closed to within two at 26-24 before Winston's three point play made it 29-24 with five minutes left. This seemed to have taken some sting out of NY's offense. A 'Mae'stall wound the clock down.

MacKimmie led 32-27 with less than a minute to play — this sequence followed: NY'ers shot headed towards bucket. Winston skys, and blocks it leading to an easy two for Colemone. As NY attempted to get that one back, a Lion stole the ball. Away it sailed to a flying Rich Hebert headed downcourt.

Slammmmmmm dunk! The game couldn't have ended any other way!!!

Sows edge Sugar 'n' Spice; meet Pumas in women's final

By SHELLY SPIEGEL
Collegian Staff

The Sows will meet the Pumas tonight at 5:45 in Boyden Gym to decide this year's women's intramural basketball championship.

The Sows defeated Sugar and Spice 14-8 in last night's first semi-final match-up.

The Sows' 2-1-2 defense shut-out Sugar and Spice for the first 12¼ minutes of the game.

At half time the score stood, 8-2 in the Sows favor.

With six minutes to go in the game, Sugar and Spice's Wilma Tynes put up a shot to tie the game, 8-8. But the score did not stay tied for long. The Sows' Karen Gipps answered Sugar and Spice's bucket immediately to secure a Sows victory.

"Some teams don't always play all their players, but we always do," said Sows Kelley Salls. She said if the Sows are to win the championship "we need a team effort."

Sugar and Spice out fouled the Sows 16-6.

The Pumas edged Oh Shoot in last night's second semi-final clash, 25-21.

The game was full of excellent outside shooting, good defense and strong rebounding by both teams.

The first half of the game was dominated by the Pumas and at half time the score stood 14-9.

Oh Shoot's Sally Barner got hot the second half and scored five unanswered points to tie the score, 14-14, with nine minutes left in the game.

At the 20 seconds mark, with the Pumas leading 22-21, Pumas' Sue Witt connected for a basket and drew a four for a three point play to put the game on ice.

Michelle Grenier, the Pumas' high scorer with ten points, credited Witt's performance as the deciding factor in the game.

Gym-men fifth; Swetman leaves

By STEVEN MARKS
Collegian Staff

The UMass men's gymnastic team ended their 77-78 season this past weekend at the Eastern Championships held at Syracuse University. The team ended up tieing for fifth place with Springfield after the three day competition. Southern Connecticut won the championships with Army in second and Syracuse taking third place.

It was the last trip to the Easterns for UMass Coach Dick Swetman, who announced he will be leaving his position as mentor of the Minutemen this spring.

In the individual competition UMass senior co-captain Dave Kulakoff was upset in the pommel horse event, ultimately losing his previous title. Kulakoff was second after the first day of compulsory competition, and narrowed the gap between Tony Williams of Southern Conn. after optionals. But in Sundays finals Kulakoff had a few minor mistakes which placed him in third after all competition, behind Williams and Mario McCutcheon of Southern.

Senior John Forshay of UMass was a finalist in the floor exercise and long horse vaulting. On floor John tied for seventh with Glenn Barletta of Southern Conn. after missing his press in the optionals competition. In the long horse vaulting event Forshay tied again but this time for fifth place with Joey Villarosa of Temple University. After missing his first vault in the finals, Forshay came back with a solid second one only to find himself .375 short of making nationals.

Southern Conn. dominated almost every event with at least four of their six competitors in the eight finals. In the other competitions, Temples Mike Silverstein won the floor event with teammate Blaine Clothier placing second. Scott Shorr of the Cadets from Army placed third.

On the still rings, Silverstein won the event with another one of his teammates Skip Zimmer placing second. Glenn Barletta of Southern Conn. captured third.

In the long horse vaulting event, Silverstein again took first place with Scott Shorr of Army tying him. Rich Ellis of Southern Conn. placed third.

On the parallel bars Mario McCutcheon from Southern Conn. won with teammate Wallace Miller placing second, and Silverstein placed third.

On the high bar Silverstein once again won the event with McCutcheon and Miller placing second and third respectively.

The Eastern Championships will be held next year down in Philadelphia at Temple University. Nationals this year will be held at Oregon State University in Eugene, Oregon, April 4th, 5th and 6th. The only representative from UMass at Nationals will be senior Dave Kulakoff.

The men's gym team will now be concerned with who will be the head coach for next year, for Dick Swetman is vacating his position as of May 1st.

Sox win, Campbell sore

DUNEDIN, Fla. [UPI] — Dwight Evans' three-run homer in the second inning yesterday was all the Boston Red Sox needed to defeat the Toronto Blue Jays, 3-1, in an exhibition game.

Evans' shot over the left field wall came with two outs after Jays' starter and loser Mike Darr had walked the first two men — Carl Yastrzemski and Carlton Fisk — to lead off the inning.

The Blue Jays' only run came in the third when Dave McKay led off with a single, went to third on Rick Cerrone's hit and scored when Red Sox' starter and winner Mike Torrez bobbled Willie Upshaw's comebacker.

Torrez went four innings for Boston, giving up two hits. Darr went three for the Blue Jays, allowing only one hit.

Meanwhile, the Red Sox announced relief specialist Bill Campbell has come up with a sore right elbow.

Campbell was told not to pitch Monday in a grapefruit league game against the Detroit Tigers. He is scheduled to be examined later this week by team physician Dr. Arthur Pappas.

"I'm concerned about it," said Campbell, who felt the elbow twinge in a game against Detroit last Friday. "If it was the last week of spring training, I'd go ahead and try to pitch it out. But, at tHis point, I'd rather see if something else can be done about it.

"If I have to take a cortisone shot I will, but I'd rather use that as a last resort."

In his first year with the Red Sox last season, the right-hander was 13-9 with a league-leading 31 saves. Although he developed a sore arm during the club's pennant drive in September, he saved nine and won one in 11 games.

Plumbing the depths...

With the theory of frustration-aggression as pertaining to athletics (the release of inner aggression through athletic participation) in mind, here is an analysis of the theory as it applies to some of today's professional and collegiate athletes.

1. Conrad Dobler — the former St. Louis Cardinal and present New Orleans Saint (Dobler a saint?) has been known to bite, scratch, kick, and punch an opposing lineman during the course of a football game. Many fans of the game choose to refer to Dobler as a "dirty" ballplayer because of these tactics. Yet, has anyone pondered the thought that Mr. Dobler may simply be venting his aggression in a reactive manner, that is, attacking the nearest object (the defensive lineman directly in front of him) and releasing inner hostility?

2. Red Sox-Yankees — group frustration at its best. A Sox-Yanks series is always crucial because of a tight pennant race and the traditional rivalry that exists between the two organizations. Therefore, an enormous amount of pressure is placed upon the individuals involved in the playing of the games. With this in mind, the slightest outbreak of any kind could set off a mass explosion of inner aggression that could not be exited from an individual with the mere throwing or hitting of a baseball.

An example of this would be the Red Sox-Yankees brawl of 1976. Started between Carleton Fisk and Lou Piniella, it soon turned into a full fledged riot because the players saw this as a way to emit inner tensions related to the playing of the series. One must note that Mickey Rivers, by sucker punching several individuals, added to the aggression of the Sox players thereby having a negative effect on the Boston ballplayers and possibly his own life.

3. Muhammed Ali — he enters the ring to vent the inward aggression that has built up inside him. It is obvious, by his lengthy career in the ring, that he has a serious problem — over retention of aggression. Psychiatric help is suggested as a cure to this problem of over retention.

Others in the same category of Ali include Joe Frazier, Jerry Quarry, and pending comeback, George Foreman.

4&5. Billy Martin — Mr. Martin should be commended for choosing one consistent object upon which to vent his inner tension — Reggie Jackson, who in turn vents his inner tension by spreading tooth decay amongst the youth of this country.

6. Richie Powers — yes, even NBA officials have built up aggression waiting to be spewed forth.

Mr. Powers uniquely chose to release his frustration by way of a small scale rebellion against the NBA Rules Committee by allowing the New Jersey Nets and Atlanta Hawks to employ a zone defense, illegal under NBA rules, in a game against each other.

Unfortunately, Mr. Powers price for aggression release was a neat $2,500 fine and a three game suspension.

7. Mark Haymore — Mark has chosen the basketball court upon which to vent his aggression via his tumultuous slam dunks. If the aggression is at an extremely high level, Haymore tries to release excess anger by attempting to pull the rim down from a hanging position. This takes a certain length of time which often results in an assessment of a technical foul on Haymore which merely increases his frustration, therefore, I suggest that he refrain from further rim hanging until the rule regarding a technical foul for rim hanging is changed.

Israel vows to hold land until 'guerrilla-free'

JERUSALEM [AP] — Israel said yesterday its land, sea and air forces had completed the takeover of southern Lebanon aimed at establishing a guerrilla-free zone, and vowed to hold the area until it has Arab guarantees the Palestinian commandos will never return.

Prime Minister Menachem Begin told a news conference here that the army "was not sent into southern Lebanon for the purpose of staying there," and that Israel would seek guarantees that "in all those places...from which the murderers have been ejected they should not return."

Witnesses in Lebanon reported Israeli forces had routed Palestinians from guerrilla strongholds in the south and rocketed refugee camps as far north as Beirut, killing Palestinians and Lebanese.

An Israeli military spokesman denied jets attacked civilians in refugee camps. He said they hit "only military targets of the terrorists." All aircraft returned safely, he said.

Reports of civilian casualties mounted into the scores. Palestinians claimed they had killed or wounded 300 troops of the Israeli task force, which the guerrillas estimated at more than 25,000 soldiers.

The Palestinians and their leftist Lebanese allies are believed to have a southern force of about 10,000 to 12,000 fighters.

Egypt and Saudi Arabia called for big-power intervention to halt the invasion. The United States and Egypt expressed fears the action would hinder efforts toward Middle East peace, but Begin disagreed.

A communique issued as columns of troops and tanks plunged across the border just after midnight Tuesday said the attack was not aimed at "the Arab population, the Lebanese army, or the inter-Arab peace-keeping force but only the terrorists and their helpers."

It called the assault a "mopping-up operation," not merely retaliation for last Saturday's Palestinian terrorist attack in which 34 Israelis were killed.

Israel gave no count of its own casualties.

Palestinian guerrillas said they unleashed a massive rocket retaliation against the northern Israeli town of Kiryat Shmona.

Israeli chief of staff Lt. Gen. Mordechai Gur said Israeli ground forces had moved six miles inside Lebanon along the 49-mile-long Israeli frontier. Gur said the operation was aimed at creating a five-mile-deep guerrilla-free zone along the border.

Begin did not say with whom Israel hoped to reach agreement to keep guerrillas away from the border, but said he would not negotiate with the Palestine Liberation

UM students at polls; turnout, leader unclear

By JON KLEIN
Collegian Staff

UMass students went to the polls yesterday in the first of two election days for Student Government Association president, Campus Center Board of Governors and Undergraduate Student Senators.

Voter turnout could not be measured nor could any clear leader be established in the presidential election since the ballot boxes were impounded last night in the Student Credit Union without any count being taken.

Minor irregularities in polling hours were reported in some voting places and problems arose in getting volunteers to work at some polling tables. However, none of the problems had any significant effect on the election, according to Governmental Affairs co-chairwoman Marcy Levington.

None of the irregularities were equal to the violations which occurred in last fall's senate and BOG elections. The violations caused repeat elections in some dormitories. Problems in that election included ballot stuffing, and lack of ballots for some areas.

Although all senators were required to work at the polls, only 45 had signed up to work as of last night. Some were inelligible since they were also candidates.

There were varying estimates of voter turnout. Senator Bob Dion said voting tables were "swamped everywhere except Sylvan." Co-chairman of Governmental Affairs Committee David Leary called Sylvan's turnout "disgusting" and Northeast's "mediocre". Workers at Southwest said the turnout there was "moderate to heavy." Ballot boxes at Orchard Hill were less than one-quarter full.

Those who felt turnout was heavy attributed it to voter interest in the large number of candidates. They felt more candidates could cover larger parts of the campus and draw out voters. The catagory of none of the above was also seen as providing voters with an incentive to bring them to the polls.

Another item on the ballot was a referendum calling for a $2 per semester fee for the Union Program Council. The council organizes concerts.

Senator Eric Anderson said he was considering a student judiciary suit because he felt the language of the referendum "misrepresented" the affects of the proposal. Anderson said the wording of the referendum sounded as if students would only pay $2 instead of $4 per year. Anderson said "after the $7 increase in the Student Activities Tax, last year, we don't need another increase."

Anderson's other objections to the fee were the students would "lose control on programming." Anderson also felt the council was "not representative of the student body's taste in music."

Bob Humphreys of council publicity said the fee would lower student ticket prices, make better talent available and "guarantee a spring concert," and allow the council to give assistance to area concerts.

Audits find UM fiscal, building violations

Dormitory funding practices questioned for abuses

By MICHAEL P. DORAN
Collegian Staff

UMass has engaged in residence hall funding practices which appear to be in violation of state laws, according to an audit obtained by the Collegian.

The Boston based accounting firm of Peat, Marwick and Mitchell audited the accounts of the residence hall system ending June 30, 1976 and found a series of inter-project loans totalling nearly $1.5 million. According to the language of management and services agreements in the legislation which enabled the UMass Building Authority to finance construction of projects 1 through 14, funds from one project may be spent only on that project, and not "commingled" with other funds.

The UMass Board of Trustees is responsible for the maintenance and operation of these projects, under the management and services agreements.

Director of Residential Resource Management Robert L. Campbell said the commingling of funds in the residence halls has been "going on since I have been director, and it has probably been going on before I was in (office)."

Stating the reason for the commingling of funds, Campbell said if the management and services agreements were adhered to, there would be a large difference in the rents charged between projects which are financially sound and those that aren't.

"If it's an illegal system we are engaged in, it is because it is the only rational way to go about it," said Campbell.

The audit reveals for the fiscal year 1976 loans were made from Residence Hall Trust Fund dorms and projects four and six to Lincoln and University Apartments' and projects eight, 10, 12, and 13. The loans totalled $1,061,050.

The loans were made because the most recently constructed projects were operating at a deficit and the older projects were fiscally sound, according to an administration report on the audit.

The audit also found $460,000 worth of furniture charged against projects one and two was given to projects four, six, eight, and 10.

Leaky roofs, insects abound in dorms

By E. PATRICK McQUAID
Collegian Staff

Students housed in University dormitories on campus are enduring a multitude of state sanitary and health code violations, according to documentation compiled by an outside architectural consulting firm and three student research organizations.

Chief among these violations are extensive roof leakage and numerous cases of insect infestation outlined in a 1976 internal damage and renovation report and reaffirmed in an August, 1977 physical audit. The audit was by the firm of Wallace, Floyd, Ellensweig, More, Inc. and recently made available to the Collegian.

The separate report also details several cases of rusted electrical outlets, extreme excess heat and in other cases lack of heat, broken toilets and other plumbing illegalities. The separate reports were compiled by the Student Center for Educational Research,

Changes seen in nuke opposition

Solar Power — Jobs
Nuclear Power = SNOW JOB

BAKERSFIELD, Cal. [Compiled Sources] — The overwhelming rejection of a nuclear power complex by voters in this conservative agricultural community has underscored a growing national trend among rural areas to oppose atomic reactors for essentially non-nuclear reasons. And it has cast a long shadow over the future of atomic energy in California — while strengthening the increasingly pro-solar hand of Gov. Jerry Brown.

In Seabrook, New Hampshire, reactors already under construction have stirred fears that the project will drain the local water table and deprive local home owners of their drinking supply. Seabrook residents are also unhappy about the prospect of hot water emissions from the plant that could damage the local fishing industry.

In Montague, 15 miles to the north of UMass nuclear opponents have campaigned against a plant scheduled to be built there on the grounds the plant would obstruct a natural aquifer and could deprive local residents of their drinking supply as well as cause damage to the Connecticut River.

The Public Service Co. of New Hampshire says it will truck water into the site of the Seabrook nuclear power plant if the town decides not to sell the company water.

Seabrook residents voted by an overwhelming majority Tuesday to deny any of its water supply to Public Service, which is building the nuclear power plant.

Seabrook selectman Clyde Brown says the town lawyer will be asked to determine the legality of the vote.

The vote at Tuesday night's town meeting was 964-to-265 against selling water to Public Service. The seacoast community's population, now at nearly six-thousand has doubled since 1974 — growth which has strained its water supply severely.

Public Service, is attempting to get a ten-year contract for water from the town for use in construction and operation of the $2.3 billion plant. The company says it will wait and see what happens, but added it will continue construction and truck in water if necessary.

Voters in Kern County in south-central California's San Joaquin Valley March 7 decisively rejected plans for a mammoth 5200-megawatt reactor complex slated for the town of Wasco. The vote was the first popular vote on atomic energy in California since the June 1976 rejection of a referendum aimed at restricting the state's nuclear development.

A staunchly conservative farm area, Kern County registered a strong pro-nuclear vote in that 1976 referendum. But when it came to allowing nuclear facilities in their own backyard, the county made a stunning turnaround, rejecting the measure by a margin of almost five to two.

A wide variety of local issues led to that rejection. Much opposition stemmed from the fact that the nuclear power plant was being spearheaded by the Los Angeles Department of Water and Power (DWP), and that the power was essentially for Los Angeles. Less than 10 per cent of the project's electricity was slated for use in Kern County.

The idea of "Los Angeles' nuclear power plant" in Kern County stirred resentment and angry memories. Back in the 20s Los Angeles developers turned to Kern County for water and engineered a dubious deal that served as the basis for the movie "Chinatown." Bumper stickers reading "Remember Owens Valley" are still common on Kern County pickups, and residents did not welcome another intrusion by a Los Angeles utility.

The battle also reverted to the old question of war. The enormous reactors were scheduled to consume thousands of gallons for cooling, and after three years of drought many local residents were dubious about where the operators would get it.

Officially, the plant was to be cooled with runoff from agricultural irrigation. San Joaquin farmers use deep irrigation trenches to capture runoff, and the plant builders hoped to use this to cool the reactor.

Under pressure, they also quietly admitted contingency plans to tap the California aqueduct, which supplies much of southern California's drinking water.

Local farmers greeted the plan with skepticism, speculating that the reactors might deprive them of precious irrigation water. The DWP also planned to flood 35,000 acres of farmland for a reservoir. Since the irrigation runoff would be saline in content, it would need to sit idle for a time while particulates settled out and the water became fit for cooling the reactors. The prospect of losing nearly six square miles of farmland angered locals, who claimed it would cost the region thousands of agricultural-jobs and substantial income.

Farmers also feared unbalanced weather problems due to steam emissions from the plant's huge cooling towers. Because the steam would also be chemically treated to keep it free of micro-organisms, farmers were concerned about chemicals settling on their fields, as well as damage to local weather patterns.

Indeed, the well-organized campaign to defeat the measure became one of the few major issues on which both farm owners and workers officially agreed. "All in all," 26-year-old Wasco farmer Jeff Fabbri said just before the vote, "I can't really think of any good reason to vote for the damn thing."

Nonetheless, the overwhelming rejection of the plant came as a shock to nuclear supporters who poured thousands of dollars into the county in a pre-election blitz.

The Kern County vote is the prime example of a pattern that is developing across the country in small communities slated for nuclear power plants; opposition for non-nuclear reasons commonly focused on water and agriculture.

In Texas, residents of Austin and San Antonio have become wary of the Glen Rose reactor being built near Ft. Worth because they fear the project might disrupt an aquifer.

Meanwhile, farm communities in upstate New York, Wisconsin and elsewhere have mounted campaigns against reactors out of fear of steam emissions that could unbalance weather and farming conditions.

Though Kern County's feelings toward Los Angeles are generally considered extreme, resentment by rural communities against projects slated for urban use has also begun to play a significant role on the politics of nuclear siting.

While the rise of opposition for reasons other than radioactivity may be part of a national pattern, the Kern County vote has already had a significant impact on future energy policy in the state of California.

Nuclear power has become one of the key campaign issues in the re-election effort of Gov. Jerry Brown. Brown has become increasingly anti-nuclear in recent months, terming the issue "the next Vietnam" and pledging to veto a bill now making its way through the legislature that would allow construction of a reactor complex at Sun Desert near the state's Arizona border.

Brown's Republican opponents challenge the governor's "windmill and woodchip" energy program and seem intent on making atomic power the chief issue of the campaign. The Kern County vote may put a serious crimp in that strategy.

"A rejection of nukes by such conservative areas can't help but strengthen Brown's hand," says long-time California anti-nuclear activist John Berger. "The Republicans have to be wary now of taking a strong pro-nuclear stand."

Indeed, Brown, who had already pulled the state out of a 10 per cent share in the San Joaquin plant, greeted the Kern County vote as "a message to those who spent millions of dollars on nuclear research" that they had better look at alternative sources of energy.

Campaign leaflets miss

Student Government Association co-presidential candidates Brad Goverman and Bill Edelstein yesterday tried to drop campaign leaflets on campus from a plane — and missed.

The leaflets were intended to fall on campus around the area of the library, but instead ended up in Belchertown and in and around the Wildwood school.

The pilot for the plane, Geoffrey Cohler, said that the "seven and eight year old vote" is taken care of.

Rent control opposed by Housing candidate

Donald J. Pelkey, Jr., a candidate for Amherst Housing Authority, recently said he would work to strengthen housing and rental assistance and oppose rent control elected to the authority.

Pelkey, area manager-co-coordinator for UMass housing, said landlords in Amherst "have the upper hand" over tenants, because most of the tenants are students. He also said students suffer because they are not politically organized and not permanent residents of the town.

He said rent control is "too extreme" a move, but said he favors a fair rent commission comprised of landlords, tenants, and townspeople.

"There is a definite split between landlords and townspeople on one hand, and tenants who are mostly students on the other hand," Pelkey said. "Townspeople see them (the students) as transients, not as a vital part of our economy and community."

Pelkey's other concerns are strenghtening housing and rental assistance programs.

Genocide charged in Israeli strike

CAIRO, Egypt [UPI] — Egypt accused Israel yesterday of launching an "organized attempt at the genocide of the Palestinian people" and urged the United States and other major powers to intervene immediately.

Foreign Minister Mohammed Kamel issued a statement saying the Israeli strike into southern Lebanon "aims at killing Palestinians because they are Palestinians. In other words, it is an organized attempt at the genocide of the Palestinian people."

These developments, Kamel said, "obstruct the efforts which are being made for the establishment of peace and point to more grave possibilities in the future."

He spoke before Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin told a Jerusalem news conference the two-day strike had ended and Israel now would occupy a six mile deep strip of Lebanon until all Palestinian guerrillas were driven out.

However, referring to earlier statements by Israeli chief-of-staff Gen. Mordechai Gur that Israel planned to set up a "security belt" on Lebanese soil, Kamel said:

"These aggressive statements and conceptions show that Israel still believes that its security can be realized by means of aggression and expansion, and not by means of the establishment of a just and durable peace.

"Egypt believes the whole world and the big five powers in particular should shoulder their responsibilities by ending the aggression immediately and altering the course of events in the direction of the establishment of a just and durable peace," he said.

Kamel said such an overall settlement should be based on Israel's recognition of the legitimate rights of the Palestinians, its total withdrawal from occupied Arab lands and "renunciation of its expansionist and aggressive objectives."

Shortly after he issued the statement, Kamel met with the ambassadors of the United States, Britain, France and West Germany — all members of the U.N. Security Council — to request immediate U.N. intervention.

"The wide-scale Israeli aggression on Lebanon, by land, air and sea, constitutes a grave development, a new Israeli violation of the U.N. charter and another obstacle in the way of realizing a just and durable peace," Kamel said.

In earlier statements to Belgian reporters covering the current visit of Belgian Foreign Minister Henri Simonet, Kamel said Begin's visit to Washington next week was part of the peace process "but obviously he is not helping himself or anybody by this spectacular aggression that has been started and we don't know when it will end."

However, he added, "There is no going back on our peace plans."

Kamel also was critical of the Palestinian guerrilla raid that triggered the counterstrike.

"This type of action and reaction is a defiance to peace," he said. "The starting point to put an end to violence in the area is Israeli recognition of the Palestinians' right to self-determination. But hitting and hitting back will lead to more aggressions both ways at the expense of a lasting peace."

New coal pact offered; Miller sees approval

WASHINGTON [AP] — The United Mine Workers' bargaining council approved a new tentative contract last night and sent it to the coalfields for miners to ratify and end their 100-day coal strike.

The vote was 22-17, according to a bargaining council member. A union spokesman said he understood that the ratification vote would be held on a single day, a week from Friday.

Earlier, UMW President Arnold Miller predicted that the union's 160,000 members would approve the contract offer, which he said contained "vast improvements" over one rejected 10 days ago.

Miller said he "just couldn't imagine the rank-and-file turning it down this time."

However, the vote of the 39-member council was closer than its 25-13 vote in favor of the previous contract proposal which was defeated by a more than 2-1 vote of the membership.

The closer council vote raises doubts about the potential success of the new pact when it is sent to the union rank-and-file for ratification.

"A 21-15 vote in the bargaining council would not help me sleep very well," said one Carter administration official who has followed the strike closely.

The council, which discussed the contract proposal for several hours before voting, was to have met at the union's headquarters but the meeting was abruptly moved to the Labor Department after several dozen striking miners began picketing the union building.

Stockbridge senate gives $1000 for career day

By MARTHA KIMBALL
Collegian Staff

The Stockbridge Student Senate last night unanimously passed a budget of $1000 for next year's Professional Development Day at its meeting in the Campus Center.

The senate also discussed a proposed two dollar hike in the student activity fee.

Mike Leonardo, last year's senate treasurer, opposed the fee hike. Leonardo said surplus money from previous years could be used to operate Development Day.

Peter Quinlan, chairperson of the Development Day Comm., proposed the two dollar hike in the fee at the last senate meeting to cover expenses of Professional Day in the future.

Leonardo said, "there is a $5000 surplus in the senate budget from the fiscal years '75-'76 and '76-'77. I was disgusted when I read about the fee hike in the paper. There is no present need. Development Day should be able to run for three years with present funds."

"The senate should spend the extra funds, then propose a tax, maybe in two to three years, but not now," Leonardo said. "I also question the longevity of Development Day. There is a good active chairperson now, but what about in a couple years? The students will be taxed for no reason."

Quinlan replied, "as long as the committee has money for its budget next year, that's all I'm concerned about."

"Get rid of the extra funds before RSO loses it. That can happen very easily there," Leonardo said.

Next year's budget of $1000 for Development Day was unanimously passed by the senate.

A $300 allotment for entertaining the faculty and exhibitors at a dinner following Development Day brought discussion from the senate before they unanimously passed the $1000 budget for next year's Professional Development Day activities.

Geoff Mcduff, senate president, questioned the reasons for the dinner.

"The exhibitors get free advertising besides the dinner," he said.

Quinlan said, "the dinner gives faculty and business people a personal acquaintance. They are giving the school a big favor. This is our return. Eventually the dinner will be eliminated. It's just to show our appreciation."

In other senate business, Linsay McMurtry, current senate vice-president, was elected temporary student senate president. McMurtry said more organized communication in the senate is a goal next year. Beth Jacobs was elected temporary executive secretary.

Ratification predicted

Senate votes on treaty

WASHINGTON [AP] — Panama Canal treaty proponents yesterday claimed to have "at least 67 votes" — the number needed to ratify the first of the two pacts in today's showdown vote in the Senate.

"As of this afternoon, we've got them," a source close to Senate leaders said yesterday. The source, who declined to be identified, would not name which senators among five holdouts apparently had decided to vote for ratification.

Unofficial counts had shown supporters of the treaties with 65 votes and opponents with 30.

Senate Majority Leader Robert C. Byrd, D-W.Va., earlier had said "I think the votes will be there," when the Senate takes up the measure today that would assure the U.S. of the right to defend the canal and of continued use of the waterway once it is turned over to Panama.

Sen. Paul Laxalt, R.-Nev., chief strategist for the opponents, said Wednesday the situation "doesn't look very good."

The word that proponents had enough votes to ratify the first of the two pacts came as the Senate approved a change in the neutrality treaty that had been agreed to by the Carter administration to win the votes of several uncommitted senators.

Over the objections of members who argued it was unnecessary, the Senate voted 82 to 16 to approve a reservation, sponsored by Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., that would allow for future U.S.-Panama talks on keeping U.S. military forces in Panama after the year 2000. Nunn and others had made their votes for the neutrality pact contingent on acceptance of their reservation.

Five previously opposed or undeclared senators announced their support of the treaty Wednesday as top White House officials launched an intensive, last-gasp lobbying campaign on Capitol Hill.

The White House committed its biggest names, including Vice President Walter Mondale, White House aide Hamilton Jordan, troubleshooter Robert Strauss and top Pentagon officials, to the effort. President Carter also met with several senators at the White House.

It is expected that all will be on hand for Thursday's climactic vote, and Senate leaders think that one or two senators will reveal their decisions with the actual vote.

One consideration for proponents in their quest for support was finding a way to keep a politically-vulnerable member from being the one to cast the decisive 67th vote.

Conservative political strategists say that if the treaty wins, an extra commitment will be made to thwarting the reelection bid of the man with the vote that did it.

Republican Sen. Edward Brooke, R-Mass., and Democratic Sens. Russell Long of Louisiana, Dennis DeConcini of Arizona and Don Riegle of Michigan formally announced their support for the first of the two pacts, which guarantees U.S. rights to defend and use the canal after the year 2000.

Several others who were undeclared also were to disclose their decisions, but two of them — Wendell Ford, D-Ky., and Charles McMathias, R-Md. changed their minds.

Mathias is regarded by both sides as favoring the pacts although he has never discussed it publicly. Sources close to Ford, who is regarded as a probable no vote, said Mondale asked him to hold off his announcement.

The DeConcini and Brooke declarations left Sens. Jennings Randolph, D-W.Va., Paul G. Hatfield, D-Mont., Henry Bellmon, R-Okla., and Edward Zorinsky, D-Neb., and Ford in the role of mystery man.

Bellmont in recent days has been claimed by both sides. Hatfield was termed as probable no, but said yesterday he hadn't made up his mind. Zorinsky, who has jumped from one side to the other and is now uncommitted, was tentatively scheduled to see Carter. Randolph, in a tough reelection fight, is seen as a probably no unless his vote is desperately needed by Carter.

Employment stats filed for UM class of '77

By JURGEN KERN
Collegian Staff

A recent alumni survey of the class of '77 by the Student Affairs and Research Evaluation Office provided interesting statistics about alumni employment.

Sixty-one of those who received undergraduate degrees now are employed full-time, with the highest percentage (75%) in the School of Business Administration. Nine per cent are unemployed and nine per cent are employed part-time.

Miscellaneous majors like Bachelors Degree with Individual Concentration or had the highest unemployment rate (14%) University without walls, Education showed the highest percentage employed part-time (22%). Engineering majors had only one per cent unemployed. Forty-two per cent of those not employed full-time were in graduate school.

The questionnaire, mailed to alumni in the summer of 1977, is a revised version of previous questionnaires. The Alumni Office mailed the questionnaires and the research office collected, analyzed, and reported the data.

Of those employed full-time, 30 per cent found their jobs before graduation; 32 per cent took up to two months, and 34 per cent took three to six months to find work. Engineering majors found work fastest, with 56 per cent hired before graduation. On the other hand, 12 per cent of education majors had found jobs before graduating.

Fifty-nine per cent of those now working full-time reported their jobs are related to their UMass majors. Health Sciences majors placed highest in this category with 87 per cent. Arts and Sciences placed lowest with 35 per cent.

College job offers up 31%

The New York Times — The job market for college graduates looks generally better this year than it did last year, but for graduates with master's degrees it seems to be worse.

Employers in industry, business and government have made 31 per cent more job offers to candidates for bachelor's degrees this year than they had at this time in 1977, according to a survey by the College Placement Council. Candidates for master's degrees, on the other hand, have received 5 per cent fewer job offers than they did last year.

The council, which is based in Bethlehem, Pa., prepares three reports each year on trends in college job recruiting. The survey released last week, the second for the 1977-78 academic year, was based on the number of job offers received by students at 158 colleges and universities in the United States.

The increase in job offers this year is not as large as that found last year, according to the council. By March 1977, employers had offered college seniors 49 per cent more jobs than they had at the same point in 1976.

At the master's degree level in fields that have recently been very strong, business administration, engineering and accounting, employers want fewer graduates than they did last year, the council's survey indicated.

At the bachelor's degree level, however, engineering students are still among the most sought-after on campus. Of all the job offers to bachelor's degree candidates, 57 per cent went to engineering students; they got 44 per cent more job offers than they did last year.

Students in the scientific disciplines have received 35 per cent more offers than last year. There have been 16 per cent more offers for business majors and 8 per cent more for students in the humanities and social sciences, the council found.

State probe requested for fire, safety abuses

By BETH SEGERS
Collegian Staff

The state Attorney General's Consumer Protection Division yesterday received a request it initiate an investigation of fire and safety code violations in dormitories and University-owned housing, a University source said.

The request, sent to Assistant Attorney General Jonathan Z. Souweine by student paralegal Hal Schatzoff, asked for the investigation and the assistance of the Consumer Protection Division to establish jurisdictional authority for the students over the public housing.

No decision will be made on whether an investigation will be initiated by the Attorney General's office until Souweine studies the complaint and meets with Consumer Deputy Chief Rick Gross and Consumer Division Chief Paula Gold. The final decision to investigate will be made by Gold, who could not be reached yesterday for comment.

The complaint was sent to Souweine after an audit of the UMass housing system recommended $18.8 million be spent for housing system renovations, $8.7 million of which is needed to bring housing up to health and safety code standards.

Souweine yesterday said he would not discuss particular cases until the complaint and investigation became a public document. He said the complaint and request for an investigation and assistance for student would be discussed by Gross and Gold after he looked further at the letter sent by Schatzoff. He would not comment on the housing violations.

★ Leaky roofs, insects

the Student Legal Services Office, and the Student Organizing Project.

In several instances dorm rooms have been "condemned" by the Office of Residential Resource Management due to the extent of damage found on their roofs. According to Faye Wilson, head of residence in Coolidge Upper, (floors 13 through 22) one dorm room under her jurisdiction was declared "out of service" after a year of complaints.

"We were told the money just wasn't there to repair the roof," Wilson said last night. "The woman living in room 2217 was not satisfied with the only alternative the University offered her, which was to move out. The leak extends all the way across the room and she had absolutely no place to put her bed or desk."

The room has been "out of service" since the beginning of this semester when the occupant did not return to the dormitory.

The architectural firm continued to report their findings in mid-October, 1977, when they photographed the roofs from a helicopter with infra-red film. They estimate it would cost $3,955,458 to repair the roofs and recommend the University immediately budget $884,463 for more serious repairs.

The firm also estimates it would cost $668,062 to repair off-campus married student housing roofs and that $183,339 be immediately slated for that project.

The infra-red photographs reveal poor drainage systems, improper brooming during original roof application, buckling and blistering of the tar and gravel membrane, eroded and rotted organic felt flashing, and open gaps leading directly in and through the insulation surfaces.

Ice and snow form a "second roof," the report states, which slowly drain down through the crevices, dripping, at some times "pouring" into rooms located on top floors. In James dormitory in Southwest, the report labels a photo of the roof as "A Sea of Blisters," and recommends immediate action.

The report also says some dormitories have an energy loss estimated as high as 20 per cent. Machmer Hall, was labeled as having a 105 per cent energy loss.

The man with his finger in the dike is Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs Robert L. Woodbury, who told the Collegian last night that some $12 to $15,000 has been allocated for roof repairs per high rise dormitory in the Southwest area.

The five towers will be repaired, said Woodbury, through Trust Fund accounts — money generated from student rents and fees — and is currently out to bit but actual work should begin by early June.

"The money has been appropriated for this year," he explained, "but will probably not be paid out until fiscal 1979 when the work is completed. This is not a budget matter because it will not involve state money."

State funds will enter the picture at some later date, however, as Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery will ask the commonwealth for capital outlay totalling $3.3 million to renovate dorms to meet new handicapped building codes.

According to Ashoke K. Ganguli, staff assistant at the Office of Residential Resource Management, a new "miracle process" developed by ITT will be used to repair the roofs.

"No stripping of the existing roofs will be necessary," he said. "A layer of insulation is applied over the roof and Trocal, a new sealant, is applied over this. The Trocal breathes with the changing weather conditions and won't crack so easily."

Organization, which claimed responsibility for the attack Saturday on two buses along the Tel Aviv-Haifa road. Nine of the 11 guerrillas involved were killed.

Begin, asked if the raid would hamper peace talks, said that if "Egypt seriously wants negotiations...all the events of the past few days will not present a serious obstacle."

In Washington, Israeli Ambassador Simcha Dinitz met with State Department officials for 90 minutes Wednesday evening and began discussions on "arrangements" to keep Palestinian terrorists from returning to southern Lebanon.

Israel says the raiders came by sea from Lebanon.

In a letter to the United Nations, Lebanon denied responsibility for the guerrilla attack and protested Israel's "naked aggression." It did not ask for a meeting of the Security Council.

Begin said the attack "was in the fullest sense of the word, the use of the inherent right of legitimate self-defense."

★ Loans

"Southwest was in desperate need of furniture the year the audit was done, so we borrowed the money from projects one and two," Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery said. "We hope we don't have to pay it back."

The loans and furniture purchases are not likely to be paid back in the foreseeable future, according to the audit.

In a letter to Bromery, Peat, Marwick and Mitchell declined to express an opinion on the residence hall accounts for fiscal 1976, saying they were unable to get the University legal counsel's opinion on the legality of the loans and purchases.

Bromery said the administration has asked the UMass President's office legal counsel to first look into the question of whether $2.4 million owed to the University residence halls can be commingled between the various dormitory projects. That would decide whether the funds can be commingled to balance residence hall accounts.

"We are probably as close to getting a legal opinion on this question as we have ever been," Bromery said.

Miller says Carter should up fuel prices

WASHINGTON [AP] — President Carter should take early action to increase fuel prices by imposing fees or quotas on oil imports if Congress fails to quickly enact his energy program, the new chairman of the Federal Reserve Board said yesterday.

Chairman G. William Miller said he favors an import fee, and said the President should be given authority by Congress "to scale it as necessary to deal with the problem."

"I hope that takes place," he said. "We're getting down to very few choices and we need to do something soon," he said in appearance before the Senate Budget Committee.

Miller said that quick action to reduce U.S. consumption of foreign oil is one of two things the government should do to build foreign confidence in the U.S. dollar. The other is to "come up with a strong anti-inflation program," he said.

Miller expressed great concern about what he said is an apparent quickening in the pace of inflation above the current rate of 6 per cent and which he said could darken the nation's economic outlook.

"I hope we have the courage to make inflation the highest priority for domestic economic policy — right now," he said. The problem has grown worse in the past few months, he added.

Fuel conservation linked to new jobs

WASHINGTON [AP] — The government could create an energy policy that would conserve fuel at the same time it reduces national unemployment, three economists told Congress yesterday.

The economists, from the Council on Economic Priorities, the University of Illinois and Cornell University, told a hearing by the House-Senate Joint Economic Committee there is direct link between the right kind of energy policy and the creation of jobs.

But they suggested different ways of going about it.

James W. Benson of the Council of Economic Priorities, a non-profit research group, suggested community energy projects throughout the nation doing chores such as making housing in inner cities more energy-efficient.

"The poor and unemployed would learn new skills to insulate, refinish and clean the old builddngs and neighborhoods," Benson aid.

Haddock & cod quotas exceeded

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Commercial fishing for cod and haddock off New England will be prohibited for 13 days starting Sunday, the National Marine Fisheries Service said yesterday.

The service said fishermen have exceeded the quarterly limit of 5,413 metric tons of cod by 300 metric tons. The haddock quota of 2,200 metric tons was exceeded by 1,250 metric tons or 70 per cent, the service said.

On March 1, the service prohibited fishing specifically for the two species. But commercial fishermen were allowed to keep any cod and haddock taken incidential to fishing for other species.

Starting Sunday, however, any cod or haddock taken must be separated from the catch and thrown back, fisheries officials said.

"We realize some fish will be lost when they are returned to the sea," said William Gordon, fisheries service northeast regional director.

"However, we also believe the fishermen will be more selective in their fishing if they know they cannot keep these fish and must sort them from their catch and throw them over the side."

FCC to check unsolicited calls

WASHINGTON [AP] — The Federal Communications Commission decided Wednesday to look into what the federal government can do to restrict unsolicited "junk" telephone calls.

The FCC said it was inviting public comments on how unsolicited telephone calls invade privacy, compared with highway billboards, mobile loud speakers, radio and TV ads, newspaper and magazine ads, "junk mail" and door-to-door sales calls.

The commission staff also will research the legal question of what the FCC can do to police this area.

Philip V. Permut, deputy chief of the FCC's Common Carrier Bureau, told the commission that if the bureau finds legislation is needed, it will come back quickly before the commission to recommend it.

He said the FCC has received more than 1,000 replies to its Sept. 13 request for comment on a petition by Citizens Communications Center, a public-interest law firm, calling for FCC action. Permut said most of the letters supported the petition.

The commission also has been asked by five members of Congress to act, including Rep. Les Aspin, D-Wis., the chief sponsor among 84 other House members of a bill to regulate unsolicited phone calls. Sen. Wendell Anderson, D-Minn., has introduced a similar bill in the Senate.

The FCC plans to look into person-to-person phone calls and automated phone calls, which are dialed automatically and involved tape-recorded messages.

The commission said it will seek to find out if it has jurisdiction to regulate the calls if they do not cross state lines.

Lack of safety cited at Plymouth nuke

BOSTON [UPI] — The Nuclear Regulatory Commission yesterday charged the Boston Edison Co. with failure to protect workers from exposure to radiation at the electric utility's Pilgrim I Nuclear Power Station.

A Boston Edison spokesman confirmed a NRC charge that on Nov. 23, 1977, one of two workers sent to repair a valve in a nuclear waste room at the 664,000-kilowatt plant at Plymouth, was exposed to an overdose of radiation.

The NRC said the workman received a dose of 3.56 rem. A rem is a unit used to measure absorbed radiation dosage.

Not 'a bunch of farmers'

To the Editor:

Well, yesterday was the last straw. Many a time have I been tempted to write to the Collegian but Monday really upset me. I'm sick and tired of people putting down the Stockbridge School of Agriculture.

Reading through the special section on Spring Fashion, '78, I came across an article entitled "UMass Fashion." The author did not have the nerve to sign their name to the piece, but certainly had plenty of nerve to make the statement "anyone can smell before you can see is probably from Stockbridge."

I, along with several others in the Stockbridge School, took great offense to that statement. Stockbridge students do not smell any differently than your typical UM student. Although I've often wondered if maybe the Collegian staff thinks so. They've neglected to print a few articles on some of our finer student functions, but probably didn't think twice about printing trash.

I don't want to place sole blame on the Collegian staff, though. I think it's time the entire campus thought twice before making any rash statements about Stockbridge. Contrary to popular belief we are not "a bunch of farmers". We are a group of fine, hard-working, young people. We get good grades and have a lot of pride in ourselves, and especially in our school.

Stockbridge is a good school, a damn good school. And if you don't believe me, ask anyone who has ever been associated with us; students, both past and present, faculty, staff and administration.

Let the athletes show their talents

To the Editor:

Yesterday, as I walked through the Campus Center I was approached by a member of the Revolutionary Student Brigade with a petition opposing South African representation in the Davis Cup tennis matches. I stated that I wouldn't sign the petition.

We began to discuss the conflict and he confessed to not being totally clear about the particulars of the issue. Nor am I.

I do know however, what can result when sports are used as a political forum. The memory of Munich must be vivid in everyone. The Games in Montreal were also saddened when many of the world's greatest athletes were unable to compete because their countries were excluded for political reasons.

Last year, the court for the Davis Cup competition was drenched with oil by demonstrators. Acts such as these do not educate those responsible for the racism in South Africa. Everyone is hurt.

The Revolutionary Student Brigade, by advocating such acts, fractionalize and alienate the resistance to the minority regime. Such indiscriminate acts are done with a blindness as severe as that of the racial oppressors in South Africa.

Let the athletes demonstrate their talents. Debate politics in the proper spheres. For as Peter Lamb, a black member of the South African team stated: "my game isn't politics, I play tennis."

Steven Westra

A poor joke on all of us

To the Editor:

I would like to begin by saying that I have never written a letter to the editor before, but now there are certain things to be said. First, the election of a SGA president can not, and should not be taken as lightly as it appears to students, the Collegian writers, and even the presidential candidiates themselves have chosen to do. The fact that there are thousands of students, and millions of dollars at stake does not seem to matter. A student government with CLOWNS as the only candidates is certainly a poor joke on both of us.

I also feel that it is important to say something about the current controversy over Mr. Rob Ranney's comic strip. The use of humor is to try to make people laugh is obviously the point that he is trying to get to. He has a long way to go. It is one thing to use satire to enhance and further the relevant discussions of our times, and quite another to use ignorance in place of intelligence to depict the social condition.

Finally, but clearly not the end, I would like to say that life in the United States is not the CARNATION LAND that it is at UMass. The practical and rational interaction of people in a specific community is the only means of forward positive movements. As long as our writers react to a situation rather than deal with it as a problem, as long as our officials act like fools in a play, as long as our INTELLIGENT community continues to neglect the more basic human issues for personal entertainment we will continue to be looked upoon as the juvinile center of the state

Don't you throw 'the first stone'

To the Editor:

In response to a letter on Feb. 15, and signed by Miguel Rivera about UMass accused of discrimination against minority employes and students, I would like to share further commentaries on the issue.

Mr. Rivera seems to be very committed to fight discrimination on this campus. In his letter he advocates for some individual that allegally has been discriminated by UMass. He seems to be very serious when he says: "... as a member of a community discriminated against..." or when he writes: "...The Latin Community, ...have been following quite closely some cases that we consider to be examples of discrimination against our people." And then he proceeds explaining the case in his supporting letter for his colleague. Perhaps his claim is authentically a true case of discrimination and not just another of his many political moves. However, I am not questioning the validity of this specific case, but the sincerrity of the one who is making the claim; Miguel Rivera.

*I would like to take this opportunity and ask Mr. Rivera and his so-called "Latin Community" * [* Please read "political party comrades"]if you don't also "follow quite closely" the case of the former editor of Eco Latino that was kicked out by you and your comrades, after being personally insulted and threatened by you, few days after he was elected by AHORA's General Assembly on September 15, 1977?*

Isn't it also "an example of discrimination" to arbitrarilly shut down Eco Latino, the only Hispanic newspaper of this area, simply because the new-elected editior "dared" to express his opinion in a Collegian editorial about the meaning of the Third World?

Isn't also an "example of discrimination" when freshman Jamie Ponse, President[?] of AHORA during a meeting with Eco Latino staff, despite the presence of a graduate student Edmundo Velasquez Sub-Director of B.C.P., asked the editor's wife to leave the meeting alledging that "she was a graduate student and not allowed to attend?"

Isn't it also an "example of discrimination" when all decision making processes related with AHORA's $10,000.00--budget allocations are done exclusively by you, claiming to be "the majority of the minorities" to those of us who not happened to belong to your nationality, ethnic race or just disagree with you?

Isn't also "an example of discrimination" when you always monopolize 99 percent of the time all AHORA's Assemblies and meetings last, only to vociferate your racial and political prejudices using lables on people such as "whites", "capitalists", "racists", "agents", "sellouts". etc., to describe and to denigrate fellow UMie students who don't match you ethnicaly or politically?

Isn't also "an an example of discrimination" when in the fall semester of '76 your friend Lillian Levitt, Student Teaching Supervisor of the Bililingual-Bicultural Program of the School of Education, arbitraarily suspended a Hispanic student from her student teaching practice, took her Certificatoon away, at the very second day this student was assigned to her practice?

Isn't also an" an example of discrimination" when on November 28, 1977 another of your friends, Vicky Hernandez, Coordinatior of the Council for Human Rights in Northampton, sent to superintendent of schools a statement of the "needs of the Bilingual Program of Northampton " saying that: "...Spanish must be taught by a qualified teacher in Spanish, [Hispanic, preferrably Puertorican]"? Or when she even tried to block the hiring of a non- Puertorican hispanic teacher?

Consequently Mr. Rivera and comrades: Your problem is rather simple, probably you have already been told about, it's called "political hypocrisy".. And it deprives you from conceiving that discrimination is a widely common disease. In fact, that it may not only come from "whites", or from "capitalists", but it may also come from "hispanics", or even from "blacks", or from "communists" as well. Discrimination may come from any one who happened to be a human being. Now "political hypocrisy" is what makes you discriminate other students cowardly covered under the flag of "the Cause". Hereafter, if all of you want to fight discrimination, you ought to start changing your aggressinve attitudes and behavior towards our fellow UMie students, start working towards improving your offensive expressions and vocabulary. If you really want to fight discrimination, why don't you start with yourselves?

After all you are also "sinners", likewise many people here in UMass, in this country, around the world, and everywhere, selfish people who seek nothing else but your own personal benefits and interests. So please, don't you throw "the first stone", because I am getting woefully sick of stepping on your political craps over and over and over...

Third world workshops apology

To The Editor:

For all our efforts to make International Women's Week relevant and meaningful to all women, there were tinges of rascism in the program that must be recognized. I am speaking of the fact that the Third World women's were some of the last to be organized and, therefore, were not confirmed in time to be included in the Women's week Brochure. Moreover, their late scheduling meant that some were given room assignments in Southwest without sufficient advertising, and that some suffered because of last minute time changes.

These consequences were not due to any conscious neglect of the workshops or disrespect for their facilitators. They were, however, the products of a culture that tends to "forget" about Third World women rather consistently, even when discussing rascism.

As a coordinator of Third World women's workshops, I would like to apologize for my inability to overcome the time handicap so as to avoid these significcant failures. I would like, especially, to apoligize to Esther Terry, and those who wished to participate in her workshop, for the incorrect scheduling that appeared in the Collegian.

Bosses sister tells her story

To the Editor:

I have kept my mouth shut and bit my tongue for the last time. Until now I felt that the stirke at Packard's was a labor management dispute that should be dealt with in an objective fashion. Recent editorials and articles in the Collegian and other papers have shown that this is not happening. In the past and presently, I have done kitchen work, waitresed, torn down walls, and hostessed at Packard's. I am an employee but more importantly [at least for me] I am Bob McGovern's sister.

For those of you who may doubt my credibility, I ask only that you finish reading this letter. There are things that the striking employees have failed to mention concerning the management and concerning their positions as waitresses at Packards. Over the past two weeks the restaurant has been the object of many slurs, character included.

The following are some of the thing that the general public has not been made aware of:

1. One of the striking waitresses I observed while hostessing, ignored her tables to talk to friends at the bar, and was totally insulted when told to "empty ashtrays".

2. Another striking waitress works a total of six hours a week[by choice].

3. One waitress [and there is proof of this] completed nine checks correctly out of approximately fifty.

4. One women because of a personal problem a was told she could take off as much time as was needed and could return without notice to her full schedule.

5. Another waitress refuses to use the adding machine because she doesn't "trust" it. She is then confused when her addition is incorrect.

The above five waitresses are walking a picket line and seem to have forgotten that my brother has worked 24 hours a day to improve the quality of service and the environment at Packard's. They seem to have forgotten that some people work hard for a living and have dreams other than theirs. Oh, one last thing, they seem to have forgotten that Bob and his woman friend worked Christmas so that they could all go home.

I, as a woman, feel that the striking waitresses have turned their chic rhetoric into cheap rhetoric and are abusing the woman's rights issue to the hilt.

Amherst Chinese Food has come a long way since the days when it opened five years ago with owner Tso-cheng Chang at the range, and paper plates on the tables. Soon after opening, Miss Lilly Huang took charge of the kitchen. Her credentials include: cooking school in Taiwan, being a chef for a Chinese embassy in South America where she prepared banquets for 300 people at a time, and being a private chef for a prominent Chinese a family in the U. S. In 1977 Amherst Chinese recieved an American Diner's Society "Good Dining Award" after being nominated by an anonymous fan, and has acquired a following of devotees from coast to coast who always make it a point to stop in for a meal on their trips back to Amherst.

After Amherst Chinese Food's first year of business, enthusiastic customers began to ask Chang when he would expand the 30-seat dining room to accomodate diners who often had to queue up outside the door to wait. Chang says he would like to expand his restaurant but is waiting for the right time and place so that he can keep his overhead down, and in turn, his prices low enough for everyone, particularly students, to afford. The dining room is small and informal, with charming handpainted signs on the walls asking customers to refrain from smoking when the restaurant is crowded.

The food is mainly Mandarin, which comes from the North of China. Ten years ago there were few Mandarin restaurants in the U.S. The different regions of China, like the different regions of most countries are characterized by cooking techniques and styles appropriate to the types of foods most plentiful there. In Mandarin cooking, many dishes are based on flour as the main starch instead of rice, and Amherst Chinese Food's menu reflects this with their chow-mein, lo mein, dumpling and moo shi dishes. Moo shi chicken, beef, shrimp, pork, or vegetables are very popular items here. A moo shi dish is a plate full of colorful vegetables and/or meat, served with very thin, transluscent "mandarin pancakes" or crepes. Each diner is supposed to fill one of the pancakes with the vegetable combination and fold three sides toward the center like an envelope. The first bite is then taken from the open end. Another specialty is the fried dumplings, which are filled with ground pork and surrounded by crisp fried dough. Chang suggests that these be eaten dipped in a mixture of vinegar and hot mustard on the plate. They are delicious!

Seven different soups are offered, with fish ball soup, Szechuan pickle and pork soup, and sea weed soup for the adventurers in any crowd. Chang relates that one of his customers, a local student, was so enamored of his hot and sour soup, that her friends gave her a gift certificate for 15 of them for her birthday! One thousand to 1200 egg rolls are made at the restaurant each week, and the tofu, or bean curd is also made on the premesis. Most restaurants do not put in the time and care to make these themselves

In addition to making his own egg rolls and bean curd, Chang goes one step further and actually grows his own vegetables. All of the vegetables that can be cultivated in this climate are grown organically on his naturally fertile farm in Whately. Chang graduated UMass in 1972 with a doctorate in plant science and grows: Chinese cabbage, Chinese leeks, Chinese radishes and pea pods, water spinach, tomatoes, onions and peppers. These days when most of the produce consumed in Mass. is grown in California, Chang actually exports some of his 50,000 lbs. of Chinese radishes and 20,000 lbs. of Chinese cabbage to California. Chang also sells some of his fresh produce at the Amherst farmer's market in the town square, and he says local customers love it.

The blue paper menu offers 11 lunch specials, served from 11:30 to 3:00 p.m. and each comes in large size ($1.55) and small ($1.09). There are eight dinner specials weekdays at around $3.00 each, with different combinations of meat, chicken, shrimp, vegetables and rice. Then the menu is broken into main categories of poultry, meat pork, seafood and vegetables, and there are several combinations and variations in each category. Vegetarians will have no problem satisfying their appetites and nutritional requirements here. There are also combination platters with egg rolls, pork fried rice, and one of seven main dishes for around $3.00. Fragrant jasmine tea is served with all dishes and diners are invited to bring their own alcoholic beverages if they so desire.

Below The Salt takes its name from the relationship between nobles and peasants at the medieval European dinner table. The preciousness of salt requires that it be placed accessible to the lords and beyond the peasants' reach. Hence, the peasants sat "below the salt".

In an age where the tools of expression are like cultural salt, our paper is dedicated to the restoration of the participatory function of art, music and literature as well as physical culture.

Cheap shot misses mark

by K. STEPHEN SHAIN

In an attempt to discredit the Venceremos Brigade, Expo-Cuba '78, and the World Festival of Youth and Students movement on this campus in one fell swoop, someone has gone through the money, time and effort to manufacture and distribute a phony leaflet advertising a nonexistent event to take place on a fictitious date. Hundreds of leaflets bearing the friendly smiling face of Fidel Castro announcing a "Cuban Cultural Night" to be held in Grayson House the night of Saturday (sic) March 16 have been distributed throughout the campus. Allegedly "to support the Venceremos Brigade," the event, according to Joyce Chestnut, Grayson's head of residence, has never been scheduled and spokespeople for the Brigade claim that they, too, have nothing to do with it. Obviously, the phony leaflets are part of a hoax designed to confuse students and undermine the credibility of any organization aligning itself with the Cuban people.

Despite the leaflet's slick appearance, the person, people, or agency responsible for it are not and never were friends of either Castro or the Cuban people. They are using one of the oldest tricks in the political-saboteur's arsenal to disrupt and discredit this campus' most ardent fighters of imperialism.

Although there is no way to prevent such tactics of confusion, the campus community can guard itself against division by purging itself of those elements that breed and disseminate false or misleading information. The lessons of the student movement of the sixties must not be forgotten; the infiltration, confusion, division, and control of active, popular, and progressive student organizations has been a feature of American university life for a long, long time. Only those political strategies that can thwart the divisive manipulation of students can ever hope to succeed. Conscientious activity around a concrete program and a method of identifying and isolating those elements that undermine your chances of success are modes of political work that go hand in hand.

The reason for the current effort of political sabotage is simple. This summer, thousands of youth from all over the world will descend upon Havana, Cuba to attend the XI World Festival of Youth and Students.

Dedicated to the theme, "youth accuse imperialism," the Festival will embrace many different social, cultural, political, and economic aspects of young people's life throughout the world and combine them to provide an unforgettable experience of truly international dimensions. The people of Cuba will host the Festival and provide food and accomodations as well as granting each delegate "honorary citizenship" for the week that they are there.

In Amherst, a local festival committee has been established with the express purposes of spreading the festival message and recruiting 6-10 people from the area to go to Cuba as part of the 400 member U.S. national delegation. Receiving support from the campus' long-standing and broad-based Venceremos Brigade and the cooperation of the Expo-Cuba '78 committee, the festival movement is gaining momentum on campus and it is hoped that enough funds have been raised by summer to send the Amherst delegation to Cuba without charge.

It is because of the broad support that the festival movement enjoys and the international attention and recognition that the festival will receive that has forced agents or dupes of agents into developing and pursuing their hackneyed tactic of confusion, division, and control with phony leaflets. It is the fear that 6-10 people will go to Cuba from Amherst and come back in the fall and help smash the big, fabricated media-pushed, business-approved lie about socialism that has prompted "Big Brother" to rear his ugly head. Do us and yourselves a favor; next time you see "Big Brother" poking his nose around or hear her running her effluent mouth, let us know. We thrive on news.

or life isn't easy in a black hole

by TED PAGE

"Oh, blow it our your ass Elma!", bellowed Henry while dunking a tea bag into his innertube glass. Henry was employing a very special tea bag dunker that was powered by ripe, heavy turnips falling repeatedly on the right side of a Tibetan bamboo balance. As the turnips fell on the right plate of the balance, the opposite plate would rise - bringing the drenched tea bag with it. Henry thought it mildly amusing that three million years ago Earth men used to dunk their tea bags manually.

Elma, a pitted humanoid female considerably past her peak in sexual performance, sat comfortably in a rocking chair with her wrinkled feet soaking in a hot bucket of nuclear waste. A red shawl was draped over her sagging shoulders that led, eventually, to her main torso, which was covered with thin slabs of granite. Elma was pissed. Life isn't easy in a black hole.

"Why," bitched Elma, "don't we move the hell out'a this damn black hole and buy a nice pit house in the solar plexus of quadricetylpridinium, where we can start a toilet paper recycling plant and make enough money to buy some children? I'm sick of knitting 'wang-warmers' for the imperial Arridian soldiers. When did one of those creepy bastards ever knit anything for me, huh? I mean, I'm not exactly the type of seductive maiden they rape constantly on their so called 'imperial crudges'- but that doesn't mean I've completely forgotten the age old art of electrical fornication! And look at you, Henry! All you do is drive around the Semantic Power Driver and squeeze filthy tea bags all day. I tell you I've had it!" Elma returned to her knitting with a look of extreme mental constipation playing checkers on her brow.

Henry looked up from his tea and glared at his grating wife. "You don't seem to realize what a black hole is..."boomed Henry. "Why, the gravity is so strong here that not even light can escape from its pull. You know, at this very moment you and I are compressed flatter and smaller than any crepe ever made in the history of the universe? The only reason we're alive is because we were compressed proportionately."

"Up yours" murmured Elma while shifting her toes in the tepid nuclear waste.

"That's it," perked Henry in an aggravated tone, "I'm going for a ride!" Dropping his innertube mug into a nearby sink he stomped out of the shanty cabin and lept into his custom built 'Semantic Power Driver'.

The 'Semantic', as Henry was fond of calling it, was powered like no other vehicle heretofore known in the galaxy. It required no fuel, liquid or solid. It did not employ the power of the atom, or of any noxious gas ever discovered or created. It could move one kilometer in a minute-or one googal kilometers in a minute-depending on the driver. You see, the Semantic was driven by the power of words. If Henry was eloquent on a particular day, his Semantic would move very quickly. If his tongue was tied, he could barely move at all.

"All the galaxy," intoned Henry, "is like a quiescent duck sitting cross-legged on a pink rubberraft, surrounded by horny mermaids fishing for long, blunt instruments to fulfill their sensuous desires." The Semantic rocketed from the farmyard at one-tenth the speed of light, it's chrome gleaming faintly in the dull darkness of eterna, nonexistant space.

"My love," said Henry into the Semantic mike, "is like a rose that farts constantly." The ship slowed considerably, causing Henry to burp under his noisome breath. Unfortunately for Henry, the Semantic heard his sound and caused the ship to thunder to a near halt.

"Ah, but the scream of a pubescent camel rings eternal in my virgin ears. Would that I could prance gayly among a garden of mind expanding plants and sing lullabys to the emerald frogs that are conspicuously absent from my dreary bedside!" This last oration once again powered the Semantic to brain-zapping speed. Then, as the craft gently eased into a wide arcing turn, Henry activated the ship's music system. Centuries before, man had learned to record music in terms of light and vibration as opposed to sound. Multi-colored lasers traced around the cabin as Henry's chair vibrated to the tune of 'Shine On Harvest Moon'.

Henry had never seen a moon in the Arridian black hole, but he knew that it was a romantic celestial object that countless humanoids fondled and copulated to.

chapter two

"A Little Incongruity After The Beginning

The royal Arridian Princess Snogbergion sat salivating on her long, black star studded robe. On her over-large head she wore a crate of half eaten oranges that steadily dripped their fruity juices through the cheap crate slats and fell lightly on her dandruff specked shoulders. Her nose was not unlike that of a caribou that had been ruthlessly beaten by a herd of starving eskimos wielding heavy icicles ripped from the edges of government supplied quonset huts. Her eyes were like the bottom of a well that had been used frequently as a latrine by drug crazed rock enthusiasts. Her pink toes, gracefully clinging to her unshaved legs, rested playfully on the back of an Indian rug weaver paid a minimal amount to grovel in her imperial presence.

He didn't mind. He was a demented moron that really did not give a flying intercourse for anything that didn't involve money, sex, or the search of property.

The princess's breasts did not sag because they lacked the proper proportions to feel the weight of the black hole's gravity. In fact, she was as flat chested as a squirrel that had been crushed by a huge truck carrying a sign saying "CAUTION! OVERSIZED LOAD." Her mouth was not so much generous as malformed. When she smiled she looked similar to a circus lion that had had its jaws separated by two cables, one tied to the upper jaw, one to the lower, that were pulled in opposite directions by two separate tractors. When she was not sitting on her skinny rump, she stood a full six foot, four inches.

"When I am not sitting on my skinny rump," perked Princess Snogbergion, "I stand a full six foot, four inches." The fifteen or so Arridian soldiers in the room stood at attention with their potato guns resting lightly in their nasal cavities. If so much as an eyelid moved, Princess Snogbergion would leap from her leather recliner and recite bad poetry in their throbbing ears. Though the princess sat expectantly preparing bad poetry, not so much as an eyelid moved.

Then, as if answering some hidden call of sensuous purple passion flying from the princess's lips, an extremely fat salesman bounded into the palace enclosure holding a large bowl of ice-cream. He ran to the woman's side as a thin sheen of noxious sweat trickled down his hairy, brown underarms.

"I want to play golf with you" crooned the obese salesman dreamily-as if through a wall of deodorized lard. The princess's repulsive face suffenly became more repulsive as she sprang to her feet, kicking the less than talkative indian foot-rest to one side with a wide, screaming "swak."

"I would sooner poke you with a twenty-five meter long pole saturated with the germs of a highly contagious muscle degenerating disease!" bellowed Snogbergion.

The salesman grinned and said "Piff..."

chapter three

"The Middle

Elma, Henry's bitchy wife, sat in her rocking chair thinking bitchy thoughts. "I'm getting out of here," her feeble mind whimpered with a sense of finality. "Granted that a black hole has an extremely powerful gravitational pull, and that light cannot escape from its irresistible force, but there must be some way, something that can propel me away from this disgusting wang shop situated in a place that can barely be called space." Elma paused to think about what she phrased as "how we ever got here in the first place."

The answer, had she known it, was long. Elma was very good at knitting 'wang warmers', and Arridian soldiers had a long history of frozen wangs. A 'wang', as the reader may have already guessed, is that part of the male anatomy that deodorant advertisers try to immitate in their packaging so that women will subconsciously rush to the supermarkets just to feel the bottles and make their panties wet. Well, one day, as Elma and Henry were playing Monopoly on their rickety front porch in the south of Panama, a rather large Arridian battle ship appeared on the hazy tropical horizon. The humongous ship, shaped like a solidified burp, landed about thirty yards from the bulbous startled eyes of the hapless, middle aged couple. Five Arridian soldiers popped out of the ship like dwarves from the 'Wizzard of Oz'. They were short (three foot,two inches), bald, and, in a number of ways, closely resembled well plucked 'Perdue Chickens'. But the most important parts of their anatomy , observed Elma, were their voluminous wangs.

Elma sat dumbfounded, red Monopoly hotel in hand, like a wide eyed puppy under the influence of mind expanding drugs.

Henry nearly choked on his corncob pipe as the naked chickens (Arridians) executed a very neat version of 'Singin in The Rain'- tap dance and all. But, unfortunately, the Arridians stopped right in the middle and began to shake uncontrollably. Apparently the Panamanian weather was considerably colder than that of the Arridian home planet (black hole actually) and the luckless intruders were all of a sudden feeling more than a bit chilled.

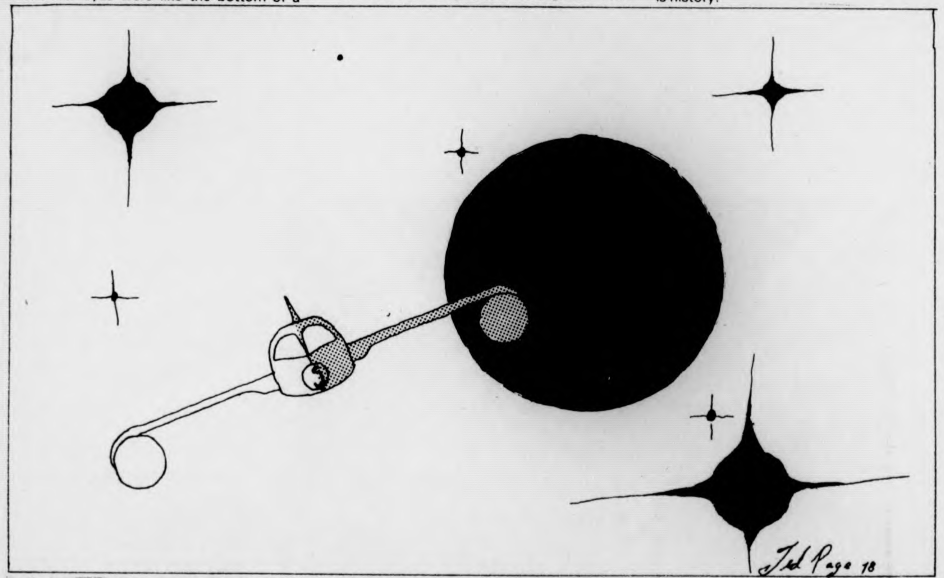
Elma, being at that time a fairly kind and considerate woman, took pity on the Arridians. And, with her infinite skill in knitting, proceeded to patch together five nice, neat wang warmers. Watching a freezing Arridian put on a wang warmer, observed Henry; is like watching a headless chicken try to play the grand piano.

The soldiers were extremely grateful. They were so pleased with Elma's knitting that they decided to bring her, and her husband back to their cozy black hole so that she could supply the entire Arridian battle force with 'wee-wee warmers'.

Before Henry had time to load his shotgun, and before Elma had time to go tinkle in the outhouse, they found themselves in the not so cozy confines of the huge, Arridian, solidified burp. It was there, nestled among ice-cubes and card-board packing that Elma and her hubby would speed faster than the sun's rays towards the black hole of Arridian.

The Arridians, despite their fowl form, were a race devoted to sex, property, death and kindness. If they were not kind to a race they sucked their brains out with turbo-vacks. If they liked a particular race they raped them constantly and gave them toys of wonder and joy that floated incessantly into the pull of the black hole. They liked Elma and Henry but, to Elma's great disappointment, they did not rape them.

Soon the two Panamanians found themselves on a pig farm in the black hole of Arridian. The pigs were plastic, the rest is history.



With a carefully timed burp Henry parked the semantic in an immaculate pig stall in the back of the barn. Plastic pigs stood frozen (like ex-presidents in a wax work) with bits of artificial hay hanging stiffly from their cherry colored mouths.

Opening the door of the cabin he found his wife slumped in her rocker, her careworn face contorted in extreme sadness and anxiety.

"Why," said Henry, "are you sitting slumped in your rocker with your careworn face contorted into extreme sadness and anxiety?"

"I miss Panama," droned Elma like a vacuum cleaner. "I miss jungle spiders, tall cannabis plants, fire-red hot cherry sunsets, tropical rain forests full of gayly drunk natives carving spears with their Army surplus bayonets, christian missionaries floundering in quick-sand to the infinite delight of Spanish witch doctors and, above all, other people."

So great a torrent of distress was flushing from Elma's eyes that Henry felt his guts turn in sympathy. He too had missed Panama with its golden green splendors. Yet, he knew that he could never return. Nothing, absolutely nothing ever leaves a black hole.

"Henry," beckoned Elma with pleading pupils, "let's hop into the Semantic right now and leave for Earth. I know you'll think it's impossible- and it may be- but we must try!"

Henry's right eyebrow lifted as his brain calmly seethed with thoughts of escape from what he had considered for so long to be inescapable. "If...", he pondered,"...if we can think of a sentence so powerful and beautiful that its strength will allow the semantic to overcome the gravity of this hole then, just maybe, we may soon see the orgasmic delights of Earth!"

Tears of joy slid ecstaticly down Elma's flushed cheeks as Henry lifted her gently, but firmly out of her rocker and into his aged, yet still sinewy arms. He looked into her yearning eyes and whispered, "I'm corny, and we're going home."

Henry, wife in hand, scampered to the Semantic as if it were the bed on his first honeymoon. The Semantic gleamed softly (like a much loved Ferrari) as Henry and Elma settled themselves into its genital-like darkness. Anti-G panel...set, Semantic mike...set, view screen...primed. "The ship," said Henry confidently, "is ready." Elma smiled like an expectant virgin.

With a flick of his long index, Henry switched the Semantic mike to the 'orate' position and proudly quoted;

Away!away! for I will fly to thee,
Not charioted by Bacchus and his pards
But on the viewless wings of Poesy...

With an orgasmic roar, the ship careened ferociously into the dark crevasse of starless space.

Though the dull brain perplexes and retards:
Already with thee! tender is the night,
And haply the Queen-Moon is on her throne,
Cluster'd around by all her starry Fays;
But here there is no light
Save what from heaven is with the breezes blown
Through vendurous glooms and winding mossy ways.

Henry's sweating palms steered the Semantic straight towards what he deemed to be 'up'. He checked the speedometer. The ship, to Henry's infinite delight, was rocketing at one-fourth the speed of light. Elma saw it too, as she wiped her drivelling joy-red nose with a scrap of toilet paper. Yet, as Henry knew damn well, one fourth the speed of light would never free them from the God-like gravitational pull of the Arridian black hole. No, in order to be free he needed to travel at approximately warp two; twice the speed of light! "Well, thought Henry, "here goes nothin!"

Her nimble tongue, loves lesser lightning, played
Within my mouth, and to my thoughts conveyed
Swift orders that I should prepare to throw

He felt a sudden tide of unimagionable power shove the tiny ship from behind even as uncounted tons of gravity buffeted the Semantics frontal section. "Nine tenths the speed of light," screamed Henry's mind. Elma was quivering like an angel in an ice-cold bath of apple sauce.

Our hearts are paper, beauty is the pen
Which writes our loves, and blots 'em out again...

Again the surge of power from front and behind. As Henry knew from a quick glance at his controls, the Semantic was moving with the speed of brilliant light zipping in tiny waves from the round eye of a W.W.II arc light searching for 'Zeros'. His dry lips parted, revealing yellow, strong teeth.

A dungeon horrible, on all sides round
As one great furnace flamed; yet from those flames
No light, but rather darkness visible...

A deep sea blackness ebbed on Henry's grey matter (brain) as the ship's thrust increased by one-half. "One and one-half times the speed of light!" belched his mind. Einstein would have soiled his pants had he seen this dwarf-like ship moving faster than even his mighty mind could fathom. But still, the endless non-light grasped them tight. Henry's mind was pounding with a pain paralleling torture. Through the searing clouds of agony no words would come to free them from their dark, gravitational bond. As the speedometer quickly testified- they had little time. If Henry didn't come up with something fast, they would soon be traveling at sub-light speed.

"C'mon Henry," screamed Elma, "get this fucker out'a here!!" Suddenly the Semantic rocked as if a thousand Elephants had farted against is from all sides.

"We're free!" bellowed Henry.

"We are" whimpered Elma.

"YES!!!"

"We're free!" screamed Elma.

"We are!" stated Henry.

"They're free," squeeked the stars.

"Shit, they're free!" barked the black hole.

Whether Elma had finally short-circuited the Semantic with her profanity, or it had just been sick of poetry-neither of them knew. By whatever tender and exotic Gods that be, they found their sweating and joyful bodies flying through free space like a re-run of 'Star Trek'.

chapter four

"An Ending, Of Sorts..."

An extremely fat salesman lay like a pile of mashed potato in a huge, comfortable leather recliner. "You see," crooned the man in-between gulps of strawberry ice cream, "the couple, Henry and Elma, eventually made it back to Earth. Unfortunatley, upon entering Earth's atmosphere they discovered that they had not regained their previous size. They were still compressed flatter and smaller than any crepe ever made in the history of the Universe." A dribble of cold cream slid down his flabby cheek. "Their spaceship landed (slurp) on a molecule (lick) of mozarella cheese that was soon spread on a large pizza and eaten by a fur-trader in Iceland."

Princess Snogbergion sat cross-legged on a puffy, red cushion while inhaling many airy draughts of acrid black hash. "Gimmie a toke of that stuff..." beckoned the fat salesman nonchalantly.

"Anything for you, sugar-plum" croaked princess.

"Thanks, sweet-meat."

"Only for you, prune picker."

"You are too wonderful!" quipped the salesman before sucking in a compressed cloud of the mind-blowing concoction.

"Say..." thought Snogbergion out loud, "who the hell ever said life isn't easy in a black hole?"

"Wasn't me."

"I know I didn't say it," stated Princie.

"Must'a been the author."

"Think so?"

"Who else?"

"Yeah."

AT FACES OF EARTH

Back there again or Logs Ablaze

by STEVE DUBIN

The modern, super convienience, prefab, easy acess to the highway, suburban ranch house seemed to be removed from "the stuff" of life. Watz clicked off the commanding television set like a child deliberately disobeying. The only salvation for this "made for living in comfort" home is the fireplace. Rolling outdated sections of the "Strangled Times," Watz lies the scrolls side-by-side on the charred grating of the hearth-like lines of gravestones at Arlington Cemetary. Several chairs that only belong in Spiegel Catalogs - but somehow got into his house - had been broken during the years and are gladly added to the fire for kindling . Several pieces of the chair are too large for the modestly sized fireplace. Watz contemplates propping them against the brick masonry and snapping them with a karate kick, but his strictly caucasian mind vetoes the idea. "The hell if I'm going to stomp that with barefeet." He tosses the oversized pieces on top of the rolled newspaper anyway. Watz has to angle the mamouth chunks to fit them in. The splintered chunks lie at awkward angles like a crashed helicopter not having a choice of position. Burly logs of thick bark and sawdust covered ends top the layers of flamables. Watz yells to his wife who, like a soundtrack, is heard but not seen, "Turn off the damn dryer so I can listen to my fire." With a ceremonious foot long safety match Watz commences the blaze.

The newspaper explodes into flames. A whoosh to floating flakes. Kindling snaps and glows happily with it's middleman's role. Logs roast steaming with dignity. A low, muted whistle dominates the crescendo of the flames.

It is a cold, clammy day. One of those damp uncomfortable afternoons when one actually wishes the fog would roll in to block the view of the dripping trees and bent flowers.

The smell of gasoline. Dad is outside the car stretching his stiff legs and rotating his head on sore neck and shoulder muscles. The station attendant leaves the gas hose running and quickly cleans the windshield. I slyly unlatch my seatbelt and hop out of the back seat to watch the gas pump click off numbers. Must be lots of money I think while nodding my head in time with the clicking of the digits.

The smell of tar. Hot black chunks are flattened into a pattern by the steamrollers. Steam rises out of the crushed dark mixture. The men shaping and pushing the tar sweat. The sweat drips spots onto their baggy t-shirts and dampens the hair falling over their foreheads. Me and the other kids ride our bikes on the newly finished part of the road. "Hey, 'member when there was a field here?"

The sharp odor of paint. The furniture is covered with old bedcovers and canvas. Evertyhing is piled into the center of the room. Windows are taped around the edges. The paintings have been taken off the wall leaving outlines of their former positions. Cigarette ashes are everywnere with butts as further evidence that the Marlboro men are here. These men with brushes whistle along to tunes on the radio. Diffrent colors speckle their once white overalls. The cat slinks about angry at this messy intrusion.

The pier. Bouncing along the cobblestoned street leading to the pier its salty stench greets me. Coast Guard cutters are manned with swarms of tan-clothed drones. Swabbing the deck, they budge each other when a pretty girl passes by, admiring only the ship. Antiseptics and soap challenge the ocean's aroma. Rusty, discolored fishing boats rock wearily in the thick water. The fishermen sit on crates cutting chunks of fruit with scaling knives. They laugh loudly at observers who cringe at their conditions. The scent of fish heads, oil, rot, and mystery linger like a magic potion. A crowd is gathering around the ferry to Martha's Vineyard. The crew, dressed in Old English Sailor costumes, help passengers get comfortable on the floating hotel. Gasoline, diesel fuel, and salt crest combine into an active perfume.

Smoke. Watz slowly raises his fixed gaze from the smoldering fireplace."No, this fire is harnessed in the hearth. But from somewhere smoke fills the room like water in a clogged sink. Nostrils alerted, he sniffs for the clue.

"Sorry hun," yells his wife from the kitchen. "I burnt the roast. Help me open the windas." "Oh, ya," mumbles Watz, crawling out of his thoughts and comfortable rocker and back to now. Now, when everything just is.

Ikon

Give you a voice and let you call it your own
Show you a sad, sad story and tell you when to cry
Give you a drink and take the burden
(it takes so much time to think)
Shrink time and space into only one thought

I feel pretty real

One blue eye to see and to show
Aren't you proud that you realize as long as you feel that you realize
I'm safe if you feel that you're safe that you realize

It's something you need and you'll bleed bad to get it can't let you forget it because you feed me as I feed you

You can't see it as it trickles into a vein to poison the network slowly, no trace

Dead end dreams in blue ribbons but so smooth to the touch don't open, because it's all in the chase

I feel pretty real

That apple will give you cancer
You're question may lead to an answer

I'm a twenty-four hour hero give me what you want me to give you live you live me
but don't ever forgive me

Don't let the blame come by this way it was all the baby-sitter's fault with so many to care for corners had to be cut keep them in a jar between the sugar and the tea points shine sharply now that black serves the backdrop get them?
don't ever forget them

They course through the blood and swing through the portals the far reaches recesses
distresses

The flesh knows

I feel pretty real

Erin go rock!

Horslips
Aliens
DJM

Reviewed by ROSS NERENBERG

One of the hottest bands to emerge from across the briny Atlantic during the past year has been Horslips, a five man band which effectively blends the traditional folk music of its native Ireland with high powered rock & roll. As gifted musicians, they skillfully incorporate modern electric instruments with those which were in use during medieval times.

It would be erroneous to classify Horslips as a "new" band, for they've actually been together since 1972 and have recorded a total of eight albums. Unfortunately, the first four are now hard to find cut-outs and the next two are available only as imports on the band's own Irish label. But numbers seven and eight are readily available (and well worth their price) on DJM Records, a small company operating out of America's favorite igloo--Buffalo, New York.

Aliens is a concept album (so was its predecessor, the masterful Book of Invasions) detailing the many trials and tribulations of early Irish immigrants to New York City. They come in anticipation of a Promised Land--"a country where the streets are paved with gold; where a man can find shelter far away from the cold." However, much to their chagrin, the harsh realities of their new life soon become evident via such selections as "Stowaway," "New York Wakes,""Exiles," "Ghosts" and "A Lifetime to Pay." Although the grass may be greener in America, the streets are decidedly not paved with gold for these immigrants.

Aliens is more rock-oriented than was Book of Invasions, which was heavily steeped in the ancient Irish folk tradition. Overall comparisons to Jethro Tull are valid, for much of Horslips' material is frantically driven home by the Ian Anderson-like flute playing of Jim Lockhart. As lead vocalists, Lockhart and Charles O'Connor complement one another splendidly. And guitarist John Fean handles his chores most proficiently, in a manner not unlike that of Tull's Martin Barre. The rhythm section of Barry Devlin and Eamon Carr lays down a beat which is as steady in its timing as Greenwich.

Trying my darndest to be an impartial observer of the contemporary music scene, I don't particularly enjoy shilling for a band unless I honestly believe that it merits special attention. Horslips does appear to me to be deserving of such. They're my personal pick to break big in '78. I can't wait to see them over here on tour (it should be soon). As for now, this current work earns them a "let's not keep them aliens from our shores much longer " A.

Spartan Spear

Burning Spear Live
Island

Reviewed by K. STEPHEN SHAIN

Despite the loss of vocalists Rupert Willington and Delroy Hines , Winston Rodney (Spear) solos successfully on this recording managing to recapture some of the excitement of Burning Spear'slive performances. With a compensatory lead guitar front and center, backed by a tight and moving rhythm section, Spear recreates the agony of slavery and celebrates the joy of Jahoneness with fierce intensity.

Diminutive in size, Spear wails, yodels, whistles, dubs and packs a sound generally reserved for men twice his size. Some say that if Bob Marley is dynamite, then Spear must be nitro-glycerin both because of his size and his wallop.

Fans will recognize immediately the familiar strains of "Marcus Garvey", "Slavery Days" (yet another version) and "Man in the Hills", but only those who have seen and experienced Burning Spear live as a group will have to adjust to the new spartan sound.

Burning Spear Live is both an excellent change of pace for dyed-in-the-wool reggae fans as well as a vibrant introduction for newcomers to the genre. Latecomers to the sound beware: Spear shares marquees and meanings with the New Wave's best; hear it now 'lest you get caught with the rest.

Herb Alpert/Hugh Masekela
A&M/Horizon

Reviewed by K. STEPHEN SHAIN

The business of music and the music of business often turn out some strange ironies. Who could have imagined that two world famous trumpet players, one whose career germinated, blossomed, and flourished at a time when the other's music was suppressed (literally banned from airplay) would join together a decade and a half later to put out one of the most arresting and uncompromising discs of the young season?

Herb Alpert, whose career has blazed right through the heart of the middle-American hinterlands with his patent Yiddish-Mexican-American sound has joined up with South African Hugh Masekela for a set that will surprise just about everybody with both its infectious melodies and its level of sophistication. Purists beware, here is music you can't even evaluate...

The opening cut, "Skokiaan", combines the harmolodic elements of composition demonstrated by Ornette Coleman on "Dancing in Your Head" (also on Horizon) with the more traditional sounds of the south African folk-song. Masekela and Alpert deliver an interchange of talents almost as intoxicating as Skokiaan itself

Both musicians have come a long way and compsitions like " Moonza",with its interweaving of natural and industrial rhythms and "Lobo", with its innovative and elaborative solos, supports the claim that this album brings more than styles together. Together with Caiphus Semenya and freak-favorite Ian Underwood, Herb, Hugh and the folks at Horizon seem intent on uniting people.

David Spinozza
Spinozza
A&M

Reviewed by DAVE RODMAN

This album marks the first time former session guitarist Spinozza has stepped out front, and if this premier recording is an indication of things to come, he may not step back for some time. After backing up the likes of Les McCann, Herbie Mann and Yusef Lateef, among others, Spinozza has used those experiences as a launching pad for this highly differentiated, highly listenable album. Shedding the shackles of the session man, he soars off into one solo after another, ranging from acoustically mellow to electric funk.

Spinozza, though, remembers his roots and steps back readily to allow some fine back up musicians to do some good soloing of their own, particularly vibes and sax pieces in "Doesn't She Know By Now?", side two's peaceful number.

Throughout the album, Spinozza does it all. He co-produced the recording, wrote or co-wrote six of nine songs, did much of the arranging, performed some of the vocals, orchestrated and conducted "Prelude to the Ballerina," and played some mighty fine guitar as well.

With the Herbie Hancockish "Edge of the Sword," the light-hearted, rhythm guitar-backed "Country Bumpkin" and the Bensonesque "On My Way to the Liquor Store," "Spinozza" leaves me eagerly awaiting David's next release.

Bat McGrath
The Spy
Amherst

Reviewed by ALICIA CUNEO

Bat MaGrath's newest album, The Spy, demonstrates Bat's great talent as a singer and a songwriter. The songs are quite sensitive, tougching all fields from wanting trust from a girl to the torture of being used by another. The songwriter's humor comes through on this album with the song "Grow Light". The song throws fun at living way out in the country and the real joy that it is to return to the conveniences of the city. The style of the music is very representative and close to that of Bob Dylan, Jackson Browne and at times Jimmy Buffet. The album is a cross between soft rock and aspects of real rock and roll. The instrumentation of the album adds to the peaceful, mellow mood that the album conveys. The one very tacky feature of the album is its take off and attempeted duplication on the album cover of the Eagle's Hotel California. The melodic and soothing compositions on Bat McGrath's The Spy demonstrate his great potential as a songer and a songwriter.

Various "Vanities"

"Vanities"
by Jack Heifner
Directed by Garland Wright

Reviewed by JANIE PORTNOY

I had the pleasure of seeing "Vanities" twice--once at the Chelsea Theater Center of New York, and recently at the Charles Playhouse in Boston. Understandably so, "Vanities" is in its second year as New York's longest running play off Broadway.

In Boston, it opened February 21, and is scheduled for a limited six week run. If you have not yet seen it, consider yourself pressed for time. Jack Heifner's "Vanities" is a gem that should not be missed.

Under the direction of Garland Wright, the play follows the lives of the three most popular cheerleaders of a Texas high school November of 1963, through their college days to 1974, as women nearing the age of thirty. It is in the third and final scene that the women evaluate their lives, and come to the realization that being popular was simply a masquerade for running scared.

theater

Scene One: A Gymnasium (Fall, 1963) opens with three high school cheerleaders practicing for an upcoming pep rally. They talk about their boyfriends: how great it is to be popular; and going away to college. Such is the scope of their limited beliefs and innocent minds.

For these girls, college will be a place of sorority life, continued popularity, and the supposition that they will remain friends forever, and keep their high school sweethearts. The thought of actually getting an education isn't even mentioned, and their biggest fear is, "What if we're not popular•"

Scene one is light, humorous, and briefly exhibits the girls' personalitites. Joanne is an air-headed prude (but she is in love and popular, so she is content). Kathy is the organizer of the three, always making lists, seeking perfection (her obsession with organization being an avoidance for introspection). Mary just goes with the flow. Her character is underplayed in the first scene, but she is later revealed as the most dynamic.

Scene Two: A Sorority House (Spring, 1968) is on a deeper level of significance. The audience is subliminally sucked into the apparnt simplicity of the characters. As we laugh at what is taking place on stage, we are manipulatively led to explore our own existence.

Further characterization is provided; the girls are depicted more as individuals than just a "popular" threesome. Joanne admits to majoring in music, simply because the line wasn't long at registration time. Still a virgin, Joanne's life revolves around her upcoming marriage to Ted, her high school boyfriend. That is all.

Kathy (Dorothy French-Boston/Monica Merryman-N.Y.) majored in physical education, but doesn't know what she really wants to do with her life. Sadly, she says "I guess I'll teach," to which Joanne remarks, "You should. You're so good at advertising."

It is in this scene that Mary's character takes shape. She is on the pill and makes full use of it. Although she will get a degree in interior design, a trip to Europe awaits her, as a graduation gift from unsuspecting parents. Little do they know that she won't return home for two years, and would just as soon use her college degree for a doormat.

Joanne's banality disgusts Mary. It is ironic that they have such antithetic personalities, yet are 'seemingly' close friends. As Mary recites the attributes of birth control, suggesting that Joanne take the pill, Joanne asks, "Since when does a virgin need the pill•", to which Mary replies, "Sad, but true."

Scene two fades as the tune "Smile Though Your Heart is Breaking" comes up behind the sorority cheer, "K-K-G, K-K-G, K-K-G...eternally."

As the final scene began, a knot formed in the pit of my stomach. Scene Three: The Garden of an Apartment (Summer, 1974) was happening now. The reunion after six years of being apart revealed women with three distinct personalities.

As an audience member, you can't help but be awed by the quips of dialogue, facial expressions, and introspection that take place. You sit there and wonder, "Could that be me•...Is it•" Male or female, this scene is sure to blow your mind. It is filled with social awareness, sexual propensity, and an equal balance of self doubt and contentment.

The encounter takes place in Kathy's apartment. It is her apartment in the sense that she lives there, but she does not pay the rent. Who does pay• She never tells. All we know about the modern Kathy is that for the first time in her life, she has no plan; no lists; no organization--and she is satisfied. Kathy's function in scene three is as an omniscient observer of the eclectic confrontation between Mary and Joanne.

Ironically, Joanne is the only one who achieves her lifelong dream. She marries Ted, has sex only in preparation for pregnancy, and lives in a suburb of Connecticut--comfy, cozy, nauseating and superficial. She retains her high school naivete, a sheltered, middle class existence shielding her from the cruelties of life. One such blind spot is her husband's infidelity. This truth doesn't fit into her "dream," so she blocks it out of her virgin mind--especially when Mary knows about it...first hand.

Mary runs an erotic art gallery in SoHo, New York. She is supported by the male clientele for her after-hour services. Mary is as free as free can be. Her retortive quips toJoanne's inquiries are priceless.

The audience becomes the character of Kathy, watching in amazement; amused by who they are now, in comparison to what they used to be. Joanne asks, "Why would anyone buy a $2500 erection•" Mary co es back with, "Because he could never have one of his own."

The scene climaxes when Joanne learns about Mary's affair with Ted. She breaks down, tells Mary to fuck herself, and runs out. This violent outburst is counteracted by the understanding and genuine concern that is felt between Kathy and Mary.

The wine glasses are raised, and in a final toast, Mary says, "Shall we toast our bygone days•", to which Kathy answers "I'll tell you what. Let's drink to forget 'em."

The end of "Vanities" is powerful and thought provoking. It leaves its message on every blank face that leaves the theatre.

Although "Vanities" was identically directed in both the New York and Boston theatres, there are a few differences I would like to mention.

The character of Joanne (Jane Dentinger-Boston/Sally Sockwell-N.Y.) was excellently portrayed in both locales. In New York, I despised her for her ignorance, and found no sympathy in my heart for her--especially in the verbal showdown with Mary (Patricia Miller-Boston/Susan Merson-N.Y.) in scene three. However, Boston based Joanne was quite likable Ms. Dentinger is a fine actress. This is no to say that she was any better or worse tha Ms. Sockwell--just different.

I am not quite sure if the actresses wh played in Boston were older than the one who played in New York, or if they jus seemed that way because my seat wa closer to the performance. This is a min observation that simply made parts of th play a little less believable. Few high scho girls have wrinkles.

As for the theatres themselves, I was in pressed by the layout, the professional a titudexthe erall atmosphere of the Charles Playhouse. It ha a lovely bar and restaurant for after th show relaxation, making theatre-goir even more of an "experience."

The Chelsea hater Center of New Yo is just a place for the Show to b presented. Most annoying were the ceilin to floor poles that obstructed my visio Nonetheless, it has a "homey" look abou it, and a staff of people who seem to b friends, as well as co-workers.

In any event, don't miss seein "Vanities." On second thought, don't jus see it--feel it. If it doesn't hit home, nothin will.

A long walk: Rhodesia to Zimbabwe

by Tanonoka Joseph Whande

A well-meaning friend called me up to congratulate me that having been a political refugee in the U.S. for the past five years I can now go home and enjoy the idependence of my country. "An agreement has been reached," he said, "and there is going to be a handover of power to the African majority." My friend, I should mention, is an orator like Cicero. He likes to encourage.

Rhodesia is not Ghana or Nigeria or Kenya. Rhodesia is Zimbabwe. You can rest assured that this country is not the sort of country out of which the minority government will come marching out. Already it has exeeded any other country as far as deaths and casualties are concerned. No other country in Africa has ever been so controversial and no other African people have ever fought so much for their country as the Zimbabwe people have. The war, according to the State Department, is costing the Rhodesian government about three-quarters of a million dollars a day. So you can see why a "settlement" was necessary.

I sat there and listened to my friend. It was unbearable. When ignorance stares you in the face, you cannot do anymore than take a deep breath and wince. It is painful to see "how the fraud that the Smith regime has been able to draw with the active assistance of African stooges has received a great deal of attention in certain western circles. This support for the so-called settlement by western reactionary elements does not surprise us because these are the same forces that have kept the Smith regime afloat in flagrant violation of United Nations sanctions against that regime.

The internal settlement (now being reffered to as The 8 Point Plan) does *not*address transfer of power to the majority with respect to the institutions of power that are "the linchpin of the racist colonial system of the Rhodesian minority regime,"

If you consider, as the Patriotic Front pointed out before the U.N. Security Council, the fact that 100% of the Rhodesian judiciary is white, 99.9% of their civil service is white, and the whole leadership of the security forces is completely white, then you understand the fact that in terms of real power, this agreement does not settle anything. The agreement does not constitute a settlement because it cannot end the war raging in the country.

At the same council hearing the Patriotic Front leaders dealt with the 8 point plan. What is the nature of the "settlement" conspiracy of the Smith regime?, they asked. They provided the answer: As can be expected from proffessional racists, the "settlement conspirators have predicated any settlement to the country's problem upon the priciple that blacks and whites in Zimbabwe shall remain separate communities.

The 8 Point Plan/Memorandum presented by Ian Smith (and accepted by the internally based "leaders") demanded the following:

(1) Bill of Rights: There must be a justiciable Declaration Of Rights to protect the rights and freedom of the individual. This must provide in particular protection from deprivation of property unless adequate compensation is paid promptly. This in truth is a Bill of Race, not Rights.

(2) The Judicature: To make the Bill of Rights effective, there must be an independent judiciary free from political influence. To ensure a competent bench there must be high qualifications for ther appointment of judges.

(3) The Public Service Board: To maintain the confidence of the public service and also to maintain the confidence of people in the professional neutrality of the public service, the Public Service Board (or Commission) must be established as an independent body, whose composition and functions should be entrenched.

(4) Retention of Administration: In order to provide a smooth transition and to ensure the continued efficient administration of the country, the civil service, the police, the defense forces, and prison services should be retained in a high state of efficiency and free from political interference.

(5) Pensions: This is a most important aspect of the retention of white confidence. Pensions payable from the Consolidated Revenue Fund must be guaranteed and freely remittable outside the country. With regard to private pension funds, the rights of employees and other persons who are members of private pension funds must be guaranteed.

(6) Citizenship: In order to encourage the whites to remain, provision for dual citizenship must be retained.

(7) Entrenchment of Constitutional Provisions: The above provisions must be entrenched so that the majority of two-thirds plus six of the membership Parliament is required for their amendment.

(8) White Representation in Parliament: To retain the confidence of the whites in regard to the entrenched safeguards in the Constitution, one third of the seats in Parliament should be reserved for direct election by white voters.

Sithole, Muzorewa, Chirau and the Rhodesian Front modelled the independent state of Zimbabwe on the Bantustans of South Africa. They agreed to leave the economy and all the effective instruments of power, like the police, the army, the civil service, and prisons, in the hands of the white settlers. The total effect of the implementation of the settlement would be the retention of the structure of white domination.

What must please the British and American investors, the South African companies that dominate the Rhodesian economy, and the business community among Rhodesian settlers, is that no one in the African delegations raised any questions about the colonial captalist system.

If ever this agreement was established in Zimbabwe, the property rights of white settlers who own half the total land, and all the property in the cities, will have it entrenched in a Bill of Rights justifiable by an independent court manned by white Judges for the most part, and possible with a protracted appeal system to the British Privy Council. The adminstration and the security forces that have been instruments of colonial oppression in the last 12 years of guerrilla warfare will be retained as they are. All the soldiers who have killed hundreds of Zimbabweans during the war of national liberation, and all the mercenaries hired to kill our people, and the police and prison officers who have been hanging our people in prisons will have fat pensions sent to their homes or holiday resorts by a Zimbabwe Government, until they die.

White settlers who emigrate to South Africa, Australia and Argentina can have dual citizenship that enable them to retain their property in Rhodesia, and to add insult to injury a mere 5% of the population will elect a third of the members Of Parliament of an independent Zimbabwe, who shall have the right to block an legislation that touches on the previledges of the whites as defined above. In fact the three African delegation would scramble for the 67 seats, and possibly emerge without a clear majority, while the whites (representing 52 of the population) would have 33 saets guaranteed for themselves.

"Africa must understand..." said Frantz Fannon, "that there will not be one Africa that fights against colonialism and the mistake, the mistake we Africans made, was to have forgotten that the enemy never withdraws sincerely..."

It is indeed a very, very long walk from Rhodesia to Zimbabwe.

Act on Sharansky

by Yitzhak Santis

In the course of a person's lifetime, certain situations arise that will make that person look up, take notice, set a course of action and follow it, even if it means some form of sacrifice. Such is my case with Soviet Jewry in general and Anatoly Sharansky in particular.

Thirty-three years ago the World recoiled in horror at the news of the nearly completed genocide of the Jews in Europe by the Nazis. This has become known as the Holocaust, the most extreme example of man's inhumanity to man. Today, the Soviet Union is practicing a form of "cultural extermination" against its Jews that can most aptly be called a "Holocaust in slow motion". The case of Anatoly Sharansky exemplifies this most profoundly.

Before his arrest, Sharansky was a mathematician in his professional life and a dissident Jewish activist in his 'moon lighting' carrer. He was one of the leading activists monitoring gross human rights violations in the Soviet Union. In this capacity he served as a regular contact with the western diplomatic corp and western press, and he was also a leading spokesperson and interpreter for fellow Soviet Jewish dissidents. He also repeatedly tried to obtain permission to emigrate to Israel; a virtual crime in USSR. Because of his extremely overt activities he quickly attained a file with the KGB, the Soviet Secret Police. He was followed everywhere and all his activities were closely scrutinized.

His contacts with the west were used against him by the KGB. On March 15, 1977 he was arrested by the KGB, accused of passing 'state secrets' to the West via his 'involvement as a CIA agent' and charged with treason and espionage. The penalty for such crimes in the Soviet Union is death.

It has now been one full year that Sharansky has been held in prison without a trial. During this time, he has been denied legal aid, kept in isolation and his right to see any of his family and/or friends has been revoked. His physical condition in not even known. Is this Soviet justice?

Recently, President Carter has publicly investigated these charges and found them to have no basis whatsoever. Just the other day, Sharansky's alleged 'roommate' anounced publicly that he had been a CIA agent along with Sharansky. A question one has to ask here is what person in his right mind would confess publicly to the Soviet authorities that he is a CIA operative? The only conclusion one can draw here is that Sharansky, incarcerated on trumped up charges, is being used as a scapegoat in order to flash a warning sign to his fellow Soviet dissidents and also as a test to the strengh of Jimmy Carter's human rights prociamations.

Many people have responded to Sharansky's plight by openly denouncing the Soviet regime's treatment of him. In recent months, 136 Belgian mathematicians appealed to the Kremlin on his behalf; the Canadian Parliament unanimously denounced the Soviet Union for its treatment of Sharansky; 72 American Law school deans petitioned Brezhnev for his release; the French Communist Party newspaper L'Humanite appealed for Sharansky; and in a recent letter from Andrei Sacharov, (a Soviet dissident and Nobel Prize winner) to the American Scientific community, he thanked them for their pressure on the Soviet Union. He wrote: "I'd like to express to you my deep gratitude for your resolute actions on behalf of Anatoly Sharansky. You have hit just the right nail. The Soviet authorities extremely appreciate the cooperation in science and technology, this, there is nothing to induce them so factually and effectively as a refusal to maintain this cooperation. Your courageous and noble stand is not simply ethically the best but the only practical one. Do not believe and do not take seriously any assertion that your decision...could only embitter the Soviet authorities...Do not doubt that your human and professional solidarity will bring positive results."

There is a lesson here: remain silent and Anatoly Sharansky will be murdered, however, stand up, take a stand and send letters to the Soviet Government demanding his release and Sharansky may very well be freed. Activities for Sharansky took place in front of the Student Union on Wednesday March 15 all day, also on that day, people fasted for Sharansky's behalf to show solidarity. Empty paper plates will be sent to Brezhnev to symbolize the meals not eaten.

Your Birthday

THURSDAY, MARCH 16

Born today, you are a person of contradictions. Determined yet flexible, you work absolutely fixed on success, your heart ready to help you make friends along the way. You enjoy dealing with crowds, yet your best relationships are individual. You are independent, yet willing to receive aid from those with your interests in mind.

You have a need to be the center of attention. You will make an effort to entice others to notice you, but you will also try hard to keep others from judging you. You are confident of your abilities, but you fear having them assessed by professionals.

Yours is a penetrating mind. You will not let go of an idea that others hesitate to accept, but you realize also the importance of the majority's backing; to gain that, you may seem to give up when you are merely shelving a notion.

Also born on this date: Jerry Lewis, comedian; James Madison, fourth president of the United States.

To see what is in store for you tomorrow, find your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

FRIDAY, MARCH 17

PISCES(Feb.19-March 20) — Let artistic ability dominate intellect. You can bring originality to the project.

ARIES(March 21-April 19) — The situation at home is dramatic. Use it to gain authority.

TAURUS(April 20-May 20) — A jealous friend delays your setting things right at home.

GEMINI(May 21-June 20) — Seek a friend to share concerns over a new proposal for gain. You need support.

CANCER(June 21-July 22) — You may suffer early pangs of conscience, but you should feel better by afternoon.

LEO(July 23-Aug.22) — Offer understanding to another to gain from his difficulties. Be kind; tactful.

VIRGO(Aug.23-Sept.22) — Another's happy marriage can give needed encouragement in your relationship.

LIBRA(Sept.23-Oct.22) — Friends take advantage of your new talents. Leave time and energy for yourself.

SCORPIO(Oct.23-Nov.21) — Abide peacefully by those over you, or the day will end in unhappy frustration.

SAGITTARIUS(Nov.22-Dec.21) — Distrust keeps you and a so-called friend apart. Try to gain knowledge later.

CAPRICORN(Dec.22-Jan.19) — Proud ideas of superiority bring you authority you cannot maintain. Try to backtrack.

AQUARIUS(Jan.20-Feb.18) — An intriguing notion from old friends makes today special. Don't hesitate this afternoon.

Mackimmie hoop champs; Pumas, Vandies win titles

By RUSS SMITH
Collegian Staff

Championships were given out in intramurals last night; the men's, women's, and graduate-faculty divisions each held their title games. Sue Witt and Michelle Grenier combined for ten points as the Pumas upset the Sows 21-18 taking the women's title. The Vandies, behind Steve Jefferson (7), Stu Siegal (6) and Skip Applin (6) took the grad-fac title, sneaking by Education, 28-25. Ron Moyer had nine points and Roger Wallace eight in a losing cause for Education.

But the big game was in the men's division where Beta Kappa Phi was set to take on the MacKimmie Lions for basketball supremacy and the campus hoop title.

Mackimmie is the basketball champion of 1977-78.

A crowd of over 200 got to see two games rolled into one, evenly split into halves: the first half saw Beta Kappa Phi trail once and lead for most of the half (game was tied thrice, at two, four and six). The second half saw the Lions take command early and never look back.

Playing a 2-3 zone, Beta Kappa Phi attempted to pressure the Lions into shooting from outside. However the Lions were content with doing just that — to shoot from way outside, and hit.

Mackimmie's Steve Winston opened the scoring for the Lions with his jumper, but Dave Lipinski evened things up with his baseline shot. Ernest Coleman shot from way out and connected with the net before Lipinski drove to the hoop in an attempt to equal the score again. His shot was meanly blocked, but a goaltending call knotted the score again.

Dan Smith gave Beta its first lead at 6-4 on a decent move to the hoop, only to have Ike Bradshaw's bomb find the range, tying it once again.

BKP went up by three via a Mike Healy free throw, and a Pete Rankowitz follow up shot of a Healy missed free throw. The two teams basically traded baskets the rest of the half, with the Lions alternating between one and three points down.

At the half, Beta Kappa Phi was up 13-12. It seemed they had the momentum, if not the talent to pull this game out.

Whatever was said in the Lion huddle at halftime should be bottled and sold on the open market, because when the second half started, the complexion of the game had changed.

Everything was going the Lion's way; outside shots were going in and when they weren't, they crashed the boards and grabbed the rebounds and set it up again. The pressured BKP into bad passes and steals were becoming a welcome addition to their repertoire.

Meanwhile, on the flip side of the album, the frat-men were in a slump; nothing was going their way — shots being blocked, offensive fouls, etc.

In fact, Beta Kappa Phi couldn't buy a bucket in the first eight minutes of the second half, while the Lions went on to score 15 straight points, a deficit the Greek's squad never quite made back. It wasn't until Healy hit that BKP had its first hoop of the half.

And when Lipinski got away for a fast break layup following a Lion missed shot, it cut Mackimmie's lead to ten, 27-17. Mackimmie made a smart strategic move and called a timeout to regroup and not let this game slip away. It proved to be a smart move as the Lions worked the ball around for a better percentage shot by going into a semi-stall, while the minutes ticked away. BKP never got closer than the final margin, and Mackimmie became Numero Uno.

Roundball:....Both teams deserve a round applause, first of all for their fine seasons, and secondly, for 'playing the game' if you know what I mean...sorry for any misprint of names in previous day's story...good thing the game was not scheduled for tonight; most of this campus has gone (or is on) vacation already...

Mackimmie (33) — Ernest Coleman 6-0-12, Tom Anderson 2-3-7, Ike Bradshaw 3-0-6, Ed Penn 1-0-2, Steve Winston 1-0-2, Rich Hebert 1-0-2, Ralph Moore 1-0-2 totals - 15-3-33

Team fouls: Mackimmie - 12 Beta Kappa Phi - 10

Turnovers: Mackimmie - 5 Beta Kappa Phi - 14

Field Goald Percentage: Mackimmie - .416 (15-36) BKP - .524 (11-21)

High rollers for the women in the town event were Amanda Garcia, who bowled a fine 503 series, and Beth Schneider with a series of 510, who just missed the 200 mark with a high game of 197.

In the singles event, Amanda Garcia placed first with an excellent series of 577 (199, 193, 185), followed by Cyndy Adams in econd only seven pins behind with a 570 series. Adams bowled outstanding games of 222 and 116. Garcia also placed second in All-Events for the day.

For the 1977-1978 Tri-State Season, the UMass women bowlers received several other honors. They retained the league title for UMass for two consecutive years. Individual awards were given to Jackie Cashen, who tied for second place in match points winning 30 out of 42 points, and Amanda Garcia, who bowled the second highest series in the singles event for the year. Cyndy Adams was acknowledged for having the fourth highest average in the league.

Sox put on an *expo*sition

WINTER HAVEN, Fla. [UPI] — Home runs by Jerry Remy and Butch Hobson led the Boston Red Sox to an 8-3 exhibition win over the Montreal Expos yesterday.

Remy's solo homer tied the game in the second inning after Montreal had gone ahead 3-0 in the first on several hits, including a home run by Stan Papi.

Boston came back with two runs in the first inning. The first of Carl Yastrzemski's three singles drove in Rick Burleson. Then Carlton Fisk drove in Jim Rice with another single.

The Sox took the lead on Hobson's two-run homer over the center field fence, driving in Bernie Carbo, who had singled ahead of him in the fourth inning.

Starter Bill Lee pitched the first four innings and got the win. He was followed by four strong shutout innings from Rick Wise, who is seeking to be traded. Rookie Allen Ripley from North Attleboro, Mass., finished up in the ninth.

The Sox are now 4-3 in spring training and Montreal's record dropped to 3-2. The Sox meet the Houston Astros today in Cocoa Beach with Mike Paxton, Bob Stanley and Jim Wright scheduled to pitch.

UM facilities don't do the job

By ELLEN DAVIS
Collegian Staff

Although there are currently three physical education complexes at UMass-NOPE, Boyden and Curry Hicks, there is an obvious need for a new facility here.

For a student enrollment of over 20,000, UMass has a basketball arena, known as the "Cage," which seats only a little over 4,000 people. The facility was built in 1931, when the enrollment here was 1,000, for a cost of $287,500.

The Cage has more problems besides its lack of seating capacity. It is a "constant maintenance drain" to the University, according to David Bischoff, UMass Dean of Physical Education. There are poor toilet facilities, the bleachers always have to be put up and taken down, and there is vandalism by the angry fans who get turned away from games.

And for a student enrollment of over 20,000, UMass has no ice rink at all. The hockey team, as well as the 300-member hockey club, have to go to Orr Rink at Amherst for practice and games, at a cost of $40 per hour. Besides causing a problem with transportation and parking, there is also inadequate seating at the rink.

The hockey team isn't the only team which has to go elsewhere to play, either. Since there are no facilities for indoor tennis here, the men's and women's tennis teams have begun playing at the Amherst Tennis Academy in preparation for their spring seasons.

A good indoor track is also missing here, and more handball and squash courts are needed, according to Bishoff.

The questions of building a new sports complex is important to everyone at UMass, not just athletes and sports fans. Such a complex could also be used for concerts, commencement activities, and other student functions.

Last week, a survey prepared by the Hockey Club, ran in the Collegian which dealt with this question. Although the response was small, the results were almost unanimous. No one was satisfied with the present athletic facilities on campus, and everyone would like to see an on-campus indoor athletic complex built. All said they would utilize some of the facility.

The problem of course, comes when we start talking about the planning and financing of such a complex.

In the late such 60's such a complex was originally proposed by former Athletic Director Warren McGuirk and UMass planner Jack Littlefield. The complex was to be paid for by student funds, and would eventually be self-liquidating.

But the time just wasn't right then. Campuses were marked by turmoil across the nation, and UMass was no exception. When McGuirk left five years ago, so did most of the interest in the project.

As a result, the football stadium, completed in 1965, has been the addition to the facilities here.

Now, although the administration would like to see some sort of new complex built, it also has many other priorities. These include handicap remodeling, renovation of academic buildings, replacement of underground equipment and lab equipment, and landscape problems, according to Littlefield.

In the meantime, UMass-Boston, with an enrollment one-fourth the size of UMass-Amherst, has received 8.9 million from the state for the construction of a new athletic complex. Although this complex is desperately needed, one of the things it is to include is a hockey rink, which is hardly necessary considering all the ice rinks in the Boston area. Ironically, UMass-Boston does not have an intercollegiate hockey team.

The athletic department here seems to be reviving their interest in a new sports complex. Dean Bishoff says one of the reasons he returned as full-time dean of Physical Education was in February to work on plans for a new complex, which he considers "a real posssiblity."

According to Bischoff, feasibility studies on the complex are currently being done.

Bischoff said the possiblity of remodeling Curry-Hicks has also been considered, but said that "still wouldn't give us any ice and couldn't accommodate as many as he would liee."

Bischoff, as well as planner Littlefield, estimate the cost of a new facility at $15 million, or $1500 per seat for a 10,000 seat stadium.

The new complex would be located west of the old horse barn, which is east of the new tennis courts, between Commonwealth Ave. and the varsity baseball field.

Of the three ways a new complex could be funded — by the legislature, by the alumni and fund-raising drives, or by student taxes, the last choice is probably the most likely.

Although most students currently seem to be objecting to any raises in fees, the student activity fee, which is $30, has not been raised since 1961.

Demonstrators hinder Davis Cup ticket sales

NASHVILLE, Tenn. [UPI] — Officials said yesterday the threat of demonstrations against South Africa's apartheid policy have resulted in lagging ticket sales for the North American Zone Davis Cup tennis matches between the U.S. and South Africa at Vanderbilt University this weekend.

Vanderbilt spokesman Lew Harris said yesterday that the university had hoped to make enough money from the matches to make its tennis program self-supporting, but sales through Tuesday fall far short of the break-even point.

A coalition of civil rights groups and other protestors have picketed Vanderbilt's administrative offices daily and plan on Saturday a march they contend will rival the massive civil rights demonstrations of the turbulent '60's.

With two days left before the tournament, only 2,440 tickets have been sold for each day of play — Friday, Saturday and Sunday.

Harris said it would be necessary to sell 4,000 tickets per day to meet the $125,000 cost of staging the matches. Joe C. Davis, a wealthy Nashville businessman and tennis enthusiast, has agreed to cover lossees up to $88,000.

W.E. Hester, president of the U.S. Tennis Association, said Nashvillians should show more respect for the matches and for Vanderbilt.

"I feel Vanderbilt is entitled to more respect from its community for holding this event which is not in violation of any international resolution," Hester said.

Meanwhile, at a news conference called by representatives of 10 different student groups from Nashville colleges and other institutions across the country, activists asked students to skip class Friday to protest the South African tennis team's participation in the matches. They also called on those who have already bought tickets to return them.

"We object to Vanderbilt providing a propaganda platform for this nation of South Africa, this rascist country which gunned down more than 1,000 school children last year.... the people oppose their brutality, cruelty and oppression," said David Huet-Vaughn, coordinator of the Tennessee coalition against apartheid. "We are angry about this fiasco masquerading as a sporting event."

UMass' 'fun run'

I'm one of those joggers who has to accept the fact that the Boston Marathon does not loom in my horizon. I just like to throw on my sneakers and go out and run a few miles — at my own pace. It's good for the body and it gives me a little peace of mind, too.

This little philosophy of mine concerning jogging is what made me take more than just a casual glance at a note that I spied on the Collegian sports desk last week. The note was meant for sports editor Dave Rodman, but a good reporter should be nosy so I took liberty: "Dave Rodman: We are having a big fun run this Friday at 4 p.m. ..."

The note went on asking about possible media coverage, and was signed by one Kevin McCusker.

A "fun run." Sure, why not?

I wanted to cover the event, but prior commitments made this impossible; thus, I called Mr. McCusker, who was one of the promoters of the run, a couple of days ago.

"It just started out as a floor run," said McCusker, who calls Thatcher home. "We had 29 kids on our floor who ran two weeks ago, and wanted to expand it."

What was, then, to be the Great Thatcher Run because the Great Thatcher and Mary Lyon Run; for the all male dorm decided to issue a challenge to the latter.

"The challenge was meant to make the whole thing more fun," said McCusker. "The idea was not to win, but just to get everyone together for awhile."

And together they were.

Shortly after 4:00 p.m. about 100 students embarked on what was to be a job of about two and a half miles. The women took the thing more seriously, roaring out of their dorm at four on the nose and wondering where their neighbors were.

"We weren't ready yet," said McCusker. "My roommate was still in street clothes when they came running out of their dorms, and we all had to hurry up."

So after a short delay while the Thatcherites donned their running garb the thing began,

Up Thatcher Way towards the Infirmary ... down by Newman Center headed in the direction of Southwest ...

The most exciting part of the run occurred when the joggers dared to pass through the Campus Center on the last leg of the journey.

"It was dead quiet as we ran through there," said McCusker. "The only real noise we could hear was coming from ourselves. When we passed the Bluewall, we could see everybody's heads turning from inside."

When the run had been completed, there was a little beer and noise and a general partying atmosphere prevailed. Nobody was sure exactly who won the damned thing, which probably led to the ensuing who won the damned thing, which probably led to the ensuing food fight that the two houses staged later on in Worcester Dining Commons.

You see, food fight aside, this is how I perceive the sport of jogging. It is to be done how you wish, when you wish, and with whom you wish to do it. I never bothered to ask if this endeavor was to be repeated, but if it turned just one student on to jogging then it was a huge success.

Now don't wait for the Kevin McCusker types in your dorm, apartment, frat, or whatever to organize a group run. Just go out, slowly at first, and run. If you are one of those poor souls who smokes butts you may be surprised at how short-winded you are. And when you come to that realization you might acquire the moxie to quit. Think about it ...

Anyway, maybe the Great Thatcher-Mary Lyon Run will catch on. How about a Brown-Cashin Run? Poor Richards vs. The Pub? Well, you get the idea.

By the way, Kevin McCusker told me at the end of our talk, "You could probably end your article by saying keep it up, or something like that. It would help to get the people who ran psyched into doing it again."

Nuff' said, Kevin.

Jogging Tip: If you live in Sylvan-Northeast, here's a fairly good route to try: Up Eastman Lane to the Fire House. Take a right on East Pleasant Street and jog down to Triangle Street, going right there. Stay on North Pleasant Street and job past Northeast, turning right again on Eastman Lane. If you begin and end your trip at NOPE Gym the total distance is approximately 3.2 miles.

Decision goes to electoral college

By JON KLEIN
Collegian Staff

A convention of Undergraduate Student Senators and Area Governments will choose the next student government president since none of the 11 candidacies were able to get the necessary one-third of the vote in the popular election held yesterday and Wednesday.

Shelly Gordon and Herb Tyson polled 26 per cent of the total vote. The controversial category of "none of the above" got 15.25 per cent David Barenberg and Susan Birmingham won 14.75 per cent of the vote.

Aobut 3,000 students went to the polls to vote. There are approximately 18,000 undergraduates who are eligible to vote.

The two top vote getters will be on the first ballot at the convention along with any nominations from the floor, according to outgoing president Jon A. Hite.

There are different interpretations of how the second place finish of "none of the above" will affect the convention. Tyson said that possibly the first ballot will contain "none of the above" and Gordon-Tyson or that "none of the above" will be voided and Gordon-Tyson's percentage will exceed the necessary one-third and they will be named co-president.

Co-chairpersons of Governmental Affairs David Leary and Marcy Levington said that Tyson would go to the convention with Barenberg and Birmingham. There is a possibility of reconsideration on this decision.

The referendum for a two dollar fee on semester bills for the Union Program Council was not determined at press time. Senator Bob Dion said the votes would be counted tomorrow.

A voter turnout of four thousand is needed to make a referendum binding. Since less than four thousand voted the referendum is not binding. The Senate must consider the referendum.

The number of votes received by each of the top three candidates was as follows: Gordon Tyson - 788, None of the Above - 456, Barenberg Birmingham - 439.

According to Hite this was the lowest voter turnout in the history of the popular presidential election, which began in 1975. Hite felt the low turnout was due to the high number of candidates which confused the voters. The turnout was half the percentage of any previous election.

The presidential campaign began on Feb. 24 when 16 candidates filed petitions for the election. Due to the large number of candidates the usual student government campaign finance allocation of $250 was dropped to $136.36.

Sixteen candidates filed for 15 Board of Governors seats.

On March 7, all 16 candidates gathered in the Campus Center Auditorium for a forum. It was one of the few times all sixteen were in the same place at the same time.

The candidates stressed themes they would use throughout the campaign; communication, apathy, and the specific proposals of each contestant.

Events at the meeting included pie throwing, squawking plastic ducks and Jimmy Carter imitations. Candidates Brad Goverman and Bill Edelstein nailed their "Sweeping Reform Act of 1978" to the candidate table. Edelstein spoke in what he called "broken Cuban," then translated in a Jimmy Carter imitation.

Pies were thrown by members of the audience at people on stage. Candidate Edelstein and moderator David Leary were two targets. The pie throwing came from people who also brought plastic ducks to the forum. Russell Swan, who wanted to run with a plastic duck, said these people were not his supporters.

Later in the campaign, Swan led a group of Swan-for-President Committee members into the Whitmore administration building with red tape, crepe paper and ribbon. Doors were taped and ribbons were thrown into Whitmore offices.

The day after the forum, some candidates went before the Southwest Assembly. The candidates addressed various issues and presented their proposals. This was one of many residential area meetings which candidates attended seeking exposure and support.

A subpoena was almost issued March 10 to former Senate Speaker Brian J. DeLima for a pamphlet he had written which contained an illustration used on a poster for Shelly Gordon and Herb Tyson. DeLima turned in the pamphlets before the subpoena was issued.

Patrick O'Donnell, citing "a change in my political status" withdrew March 9 from the races for president and Brown House senator. This brought the number of candidates down to 15. O'Donnell refused to elaborate on his reasons for withdrawing. O'Donnell, head of the non-unionist students' group, had recently bee appointed senator by the Brown house council. A write-in effort developed in Brown for O'Donnell as senator, but he sent a letter to Governmental Affairs Co-chairwoman Marcy Levington saying he would not accept a senate seat if he won as a write-in candidate.

As the campaign neared election days, candidates made last-minute efforts for more votes.

Electoral balloting may be lengthy

By JON KLEIN
Collegian Staff

Shortly after students return from spring break, student senators will meet to choose the next Student Government Association president in the first electoral college convention since popular elections at UMass began in 1975.

According to the Student Government Association constitution if none of the candidates gets one-third of the vote the president will be chosen by a convention of undergraduate student senators and area government officials.

The convention is to be held one week after the popular election, but since spring break begins next week, the convention will be the week after vacation, possibly the Thursday after students return. Outgoing president Jon A. Hite said the convention would probably be in the Curry-Hicks Cage or Boyden Gym.

The first ballot of the convention will include only the two top vote-getters from the popular election and any nominations from the floor.

From the second ballot until the end of the convention each ballot will include the two top vote-getters from the previous ballot. The convention will continue until a candidate receives a majority of the vote.

The senate and area governments will each cast 50 of the total of 100 votes in the convention. There are six votes from each area government except commuters and Southwest which have been votes due to higher population.

The convention will probably be chaired by Attorney General Jeff Lutsky and one of the student government co-presidents.

On the first day of the convention delegate credentials will be checked and rules of the convention will be read. Balloting will begin that day, according to Hite.

Area government representatives are not bound to vote in any way, Hite said. He added that area governments "would be foolish not to consult with area residents on how to vote at the convention.

Hite said that as the number of ballots increase there is a "Significant possibility" that the number of political deals will increase. This may happen since some candidates will not drop out of the race or support another contestant unless they are offered something in return for their support.

Attorney General Lutsky said if the convention makes an early decision, the possibility of deals will increase. The offers people could make include summer jobs or non-paid official positions in student government.

This will be the first convention since popular elections began in October 1975. Prior to then all elections were by electoral convention. The last convention held in May 1975, elected John O'Keefe and took approximately 12 ballots, according to Hite.

UMass student's rape case sent to grand jury

By CAROL ROSENBERG
Collegian Staff

The rape and assault and battery case of UMass freshman Peter Dionne was bound over the grand jury yesterday in Hampshire County District Court.

The student is to be tried on charges of raping and assaulting a 21-year-old UMass student on campus the evening of Feb. 24.

Defending attorney Donald A. Beaudry of Springfield called for a finding of 'no probable cause' because, he said, "the Commonwealth has not produced sufficient evidence." Judge Alphonse Turcotte ruled that there was probable cause on both counts and bound the case over to the grand jury.

The grand jury convenes Tuesday to hear evidence on the Dionne case and will judge whether to return an indictment.

Dionne, a Gorman dormitory resident was arrested Feb. 29 after UMass police said he was identified by the UMass woman.

The woman testified she had not known Dionne prior to meeting him in a UMass office building, and that she had spotted him on campus the Monday prior to his arrest.

A UMass graduate student said she and four others had been in the office building but when she heard yells, they dismissed the noise as only some students "fooling around."

UMass police Sergeant Philip A. Cavanaugh said Dionne's claim that he had been at a local bar with Phi Sigma Kappa fraternity brothers on the evening of the assault has not been verified. Cavanaugh was a witness for the prosecution.

Hampshire County District Court Prosecutor William Hasson yesterday presented five witnesses to prove probably cause on both counts. In addition to the plaintiff, a graduate student in the building on the night of the arrest, and a professor who aided the woman on the night of the attack, two UMass officers also testified at the trial.

UMass police officer Paul Ominsky, the officer on cruiser duty who answered the call on the evening of Feb. 24, and Cavanaugh, the detective in charge of the case, both testified.

Dionne, a member of the UMass Junior Varsity Soccer team this fall, withdrew from school this week. According to his attorney, "the pressure just got to him." He is now staying at his home in Wilbraham pending his appearance before the grand jury, Beaudry said.

UMass president open to probe of fiscal policies

University Interim President Franklin K. Patterson said yesterday he would show "no hesitation" for a state probe of alleged dormitory funding violations at the UMass-Amherst campus, and said he has been aware of the funding practices since taking the interim post in January.

The state legislature is currently conducting a committee investigation into the awarding of contracts for the construction of the UMass-Boston Columbia Point campus.

Patterson also said he doesn't believe the disclosure of alleged violations will hurt UMass in next week's legislative budget hearings, but state Sen. John W. Olver, D-Amherst, said it will.

The Collegian reported yesterday that an audit by a Boston accounting firm revealed the UMass administration transferred funds among construction projects to recover deficits. The transfer of dormitory funds resembles "commingling" and could be considered illegal, according to the audit.

Funds may not be commingled under terms of management and service agreements which allowed construction of the various construction projects.

The projects consist primarily of dorms, but included several dining commons and also the Campus Center.

Olver said the state should not step into the matter because the UMass Building Authority is a separate entity from the state Bureau of Building Construction."

"Not many people recognize the difference," Olver said. The building authority was responsible for the construction of the UMass projects, using state funds.

Patterson said he doesn't believe the violations will hurt UMass in the upcoming budget hearings. He said UMass Vice President of Administration and Finance George Kaludis has been investigating the matter since last month.

Editors table women's issue; adopt non-sexist language rules

The Collegian Board of Editors this week voted 8-2 against a proposal to allocate the Women's News Department one ad-free page in each edition with complete control over that space. A final decision about women's news in the Collegian was tabled until the board's March 29 meeting.

The board also voted 8-0-2 to adopt the McGraw-Hill Book Company's Guidelines for Equal Treatment of the Sexes for all copy used by the Collegian. The guidelines will go into effect shortly after vacation.

Senate passes canal pact

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate approved the first Panama Canal treaty yesterday giving President Carter an initial victory in a battle in which he staked his credibility as an international leader.

Opponents, however, warned that the fight was far from over. "This is only the first round. We expect to win the main event," said Sen. Paul Laxalt, R-Nev., a leading opponent of the twin treaties.

The vote was 68 to 32 in favor of the treaty guaranteeing the future neutrality of the canal and spelling out the rights of the United States once the waterway has been turned over to Panama. It came after a lengthy battle in which the administration agreed to several changes in the treaty in an effort to gain the needed 67 votes.

Still to come is a vote on the second treaty, which actually turns the canal over to Panama. The Senate is not expected to take up that measure until after it returns from an Easter recess.

The Carter administration stressed repeatedly during the debate preceding the vote that rejection of the pact could severely damage the president's credibility in foreign affairs and the U.S. image in Latin America.

The canal was built by the United States after the province of Panama — aided by the presence of U..S. warships off the coast — broke away from Columbia. The U.S. canal zone, which divides Panama, is viewed in some Latin American countries as a symbol of American colonialism.

The vote was preceded by reports that Panamanian officials were objecting to a change in the treaty which would give the U.S. the right to take any action it deemed necessary to prevent future closure of the canal. The Senate approved the change on a 75-to-23 vote only hours before the final vote.

The issue was brought to Carter on Wednesday by Panamanian Ambassador Gabriel Lewis, according to reports, and Carter later conferred by telephone with General Omar Torrijos.

Sen. Robert Griffin, R-Mich., a treaty opponent, called on Carter to confirm or deny the reports but the White House declined to make any comment.

The necessary two-thirds majority to ratify the treaty was slow in coming. Senate leaders did not line up the 67th vote until Wednesday afternoon. The majority was not publicly confirmed until Sen. Paul Hatfield, D-Mont., told the Senate three hours before the vote that he would support the treaty.

The margin of victory indicated that the Carter administration still has a difficult battle ahead in order to get the second treaty — which turns over the canal to Panama in the year 2000 — ratified. That treaty is not expected to come to a vote until after the Senate returns from its Easter recess.

Israel strikes beyond six miles into Lebanon

TEL AVIV, Israel (UPI) — Israeli troops and jet fighterbombers struck deeper into Lebanon yesterday in a new sweep to annihilate Palestinian strongholds even beyond the six-mile occupation zone established in southern Lebanon.

The official army radio said Israeli troops now control a 384- square mile strip of land in southern Lebanon and were settling in for a long stay. Fighting continued although Prime Minister Menachen Begin announced Wednesday Israel was ending the operation.

Military sources said there was fighting throughout the day, much of it concentrated around newly discovered Palestinian strongpoints. Israeli jets flew sortie after sortie, bombing and strafing Palestinian positions in the area.

"We are destroying anything that has to do with their (Palestinian) activities — military camps, installations, bridges and roads," one of the sources said.

Israel ordered the punitive invasion of southern Lebanon in reprisal for Saturday's Palestinian guerrilla attack near Tel Aviv in which 34 Israelis were killed and 85 wounded.

The Israeli military command said 11 soldiers were killed and another 57 wounded in the first full day of fighting Wednesday.

The advancing Israeli troops were given heroes' welcomes by Lebanese Christians in towns captured from the Palestinians.

Children standing on corners in the Christian village of Kler waved blue and white Israeli flags and threw rice as Israeli troops rode past.

"We lived like rabbits in the ground," Francis Rizk, a teacher in the captured Lebanese town of Marjayoun said. "Tell that to President Carter, who is a supporter of human rights too."

"We say thank you to the Israeli army," Rizk said. "It is a great army, an army of peace. Welcome to Lebanon."

UPI reporter Mathis Chazanov toured mainly Christian areas of the Israeli-held buffer strip and said the fighting during the past two days had left many homes with smashed windows and walls pockmarked with bullet holes.

Israeli soldiers securing the area left by the Palestinians found numerous land mines.

"There were a lot of mines," one soldier said. "That's what you expect when the terrorists move out. You have to be careful."

Chazanov said he saw several wrecked Israeli armored personnel carriers smelling of leaking gasoline and with their thick metal sides twisted out of shape left along the road into Lebanon.

A loaf of sliced bread in a plastic bag was still inside one of the vehicles.

Though persistent artillery fire held up movement on one road in the area, an Israeli officer said, "It used to be very dangerous to drive this road and now it's safe."

Reporters allowed into the Israeli-held region were restricted to Christian area where local militiamen have been receiving military, medical and other aid from the Israeli army as part of the Jewish state's effort to keep the guerrillas away from the frontier.

Lebanese civilians interviewed welcomed the Israeli decision to move in force, but most said they would like to see the area return to Lebanese sovereignty some day.

"We invited them (the Israelis) to visit, to fight," said Tarik Tuma, a Lebanese Christian stovemaker. "But not for good. We are Lebanese in Lebanon."

A retired policeofficer who gave his name only as Farah said:

"I feel much safer now, because we used to live by our muscles, day by day, fighting all the time. They (the Palestinians) shot at us all the time but we did nothing to them."

The Israelis gave strategic support to the Lebanese Christians in the south during Lebanon's civil war and the Christians have been fighting sporadic battles with the Palestinians and Lebanese Moslem leftists since the civil war ended in 1976.

The commander of local Christian militia forces, Maj. Sa'ad Hadad, said he would like to see the Israelis stay in the area until the Palestinians go away and Lebanon's central government can regain control of the region.

Dukakis budget termed 'disaster' for higher ed

BOSTON (AP) — The outgoing chancellor of the state Board of Higher Education called Gov. Michael S. Dukakis' budget recommendations a disaster yesterday.

Leroy Keith, who has resigned his post as of July 1,claimed that the governor's recommendations are short $5 million for the U Mass , $2 million for the state colleges, and $500,000 for the community colleges.

Keith, urged the House Ways and Means Committee to put back in the budget some of the requested funds deleted by Dukakis in his "House-1" submission.

"The House-1 budget recommendations," Keith said, "are of such disastrous proportions that, if enacted in that form, there will be a slide in the quality of higher education in the commonwealth."

Educational Affairs Secretary Paul Parks defended the governor's budget and argued that, barring something unexpected happening, the state could "adequately" meet its educational needs with the money available.

Keith, however, disagreed. He said the $283 million Dukakis proposed for higher education "is well below the level required to sustain educational programs at their present level." He said the budget provides enough money, to maintain existing levels, only at the Lowell and Southeastern Massachusetts universities.

The administration projected funds for an additional 40 students at the UMass Medical School, Keith said, but "the amount recommended is actually $500,000 short of what is necessary to maintain the current level of students."

James J. Hammond, chancellor of the state colleges, echoed Keith's view, pleading for an overall boost of $2.7 million to avoid "further cutbacks in our services."

Parks, the leadoff witness, argued that higher educational enrollments are dwindling and planning for this continued drop is one of his agency's major concerns.

Donald Epstein, a labor lawyer who is vice chairman of the Board of Higher Education, said a "modest increase" in the board's own budget could result in substantial tax savings over the years. He said he was talking about $200,000 and while this desire had been communicated to the governor, the results had been nil.

Epstein said that the governor's budget recommendation finds the higher educational segment diminishing for the fifth straight year in its percentage of the total state budget.

Budget hearings for UM campuses set

By E. PATRICK McQUAID
Collegian Staff

The University's top brass will square off the the House Ways and Means Committee next Tuesday for their annual budget bout.

In the ring will be interim president Franklin K. Patterson, Amherst campus Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery, Worcester Medical School Chancellor Roger C. Bulger, and interim Boston campus Chancellor Claire Van Ummersen representing the Minutemen.

According to University budget analyst Kay Hanson, the State House Ways and Means will grill each of the officials on their respective budgets.

The total proposed budget for the University in fiscal 1979 is $127,253,465, the bulk of which is being requested by the Amherst campus.

Governor Michael S. Dukakis has recommended that figure be trimmed to $116,303,627. Representative James G. Collins, D-Amherst, said the sentiment in the House was that the recommended revision is "not in the ball park" of University needs.

But the proposed total by the University is still only an estimate, according to University spokesman Howard White.

"Assuming that everyone in the University will get a pay raise," said White, "we will have to budget in the appropriate increases once the collective bargaining is settled."

According to White and Alan Raymond, press secretary for Dukakis, the recommended budget from the governor's office includes the anticipated pay raises.

Raymond said the figure was derived based on the Alliance settlement of 1976 and covered the expected increases by a far margin.

The breakdown of the major budget requests by campus are:

— Amherst, $83,561,028 which the Governor has recommended a decrease to $79,680,677.

— Boston, $22,076,096, trimmed to $20,451,240 by Dukakis.

— Worcester Medical School, $13,663,317, trimmed to $10,963,993.

— Worcester teaching hospital, $3,500,000 remained at that figure on the Governor's recommendation.

— Central, President's Office, $1,440,903 down to $1,058,785.

— Institution for Governmental Services, $551,121 trimmed to $125,615.

Racial fighting in Georgia prison

Results in inmate death

REIDSVILLE, Ga. [UPI] — A black convict was stabbed to death Thursday in the climax to a series of racial fights which flared up in the Georgia State Prison's desegregated dormitories.

At least 16 other prisoners were injured, some seriously, at the maximum security institution which houses 2,911 convicts. Prison officials confined all inmates to their cells and state troopers and a special riot squad were placed on standby.

Three other racial attacks Wednesday afternoon and night — two by blacks against whites and one by whites against blacks — preceded the deadly Thursday morning brawl.

David Evans, state commissioner of Offender Rehabilitation, said calm had been restored but some areas of the prison were "still tense".

Evans said he didn't know the exact cause of the fighting but when asked if race was involved, he replied, "No doubt about it. It would be hard to see it any other way.

"It began as an argument between blacks and whites and went from one dorm to another," he said.

The short but savage fights, involving leatherwork knives and possibly some homemade weapons, left at least four prisoners with multiple stab wounds and four others with head injuries.

The fights occurred in four dormitories, all integrated and housing about 75 to 80 men each. Apparently only a few of the prisoners were involved in each case, however.

Prison spokesman Sara Passmore said that as the convicts headed for breakfast about 6:25 a.m. Thursday, several whites suddenly slammed the door on one dorm, padlocking it.

By the time guards could get it open, James Moss, 36, of Augusta, serving life for armed robbery and assault, was stabbed to death and three other blacks were injured. Two, Clifford Solomon Jr. of New Orleans, who was stabbed, and James S. Holman of East Point, who received head injuries, were flown to Talmadge Memorial Hospital at Augusta for treatment.

The Middle East situation and some thoughts

By EDWARD COHEN
Special to Black Affairs

Commentary

During the past week, the situation in the Middle East has reached new crisis proportions. Several Al Fatah guerillas captured a bus full of Israeli citizens and as a result, about 30 people died in the incident. In retribution for this, Israel unleashed widespread reprisals with raids into Lebanon, and the deaths of Palestinians resulted. Israeli Prime Minister Begin vowed that he would cut the arm off the PLO, as a way of attempting to deter the Palestinian struggle for self-determination.

These events must be placed in proper perspective. Israel as it exists now is a state where there is a high degree of racism and sexism. As a result of its formation, many Arab citizens who lived in what became the independent country of Israel were driven from their homes and herded into refugee camps. After the country gained its independence, the Israeli government found itself with a major problem. After forcibly evicting these Palestinian people, and forcing them to live in refugee camps, and keeping them in poverty, disease, illiteracy, malnutrition and death for thirty years, what are you to do? What do you do when these people whom you have done this to fight back, in a struggle for self determination and national liberation. A bus was destroyed and Israeli citizens killed. But what about all those Palestinians who spent all those years in the concentration-refugee camps. What do you do about them? Do you try to bury their memory, or try to make believe that they do not exist?

These actions by mere physical appearance closely resemble Native American treatment by the U.S. government or treatment of the black South Africans by the South African government. If seen in this way, the Palestinian liberation movement bears very close resemblance to liberation movements in Cuba, Angola, South Africa, Algeria, Rhodesia, and Vietnam, not to mention others. And as in these other liberation struggles, violence is a part of the process of liberation.

It is the same violence used by the 13 colonies in their struggle for independence from England. As in these other liberation struggles, violence is a part of the process of liberation, of the fight for freedom from oppression, from being forced to exist in dehumanizing conditions, to live as something other than as a human being should be able to live. As in other situations, as history has proven, violence continues until freedom from oppression is won. Massive retaliation can only slow, but never stop this process. What is really needed is careful analysis, and pragmatic colutions. Israel should exist as an egalitarian state, with the elimination of racism and sexism. Once eliminated, the nature of Israel is different, and more closely resembles a multi-cultural, multi-racial state with full Palestinian representation in government. Israel should become a non-aligned socialist state, which bears no strong allegiance to any state or power, but still maintains basic ideologies of Marxism-Leninism worked into a multi-religious setting, where all the religions are welcome, with no religious discrimination.

The Jewish people have undergone a history of untold misery and suffering. But to turn around and subject your brother or sister to similar treatment is still an atrocity, any way you look at it. The memory of the holocaust will soon be forgotten, because the world has a short memory. Many people have forgotten about the fifty million dead in the slave trade and the genocide of Native American, Black and Puerto Rican people by the US government. Jewish people cannot count on past or present oppression to gain allies against the Palestinian struggle for liberation and self-determination.

Unless far reaching social solutions are adopted, violence in Israel will continue and even accelerate. It is important also that Jewish people throughout the world protest the oppressive nature of the Israeli government and unite with Arab people throughout the world for an egalitarian Israel, and an end to the violence. The type of violence seen this week was ugly, but unless this is done, the death and destruction will continue; history has shown this to be a true and unfortunate reality.

Headline bias distorting

To the Editor:

Monday the Collegian printed what I found to be a most intriguing headline on the front page. It was over an article which concerned Israel's Prime Minister Begin and his reaction to the terrorist raid which happened last Saturday, and it ran: "Begin Spouts Hatred for PLO." This headline bothers me.

For one thing, on reading the article, which quoted Begin giving a eulogy for one of the Israelis slain in the raid, I found no evidence that Begin was hateful — I would say he was angry. Nor would I be inclined to say that he was "spouting" anything.

Mainly, though, I object to the bias implicit in a statement such as that headline. It has many implications that are not borne out by the content of the article following. It leads the reader to think, "Why should I bother myself with some idiot who's got nothing better to do than spout hatred at people?" Further, it distorts the truth in a way that no newspaper ever should — and certainly not on the front page. I always thought that an assumption most responsible journalists make is that the reader is intelligent enough to form his own conclusions without having them printed for him in large block letters. And for those writers who can no longer contain their opinions, there is the editorial page.

This is not the first time the Collegian has violated this principle of objective journalism, but I've always been optimistic enough to hope it would improve. Maybe with a little bit of pushing from other people who are disturbed by this problem, it will.

Unfair non-funding says coalition

To the Editor:

The Coalition for Social Justice at UMass consists of a number of groups all seeking to address one or more particular issues of social justice. Although representing more than one political viewpoint and not necessarily agreeing on common strategies, we are working to find ways to collaborate and coordinate our efforts wherever possible in the many-sided struggle against oppression.

At our meeting March 15, we agreed to express our concern about the apparently arbitrary refusal on the part of the Student Senate Budget Committee to grant hearings to a number of organizations involved in justice issues. We hope these refusals represent no more than fatigue and lack of real thought on the part of hard-working senators. It seems to us unfair and short-sighted not to fund groups working for what, in the long term, is self-interest for most students: a just society in which to live and work. We think that society should come into being where we are — i.e., starting with UMass.

A quick pigeon-holing?

To the Editor:

While I do not wish to address the issues of Nkrumah Olinga's article about the Puryear controversy, I must take exception to some of his remarks in his response to Kenneth Shain's article.

According to Mr. Olinga, "Only white males ... can be racist to people of color ... no people of color ... is in a position to be racist." I understand the word racism to mean animosity shown to people of a difference race. Are you saying, Mr. Olinga, that only white males are capable of such a philosophy? Not white females? Or minority people, male and female? To be sure, most manifestations of racism in this country [and abroad] are those of Caucasion people towards non-white people, and this is as deplorable here as in South Africa. But, as to where you ever got the impression that no person other than a white male is capable of harboring unreasoning hatred towards members of another race, I certainly cannot imagine.

May I suggest that you take your role as "social analyst" a bit less seriously and consider your role as a human being? For most of us, the impact of racism is felt day to day, not simply in social institutions, but additionally in our personal relationships and encounters. Talk to people other than those among politically radical groups [and even among them, I suspect] and you will meet both racist and non-racist whites and minorities. An issue as serious as this one can only be confused by the sort of oversimplified "analysis" you apply.

I hope that you can accept this suggestion with somewhat less irritation than Mr. Shain's obviously caused you. My greatest fear is a quick pigeon-holing of the sort you gave him with a retort like, " ... when a white individual decides to criticize people of color, make sure you are aware of your own internal racism which every concerned white on this campus has by being a U.S. citizen." Anyone who cannot accept reasonable criticism puts himself on a shaky philosophical pedestal.

Purim party March 23

To the Editor:

The Jewish holiday of Purim commemorates the last minute rescue of the Jewish community of the Persian town of Shushan from destruction in the fifth century B.C.E. The story, as recorded in the Scroll of Esther, involves a plot by wicked Haman, the king's minister, to destroy the Jews of the empire. Through the clever efforts of the uncle and niece team of Mordehai and Esther, the king's Jewish wife, the Jews received permission to defend themselves and defeated Haman and his plan. The Jews were saved, wrong was righted, and everyone joined together in celebration.

Several traditions are associated with this holiday. The story of Purim is read humorously and noise makers are used to drown out evil Haman's name. There is a custom of shalakhmones, the giving of fruits and cakes to friends and neighbors. A special Purim food is a three cornerd cookie called Humantashan made to represent Haman's hat. Purim is traditionally a time of great celebration in the community.

This year Purim will be Thursday, March 23. Anyone who will be here then is welcome to join us for a Purim party. For more information please call Julia Mack 546-6619.

Trouble in Art Department

To the Editor:

In a week dedicated to appreciating and promoting the development of women, we once again failed to express our selves and our needs. Women in Visual Arts where were you? Organization of International Women's Week did not necessitate recruitment from individual departments, rather it assumed volition derived from a need to make a statement concerning women and culture.

Why then didn't women in visual arts seize this time to actively participate? In a department so obviously male-controlled and yet women-populated we find complacency despite our questions: Why is the instructor gender ratio 1 to 10? Why only one "Women's" Art History course? [limited to 20 students] Why only one tenured woman in this department? Why do we feel our work isn't taken seriously?

The products of our endeavors become alien to us through male criticisms and perceptions of what "good" art is, yet our objections never get beyond the exchange of whispers. It is acknowledged that some women choose not to deal with this, they hardly see the point: We will quietly leave our "ivory towers" unequipped with skills to survive, eventually wondering what our lives COULD have been, and continuing a tradition of women as "carriers" of art, not creators.

Support Mass. Bottle Bill

To the Editor:

I am urging the support of the University Community in aiding the passage of the Massachusetts State Bottle Bill. This bill, which lost by 20,000 votes last November, will now be voted on by our representatives in the State Legislature within the next two weeks.

The bill requires a five cent returnable deposit on all soft drink and beer containers sold in the state. This would encourage and reuse and recycling of containers with a direct effect on solid waste disposal and litter while simultaneously conserving valuable natural resources and energy in the production of the bottles and cans.

Opponents of the bottle bill have introduced a "litter tax" which would be imposed upon the manufacturers, wholesalers and retailers of products that contribute to litter. The irony of this proposal is that it would not create an incentive to return bottles and cut down on the excess and unnecessary production but would merely attempt to expand the litter pick-up throughout the state at the consumer's cost.

It is crucial that everyone interested in the passage of the bottle bill write or visit their representatives during the next week urging their vote for the bottle bill and against the political substitute, the litter tax.

Hopefully, the cooperative efforts of individuals and organizations throughout the state during the last four years will result in a bottle bill reflecting the interests of the consuming public in Massachusetts. If anyone would like further information or would like to help out, please drop by the PIRG office in the carriage shops or call 256-6434. Thank you.

On the murky side of town

By ROBERT FITZGERALD

For the last six years UMass students have been forced into a restless co-existence with a disquieting brigand known collectively as Amherst Towing. The brazen attitude put forth over the years by these hook-and-haul heavies is currently being threatened by the likely prospects of a student-run towing service.

Or, to be more correct, Amherst Towing, was being threatened by the likely prospects of a student-run towing service. In the last three months student-run towing has been re-routed past the realm of actuality into the maw of Bureaucracy, and, from all indications, is now just one more defunct student proposal.

Not that it lacked student support.

Amherst Towing is well known to be anathema to UMass car owners. In '75 they towed 4,288 cars from campus; in '76 the figure was upped to 4,600 cars and, after numerous contretemps with students, Amherst Towing was banned from campus during a portion of April. In '77 they raked in over $57,000 in student monies at $16.50 a tow, and in '78 the beat promised to go on.

In a comprehensive nine-page proposal issued last October, the Committee for Student Run Towing — an ad hoc group of students organized around the need for a responsible towing service — outlined plans which would, among other things, reduce towing and storage charges; create about twenty-five student jobs; keep revenues within student control; and locate the storage site in a corner of P-lot, thus saving students the usual three mile trek to Amherst Towing.

The Committee also adopted a policy of obtaining at least four different estimates on the equipment and labor needed to begin operations and structured its budget to allow a 15% reduction in revenues without impairing the operation of the service.

In order to begin operations a $35,000 loan was requested from the Student Senate, to be paid back in $7,000 installments over a five year period.

Last semester 7,000 student signatures supporting the student-run towing proposal were obtained. In addition, a survey of UMass undergraduates conducted by S.C.E.R., pinpointed towing as a crucial issue mandating remedial action by the Student Senate.

After a number of meetings the Senate voted for allocation of the necessary funds. Acting Director of Public Safety Saul Chafin seemed in favor of the move as long as funds would not be requested from the Administration.

The usual bid from the Procurement Office went out, but with a twist. Amherst Towing was offered an eight month contract containing a clause which stipulated that they (Amherst Towing) would be given a month's notice if student-run towing were to be implemented ahead of schedule.

Amherst Towing balked. They wanted a year, if not a multi-year contract. Prompted by Administrative urging, they agreed to "service" UMass without a contract.

Then, in December, an undercurrent of anger began to surface among members of the Committee for Student Run Towing. Acting Director of Public Safety Saul Chafin was to cement his position as Director of Public Safety in January. An outcropping of problems affecting the future of student-run towing suddenly emerged and Committee members believe Chafin had a large part in finding or creating them. Sources within the Administration say that Chafin did not want to deal with students and was never in favor of student-run towing.

In a recent Student Senate meeting — convened at 1:00 a.m. with approximately 25 of 160 Senators in attendance — Student Senate President Jon Hite moved to transfer the funds previously earmarked for student-run towing. A quorum was called for, hastily rebuffed by Hite, and was never seconded.

Even more recently, Amherst Towing was awarded a year's contract to tow at the University.

After all, as Director of Procurement Jake Bishop points out, Amherst Towing is still towing at rates set back in 1970. This is true. The people at Amherst Towing haven't had a cost of living increase from the Dept. of Public Utilities in eight years.

It's also true that a state law sets the maximum charge generally allowed for towing at $25. Municipalities have the option of not adopting the state law and allowing higher charges or setting lower ones. For example, the maximum private towing charge in Boston is $12; in Amherst it's $25.

This sits just fine with the owner of Amherst Towing, John "Tex" Jorgenson. I happened to be in the Amherst Towing office a few months back when a girl who'd just paid a towing fee asked Tex what he thought of student-run towing. "What do you want to bother about that for," he said. "I thought you people were here to get educated, not to try and run things."

> 'Amherst Towing also does a brisk, if sub-rosa trade in re-uniting people with their cars through Dave's Taxi. (Despite the misnomer, Dave's Taxi is actually owned by Amherst Towing.)

It may seem like mental laxatives are at work here, but this is somewhat the same porcine attitude that is tacitly condoned by UMass administrators: the belief that any gain in student power is a subsequent loss in administrative power and thus cannot be tolerated.

If this attitude were made to reverse itself (as the Committee for Student Run Towing tried to do) two things would immediately happen: 1) Amherst Towing would vacate UMass faster than suckfish leaving a wounded shark; and 2) student lines at small claims court would diminish substantially.

However, the Administration's attitude over the years hasn't changed and isn't about to change. Until such time as administrators begin to accommodate legitimate student proposals, the Massachusetts Consumer Council offers a free pamphlet "What You Should Know If Your Car Is Towed," which is available by writing the council at 100 Cambridge St., Boston 02202.

Organize ourselves

By MICHAEL FEDEROW

For graduate students, unionization is happening all around us. Our faculty has organized itself into the Massachusetts Society of Professors. The undergraduates have something called the Student Organizing Project. Even the professional staff has produced its own ideas for a union.

As most of us know, there is also an organization called the Graduate Student Employees Union, to organize graduate student TA's and RA's. But what good can unionization do us? That is the question this column is going to discuss.

At root, a union is a tool, a means to an end. It means that there is a grass roots organization that can mobilize its members to act in support of what they want. It may be called a "society", a "caucus", or an "association", but anything that acts that way is still a union.

This grass roots part is, in fact, the major difference between what we have now and what we could get. In most departments, working conditions for TA's and RA's — hours required, course material, class size and number, even who gets assistantships — is under the control of the department, and of the University Administration. This means that whether you do or don't get an assistantship is entirely dependent on the will of your professors, and whether or not Whitmore decides to be generous.

Whitmore hasn't been generous the past few years. Up until this year, the number of TA's had fallen by three hundred in three years. Since the faculty unionized, the Administration has mysteriously found money for restoring some (not all) of assistantships for the (un-unionized) TA-RA's, while not finding many new slots for (unionized) faculty.

Similarly, many faculty find that who they want to give assistantships to is not just a matter of who are the most "deserving" grad students. It is no accident that, in departments where faculty dole out all the assistantships, that graduate students who try to be independent — wanting to do their own research, organizing the grad students outside of "benevolent" faculty influence, or questioning the structure of graduate programs — are the ones who find it hardest to get assistantships.

You know this — in most departments there are cases in the past few years of some graduate student whom this happened to. Can you afford to antagonize your faculty sponsor?

As for graduate student government — do they really know the ins and outs of your department: who to talk to, who to avoid? Can they really handle the demands of sixty different departments and schools? Sure, they can help once any dispute goes beyond the department — but how often does that happen if no one inside the department is doing anything?

So it comes back to us graduate students in our departments. Our protection is ourselves. Does your department have at least some organization of graduate students? It's easy to form one — just call a meeting and talk with whoever shows up.

And talking among ourselves is most important. The worst part about a place like this is you think you're the only one with problems — it just isn't so. If a departmental policy and-or a faculty member is blocking you, it's certainly blocking others. Walking in to a department office with several students behind you makes a much more impressive showing than when you are alone.

But wait — many of the important decisions affecting us are not taken in the department at all — they come out of Whitmore, or even at the legislature. How much TA money there is, the number of RA-TA slots available, and so on, have nothing to do with a single department — they are just stuck with the decisions.

The Graduate Student Employees Union can coordinate efforts, and provide a powerful voice at the campus level — with us behind it. Right now, the union is working on University-wide hiring practices. It is working on grievance procedures for TA's and RA's — so you can complain to someone besides the person you work for. And much more.

But the union doesn't believe that any bunch of experts can do the hard work of organizing for you. It can show us how we can do it, and give us ideas of what we can do. But we have to do it. On the other hand, this means that, if we do the organizing, we will have control of the union. It won't be someone outside of us telling us what we need — we will figure it out and act ourselves!

Belchertown seeks state land for middle school

By RICHARD E. BARRELL
Collegian Staff

BELCHERTOWN — Town officials here will meet tomorrow with state officials and officials from Belchertown State School in an effort to obtain up to 167 acres of land owned by the school as a site for a new town middle school and recreation facilities.

The Town Board of Selectmen will present the town's proposal for obtaining and using the state property tomorrow at 10 a.m. in Lawrence Memorial Hall.

State officials expected to attend the meeting are state Sen. Robert D. Wetmore D-Belchertown, state Reps. James G. Collins, D-Amherst, and James Nolen, D-Belchertown, and members of the State Department of Mental Health.

Selectman William G. Whitlock this week said the land is needed because the town population is growing fast and the town lacks adequate recreational facilities. He said a site is also needed for a new school to house the town's growing school population.

Whitlock said the land along the south side of Route 21 is "ideal" for the town's purposes because it is near the town center and is large enough to provide room for recreation and school use.

Whitlock said the town's proposals for the land come from studies conducted by the Land Use Committee and Site Study Committee.

"If we don't plan for the future, we are going to be left out in the cold," he said.

Most of the 167 acres of land in wooded area, according to Whitlock. Approximately 15 acres surrounds the school's former superintendent's house and another 15 acres is a cemetary for the school residents.

There are 70 acres of woodland on the south side of Route 21 and another 42 acres are located across the highway. The remaining parcel of about 25 acres is under cultivation by UMass, according to Whitlock.

Plans for the land include plans for cross country skiing and hiking trails, an ice rink, tennis courts, and a softball field.

The superintendent's house, which now houses blind residents, will eventually be phased out be the state school and given to the town to serve as a community center with meeting and recreation space for the town's elderly population.

Whitlock said the town does not want to conflict with other groups using the land. He said the town will not disturb the cemetary and will not seek to take the land UMass is using to grow crops.

Your Birthday

FRIDAY, MARCH 17

Born today, you are a natural student, and your ability to learn will give you your choice of careers. The scientific intrigues you; the literary and artistic fascinate you. It would be hard to neglect either side of your education, and you will probably enter a field that emphasizes both liberal arts and sciences.

Highly analytical and exceptionally imaginative, you can combine fact and fancy so that each is enhanced and neither is harmed. Although inclined to daydream, you are firmly rooted in reality, and your vision remains unimpaired.

You are reflective as well as spontaneous. You value your experiences, are able to understand your present situation, have no fear for your future. Sometimes you may move only slowly, but for the most part your progress is exciting, interesting, and speedy.

Also born on this date are: Sammy Baugh, football star; Paul Green, playwright; Sidney Chaplin, actor.

To see what is in store for you tomorrow, find your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

Gymwomen get bid for nationals

By LAURA BASSETT
Collegian Staff

Once again the women's gymnastics team will be forfeiting its spring vacation. As in the last seven years, UMass gymwomen have found their plans to go to Sunny Florida squelched by practices for the Association of Intercollegiate Athletics for Women National Gymnastics Championships. The gymwomen will have to wait for vacation to begin after April 1 when the team returns from Seattle after two days of competition.

The team was officially notified yesterday that they had received an at large bid to compete in the national competition. Under the rules of the AIAW, the nine regional champs automatically qualify for the championships and the remaining seven places are filled by teams with the next highest total scores at the regional competitions.

At the Easterns last week the team finished third behind Penn State and Clarion with a total of 139.20. Coach Virginia Evans had felt her team would need to score in the 140's to qualify for nationals this year but 139.20 did qualify the Minutewomen and even placed them in the top bracket.

"We just made the top eight teams as we were seeded eighth," said Evans. "This is important because we will still be competing against the very best teams in the country."

The top eight teams include Southwest Missouri, the top seeded team with the highest regional score of 147.45, Penn State the Eastern champ, is second with 146.60, California State University-Fullerton is third with 145.40, Clarion, the defending national champions, are fourth with a 143.95, USC is fifth with 142.70, University of Louisville is sixth with 141.15, Louisiana State is seventh with 140.60 and UMass rounds out the top eight with a 139.20.

The East's fourth place team UNH just missed qualifying. Michigan State, a UMass opponent earlier in the year did qualify and has been seeded with a score of 138.15.

"The competition should be very close, there are a lot of very strong gymnasts competing in every position," said Evans. "I think our team has more points available than we have shown so far this season, and nationals would be a good place to bring it all together," said Evans optimistically.

The team continues to improve according to Evans. Susan Cantwell, Stephanie Jones, and Karen Hemberger all placed well at the Easterns and would have qualified to compete as individuals if the team had not gone. Cantwell is a veteran of four national competitions and Evans is hopeful she will place well on the beam. Cantwell finished eighth in the all around competition at the Easterns and would like to finish higher than her 13th all around placing at last year's nationals.

Stephanie Jones finished second last year on the uneven parallel bars and eighth in the all around competition. Jones has been bothered throughout the season with a hip injury but appears to be coming back into full strength after the Easterns.

Karen Hemberger nearly took the vaulting championship at the Easterns and is expected to be one of the top competitors in that event at the nationals. Last year Karen was bothered by an ankle injury which affected her all around total. This year, however, Hemberger has been one of the most consistent UMass competitors and is expected to perform strongly in all events.

Coleen Thorton and Diane Laurenson may both be back in the lineup for the nationals according to Coach Evans. Thorton has been sidelined with a back injury for the latter part of the season but appears to be regaining her strength.

Laurenson has been restricted all season by calcium deposits in her wrists. The injury has kept her from working on the floor, which is her specialty, but she has contributed strongly to the beam effort.

While most UMies are carefully counting down the days until vacation, the gymwomen are looking a bit past March 17, to March 29 when they will be traveling to defend last year's fourth place finish in Seattle.

Florida trip for batsmen

By JUDY VAN HANDLE
Collegian Staff

While many UMass students are making the long trip South this week to soak up the rays in Florida, the UMass baseball team will be going there with another purpose in mind.

The Minutemen are making their annual trip to Florida to open up their season with 10 games against some of the best teams in the country.

UMass plays its first game of the year this morning at 10 against Wesleyan, and then takes on Florida International at 3 p.m. The Minutemen will then play eight more games next week, including three against Southern Illinois, two against Miami, two against Westchester, and one against Bowling Green.

Although winning is the uppermost purpose of the trip, coach Dick Bergquist also plans on experimenting with his lineup and using his full pitching staff.

"The main things we look for on the trip is to gain some playing experience for the northern season," he said. "We also use it to get ready for the month."

UMass, 20-17 a year ago and losers of 10 one-run games, will be playing two teams this week that were ranked among the top 10 in the country last year.

Southern Illinois was ranked third in the nation for the 1977 regular season and wound up in the third spot after the College World Series. The Salukis were the only team to eventually beat eventual national Champion Arizona State in the World Series.

Miami was ranked in the top 10 last season, before finally lodging in the ninth spot. The Hurricanes missed out on going to the World Series by losing their final playoff game.

"They'll have an advantage down there in that they'll be playing on their home astroturf and under the lights," Bergquist said. The games against Miami will be played next Wednesday and Saturday at 7:30 p.m.

UMass was 3-6 in its spring trip last season. The three wins were over Bowling Green, Miami, and Southern Illinois.

Bergquist is looking forward to the 10 games in order to settle his lineup and starting pitching rotation.

The three veteran pitchers — Nigro, Doug Welenc, and Dave Tewhill — have all earned berths.

"Nigro and Welenc are as good as any two pitchers in New England," Bergquist noted, "and Tewhill is a capable reliever."

Five new pitchers dot the roster, and Bergquist plans on using them all to see where they fit into his plans.

Jim Lewis, Chris Collins, and Doug Aylward were promoted from last year's junior varsity squad. Bergquist said they were the three most effective pitchers on the team.

Mark Brown is a promising freshman, while Mark Yacysnyn is a transfer from Clemson and UConn.

"He has good control and a breaking pitch," Bergquist said. "We look to him to be either a middle reliever or a spot starter.

"We'll pull pitchers in a one-run game," Bergquist continued. "Right now, we don't think anyone should throw over 100 pitches or go more than seven innings."

As for the rest of the team, Bergquist said catcher John Czerapowicz is the only player not making the trip. He underwent elbow surgery and cannot participate in full drills until the third week in April. Czerapowicz hit .268 last season.

"We have a demanding schedule this year," Bergquist concluded, referring to a 34-game northern slate. "We have a lot of potential. Right now we just don't know how it's going to work out."

He will hope to have a clearer picture by next Saturday night.

110-day strike to end

Miners will work today

[AP] — All 160,000 mine workers may not be ending their 110-day strike today with 10,000 mine construction workers possibly picketing.

Mines were given safety inspections this weekend across Appalachia and other coal areas in preparation for the return of the miners, scheduled for 12:01 a.m. EST today.

However, mine construction workers also represented by the United Mine Workers still had not reached a settlement, and picketing by these workers delayed miners from actually going back underground after the last contract settlement in 1974.

The UMW negotiations for the 10,000 construction workers, who build tunnels and aboveground facilities at mines, were continuing yesterday in Washington with the Association of Bituminous Contractors.

Progress was reported, but that was no guarantee some adamant local presidents might not call out the pickets.

Normal Beattie, a UMW official from District 12 in Illinois who is in Washington helping to negotiate the construction workers' contract, noted the progress and urged against picketing.

It was believed the construction workers were after a contract comparable to that of the miners, whose three-year pact provides a 39 per cent increase in wages and benefits. The miners had made $7.30 an hour under the old contract.

"We're getting very close," Beattie said. "I just can't discuss the issues, but the talks are progressing very well."

An industry official, declining to be identified publicly, said "substantial progress" was being made.

In the coalfields, however, reaction was not as optimistic.

"I expect pickets to be out about 11 p.m. Sunday evening," said John Simpson, president of Kentucky construction workers Local 1830. "We don't have a contract, and that's the way it's got to be.

"Once the picket lines go up, I know the miners will honor them," he said. "They're good about that because we're union brothers."

He spoke critically of the construction workers' negotiating team and said the proposal being worked out "wouldn't pass if it is offered to us in its present form."

The miners approved their contract by a vote of 57 to 43 per cent last week, and the contract between the UMW and the Bituminous Coal Operators of America was signed Saturday night. Union officials said yesterday that the miners were ready to work.

ST. CHARLES, VA (UPI) — A member of the United Mine Workers local stands amid the wreckage of a UMW trailer yesterday after an explosion ripped through it Saturday. State police are still investigating.

UN troops settle; guerillas still fire

BEAUFORT CASTLE, Lebanon [AP] — Palestinian guerrillas entrenched in the ruins of this clifftop Crusader-built fortress fired mortar shells yesterday into Israeli-held territory in southern Lebanon. Increasing numbers of United Nations troops, meanwhile, moved into the region to take up peacekeeping chores.

Associated Press correspondents who traveled extensively in south Lebanon yesterday said most of the blue-helmeted U.N. troops had yet to move between Israeli and guerrilla lines.

In Israel, a spokesman for the U.N. peacekeepers said a Swedish reconnaissance patrol near the Kardali Bridge over the Litani River was caught in a crossfire yesterday during a skirmish between guerrillas in the Beaufort outpost and Christian militiamen south of the Litani.

"The fire was not directed at U.N. troops," said spokesman Jacques da Silva. He said none of the Swedes was hurt.

An Israeli commander in Tel Aviv told the state radio that guerrilla rocket fire from Tyre, the guerrillas' last major stronghold south of the Litani River, struck an area of northern Israel. No casualties or damage was reported.

An officer of a French U.N. unit bivouacked at a former Lebanese army barracks near Tyre said his superiors would probably contact Israeli officers later in the day to discuss deployment.

As he spoke to reporters gunfire echoed from nearby Israeli and guerrilla lines.

Additional French paratroopers yesterday joined two companies already camped at Tyre, raising the unit's strength to about 400 men.

In Beirut, Yasser Arafat said his Palestine Liberation Organization "will help the U.N. forces to obtain an unconditional withdrawal of Israeli forces from South Lebanon."

Israeli troops entered Lebanon March 15 in response to a guerrilla raid in Israel March 11 that killed 35 Israelis. They have occupied virtually all of the region south of the Litani except for a band around Tyre and a belt linking the biblical port city to the Litani.

Sub-committee formed to prevent scandals

BOSTON [AP] — When the revelations of payoffs and political contributions have died down and Massachusetts returns to business as usual, what will prevent another scandal like the one involving the New York consulting firm of McKee-Berger-Mansueto?

Coming up with legislation in an effort to keep the state's officials honest will be the job of the Post Audit and Oversight subcommittee, now conducting its probe of the $6 million MBM contract.

Rep. Gerald Cohen, D-Andover, subcommittee chairman, has given some indications of how he thinks selection procedures should be changed.

When MBM was selected to supervise construction of the University of Massachusetts Boston campus, it was one of three firms recommended for the job by the state's Designer Selections Board, a group of engineers and architects who make recommendations on architectural and related contracts where there is no bidding procedure.

In what he called his own "sinister hypothesis," Cohen said, "What a wonderful way to have all three firms bid against each other by making political contributions.

"It's just a possibility. But everything tends to convince me that if someone wants to use that leverage it's a better system than before," Cohen said.

When the Designer Selection Board was set up in the mid-1960's, it was considered a reform and among those promoting the concept was one of the House's leading liberals, Rep. Michael S. Dukakis. The board was the state's response to yet another scandal involving the appointment of architects who had contributed to the political campaign of former Gov. John Volpe.

Cohen's subcommittee is giving some thought to putting the full responsibility on the Designer Selection Board rather than the commissioner of administration and finance to pick the final candidate.

Cohen has noted time and time again as the hearings progress that the board does its job, narrows the field to three, and then gives no further guidance to the commissioner than the list of names and, upon request, what Cohen is fond of calling "a self serving brochure" from the firms.

He asked BBC director Walter Poitrast, who is a member of the board, what he thought of the idea of professionals making such a final decision.

UM budget won't get House nod

Governor Dukakis

BOSTON — University administrators may have to make a return visit to the State House here and face the House Ways and Means Committee for further discussion of the fiscal 1979 budget.

State Secretary of Education Paul Parks last week was unable to supply evidence to his statement that the University's total library funding would be leveled at $900,000 because Southeastern Massachusetts University and University of Lowell were facing "serious accreditation problems."

"We are attempting to address these needs," said Parks, "and they are immediate needs." He said strengthening the libraries at the other state colleges and universities was a priority of the governor's office this coming fiscal year.

The University's total requested budget is for $127,253,465, not counting anticipated salary adjustments that could tack on an additional $3 million. Both Governor Michael S. Dukakis and Secretary Parks have arrived at their own recommendations. They are, respectively, $116.3 million and $121.6 million.

Parks told the House Ways and Means Committee he was aware of the additional $3 million that would be requested by the University but it was agreed by him and Dukakis that their totals "meet the base minimum needs, the necessities of the institution."

Committee Chairman John J. Finnegan told Parks his answers were unacceptable and that he would be requested to return at a later date with "the facts and figures" concerning accreditation problems at the other institutions.

Interim President Franklin K. Patterson and the three campus chancellors were told they may have to return at that time to defend again their respective budgets.

Rep. Philip D. Shea, D-Lowell, accused Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery of "terrific mismanagement" concerning the recent disclosures that the Amherst campus may be involved in shady funding practices in residence halls system.

Shea also challenged Patterson on the relocation of the University president's office and staff to 100 Arlington Street in Boston's South End.

Patterson said it had been agreed that the president's office should be separate from the three campuses and close to the state's capital but Shea fired back "How can you justify being out here in Utopia, 80 or 90 miles away from the largest campus?"

Shea also asked why Patterson had not taken on the funding practices question earlier and Patterson said as an interim official he did not want to "meddle" in the affairs of a long-term president.

Rep. Raymond A. Jordan, Jr., D-Springfield, said he would like to see "more mileage" coming out o the University. He commended the Amherst camus for its innovative programs that hook up local businesses with campus business and economic specialists and suggested that the Boston campus "strengthen its relationship between its academic program and the inner city" and develop an urban studies program.

Interim Boston Campus Chancellor Claire Van Ummersen defended her request to restock the Boston campus library because "the literature necessary for daily research was unavailable" to her students. She said that for long range research many of them had to study at the Boston Public Library or at other college libraries within the city.

Hadley denies water to Amherst residents

Amherst town officials may have to find another source for additional water supplies other than Hadley reservoirs, after Hadley residents last week rejected a proposal to sell Amherst water whenever requested.

Under the proposed contract, Hadley would have agreed to supply Amherst with a minimum of 30 million gallons of water a year at the rate of $250 per million gallons. Amherst would have been charged at an increased rate of $3 for every additional million gallons.

Opposition to the proposed contract was led by Hadley resident Joseph J. Fitzgibbon. Fitzgibbon said the proposed contract lacked sufficient safeguards for Hadley, was not a true emergency accord, and served Amherst's needs more than Hadley's.

Joseph F. Wancyk, who was elected last week to the board of selectmen on a campaign based on the water issue, said the contract should be renegotiated. He said the door should be left open for an agreement.

Amherst selectmen, according to board chairman Diana Romer, were discouraged by the proposal's rejection. She said the selectmen would be open to further discussion.

Selectman Roger Jaque is less optimistic. Asked about the possibility of reopening negotiations, Jaque said, "I don't really see what good would come of it."

Amherst is looking at two other possible solutions to the water problem. One would involve tapping the Laurence Swamp in South Amherst. The town is also looking into the possibility of constructing a pipeline between Amherst and the nearby Quabbin Reservoir, which is operated by the Metropolitan District Commission, and serves most of the communities in the Boston area.

The engineering firm of Tigh and Bond has been conducting tests of the Laurence Swamp to see if it can be tapped for drinking water. Romer said the town might be able to tap the swamp by 1981 if the tests prove favorable.

There has been increasing concern around the state in recent years that the Quabbin Reservoir is becoming inadequate to serve the needs of metropolitan Boston. Amherst's chances of receiving water from Quabbin are unclear. In 1975, the district commission voted to offer water to Amherst, but in 1976 the commission decided not to allow any more tie-ins until the reservoir's supply could be augmented with other sources.

One proposal for augmenting Quabbin's water supply has been the center of some controversy in Amherst. The proposal calls for water to be diverted from the Connecticut River in Northfield to Quabbin. There has been some speculation that the commissions offer of a Quabbin hook-up to Amherst was intended to make Amherst more likely to favor the proposed Northfield diversion.

Tunis to leave position; no new dean found

The position of UMass dean of admissions and records may not be filled when current Dean William D. Tunis leaves the post Sept. 5.

Tunis announced last week he will leave the position and return to teaching and counseling students in the College of Food and Natural Resources, where he is a tenured professor of entomology.

William D. Tunis

"We haven't had a chance to decide what happens next," Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Robert L. Woodbury said last night. "There's no urgency to it, though."

Woodbury said the admissions and records department currently has a director for freshman admissions and another for transfer admissions.

"I don't know what will happen next," he said.

Tunis said he had been considering returning to teaching for a year-and-a-half because he wanted to get back into closer contact with students and with teaching.

"I want to do something else," he said. "I've put in 15 years as dean of admissions and I'm essentially making a mid-life career change."

Tunis has been dean of admissions and records since 1963.

Woodbury called Tunis an "institution" at UMass.

"Dean Tunis was unique," Woodbury said. "He did a tremendous job."

Tunis received his bachelor of science degree from UMass in 1942 and later a masters of science from the University of Minnesota. He received a Ph.D. from UMass in 1959 and was a professor of entomology at UMass and director of the Waltham Research Station before becoming dean of admissions.

Belchertown transit will not add service

BELCHERTOWN — No additional service is planned for Belchertown bus riders. Service to the center of town will remain at six trips per day even after new buses go into service next fall.

"The university is taking a tough line on (bus service) because of the constraints of costs..."

Al Byam, operations manager of the transit services and William Barrett, director of parking and operations at UMass, said during a meeting with Belchertown Selectmen they "don't forsee adding any additional service."

"The university is taking a tough line on this because of the constraints of costs," Barrett said.

Barrett said that while sometime changes in the schedule of buses could be negotiated, any additional service to the Town would have to be paid for by Town funds.

The selectmen asked Barrett and Byam to provide results of ridership surveys so they may determine the best time for bus runs.

In other business, efforts to obtain up to 167 acres of land owned by Belchertown State School for use as a site for future town projects have hit snags. State school officials said in a letter to the board of selectmen they feel some of the town's plans may conflict with state growth policies.

These policies call for agricultural land in the acreage the town seeks to be kept from development.

Selectmen said they remain optimistic that differences about the use of the land can be worked out.

The land is located along Routes 21 and 202 approximately one mile from Belchertown center.

Ernest M. Gay, chief of police, said he estimates it will cost the Town some $1,450 per man to comply with requirements for training under a new state law.

According to Gay, changes in chapter 41, paragraph 96b now require that all police officers complete 12 weeks of basic training.

The law requires that all officers be trained either by the town itself or in a training program approved by the Massachusetts Criminal Justice Training Council.

The $1,450 is an estimate of wages which would have to be paid to officers while attending training, according to Gay.

Universities could lose study funds

By ANNE C. ROARKE
The Chronicle of Higher Education
Copyright 1978

The Office of Management and Budget has proposed a new method of figuring the costs of federally sponsored research projects that universities say would deprive them of millions of dollars a year.

The new approach would affect the way universities figure the "direct" costs of paying salaries and purchasing materials under federal grants and contracts as well as the "indirect" expenses of conducting that research, such as utilities, janitorial services, library depreciation, and general university administration.

University officials have until May 1 to comment on the proposed new rules, which the Office of Management and Budget may then revise and issue in final form later in the year.

While few university financial officers contacted by The Chronicle last week had had a chance to analyze the new method thoroughly, all agreed it would place heavy and, some said, "unfair" financial burdens on universities that conduct government research.

'Substantial, Additional Burdens'

The rules, according to the Office of Management and Budget, were designed to make the government "bear its fair share of total costs" of the research it sponsors. In effect, they would reduce the amount of money institutions could collect for conducting federal research and would require campus officials to keep detailed accounts of the ways they spend federal dollars.

"We feel they impose substantial, additional burdens on us," said Max A. Binkley, vice-president for finance at Colorado State University and chairman of a subcommittee on "government-cost policies" for the National Association of College and University Business Officers.

"They try to put institutions in a straitjacket. They do not recognize that differences exist among institutions.... And they fail to recognize the higher costs of doing work for the government."

Although Binkley said he had not had a chance to review thoroughly the effects of the proposed rules on his own institution, he had seen "a preliminary, rough evaluation" showing "that federal money will be reduced by several million dollars at one major university."

A Bad Time for Universities

Warning that the proposals could cost Stanford University several million dollars a year, Provost William F. Miller told the faculty he was troubled that the reductions would come at a particularly bad time for financially strapped universities.

"We hang in a delicate balance," Miller said. "For this year we will report a balanced budget... but there are many forces that tend to push us out of balance."

Where institutions already face substantial deficits, he said, the proposed cuts in federal support could present even more serious problems.

According to Robert C. Bowie, vice-president for business management at the Johns Hopkins University, "just reading quickly through the proposal" indicates that the changes could be "extremely costly" for his institution.

"While we can only speculate now," he said, "it will surely result in a seven-digit figure.

Will Cost 'Only' $2-million

"At least it will be better than the $4.4-million we estimated we would lose under the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare's proposal" for estimating research costs, Bowie added.

"With the new OMB proposal, we'll lose only about $2-million. It's pretty funny to say 'only' $2-million. I don't know where it is going to come from."

Following Congressional criticism in 1975 that indirect-cost rates had grown out of control, the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare sent the Office of Management and Budget proposals for revising the standards used to determine federal research costs.

Those proposals were revised in January, 1977, and again last April.

An analysis indicated that the revised proposals would have reduced by about 25 per cent the amount of money institutions could charge for indirect costs. That, according to Binkley, would have amounted to approximately $170-million in indirect costs that universities could not charge to the government.

Convention to pick prexy

By JON KLEIN
Collegian Staff

The Student Government Association Electoral Convention to choose the next student president will be held in Boyden gymnasium at 8:30 Thursday night.

This will be the first convention since the popular presidential elections began in 1975.

According to the student constitution, an electoral convention of area governments and student senators must be held if none of the candidacies can reach one-third of the popular vote.

The Union Program Council referendum for a $2.00 per semester fee was declared invalid. The decision to invalidate the referendum vote grew from protests that the writing of the referendum was ambiguous. Governmental Affairs Co-chairwoman Marcy Levington said an election will be held for the referendum if a request for a new election is made.

The first ballot at the convention will include the two top candidacies, Shelly Gordon and Herb Tyson and the other candidacy of David Barenberg and Susan Birmingham. Nominations may also be made from the floor. The None - of - the - above category which had the second highest vote total will not be on the convention ballot.

Levington said, "none of the above can never win so it cannot be on the ballot." Early Friday morning after the election there was some controversey over the category being on the convention ballot.

Blank ballots may also be turned in by conventioneers. The blanks are protest votes.

A simple majority of 50 per cent plus one is needed to win.

Each senator and area government official will turn in a ballot. Each residential area is alloted a certain number of votes. For example, Southwest has 10 votes in the convention. If the Southwest delegation splits evenly for two candidates, then each candidate will receive five votes.

Thirty envelope ballots were declared invalid by the Governmental Affairs Committee. Envelope ballots were used by voters who came to the ballot boxes without identification.

These voters were to place their ballots in envelopes. An outer envelope was to include the student's name and other identification information. The information was to insure that the voter was eligible.

Thirty voters failed to include the necessary information on their envelopes thus invalidating their votes.

Election results

A total of 3,193 students voted in the student government election held March 15 and 16, according to the Student Senate Governmental Affairs Committee. There are roughly 18,000 eligible voters.

The residential area with the largest turnout was Southwest with 1,248 voters. The lowest turnout was in the Greek area with 54 voting.

The figures that follow are from the committee's unofficial tally sheet. The figures do not include envelope ballots which were used by voters who came to the ballot boxes without identification. Those ballots were counted separately.

Shelly Gordon and Herb Tyson — 799 votes, None - of - the - above — 457, David Barenberg and Susan Birmingham — 440, Donald Bishop — 346, Steve Ross — 301, Russell Swan — 164, Bill Edelstein and Brad Goverman — 156, Howard Greene and Paul Lawrence — 116, Steve Brickman and Mark Vafiades — 96, Bob Melia — 63, Jay Flynn — 52.

Anti-apartheid sentiment builds

News analysis

NASHVILLE, Tenn. [Pacific News Service] — "It's strange," observed a middle-aged black woman, who said she had taken part in lunch counter sit-ins here in the early 1960s, "but, you know, it looks like South Africa is bringing us together again, getting us tired, old folk back on our feet. We just have to do what we can to help those poor, brave kids in Soweto."

The sit-in veteran spoke as she marched through the streets of Nashville last weekend with some 5,000 mostly black demonstrators protesting the United States-South Africa Davis Cup tennis matches at Vanderbilt University.

The three-day protest — sponsored by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, and organized locally by black and white students — may transform the growing but mostly white student-led anti-apartheid campaign into a national movement coordinated by black organizations.

At the same time, the Davis Cup protests suggested that the South Africa issue may be the spark that re-ignites a black protest movement in the United States after nearly a decade of relative quiet despite worsening economic conditions for blacks.

Billed as the largest protest of its kind since the civil rights movement, the demonstration recalled for many of the participants the days of Martin Luther King and Student Non-violence Coordinating Committee — a movement reborn.

"It's a new day today, the beginning of a new era of protest," black activist and comedian Dick Gregory told the cheering crowd, which had been drawn to Nashville from as far away as Chicago and rural North Carolina. "If the American corporations that invest in South Africa don't listen to what's happening here today, and if the universities don't listen, they're gonna see a whole lot of trouble."

NAACP President Benjamin Hooks promised, "We will lead other marches in other cities, and we will be raising not only the issue of South Africa, but also of unemployment and racism in this country. This is not the end but the beginning. We shall march on until victory is won and all god's children are free."

The Davis Cup demonstrations drastically cut attendance at the games — the 9,000-seat capacity was never more than 15 per cent full. The embarrassingly low turn-out compelled the U.S. Tennis Association to release Vanderbilt, the host, from its financial obligations, and a local coal mine owner, Joe Davis, offered to pick up the tab.

With the active participation of black organizations from the Urban League to the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, and white and black students, the Davis Cup protests also provided a major forum and stimulus to the anti-apartheid movement. But strains and difficulties — especially regarding the NAACP's role — remain that could prevent the formation of a coordinated, large-scale, national movement of black and white Americans.

The Davis Cup was the NAACP's debut in recent protests against United States — South Africa ties. Many rank-and-file members applauded the group's activism, welcoming Hook's announcement that he expected 40,000 demonstrators to show up in Nashville. But after that initial announcement, the NAACP decided not to go all out in busing people into Nashville from all over the country. The organization decided to make the Davis Cup a "symbolic protest", and Hooks told reporters he would be pleased if 2,000 people took part.

Furthermore, NAACP marshals restrained marchers from joining local activists in on-site picketing, and at the rally Saturday, Hooks appealed to the crowd to ignore "those disrupters who want us to act a fool over at the gym."

A local group — the Tennessee Coalition Against Apartheid — and many black students from Fisk, Meharry Medical College and Tennessee State University said they had worked well with local NAACP leaders and tried to coordinate strategy with the national office, but had run into a brick wall.

The coalition said it will now move to confronting issues of racism at Vanderbilt, as well as university investments linked to South Africa.

★ Research finances could be decreased

has not yet estimated what the OMB proposal would cost, an official said it would be less than under the HEW plan, but still a "significant burden" for universities.

One of its most costly provisions, according to some campus officials, concerns the way in which institutions would have to account for the indirect costs they incurred in doing research for the government.

Under the proposed rules, institutions would be required to categorize indirect costs according to "individual functions performed in each building on the basis of usable square feet of space, excluding common areas."

In effect, campus officials said, that provision would severely limit universities' discretion in determining what their indirect costs are and where they should be charged.

"Such prescribed standards will deny institutions with different problems and different ways of doing things the flexibility they currently have to account for those differences," said Binkley. "I would call this (document) more a statement of cost procedures and less a statement of principles."

Another costly prospect, according to some university officers, is the way the rules would treat library services for government-supported researchers and their support staffs.

The proposed regulations would allow an institution conducting government research to take into account only the number of government-financed researchers who use the library.

The proposed rules would not allow institutions to charge additional overhead or depreciation costs for such individuals, despite university contentions that such persons typically cause more "wear and tear" on libraries than do regular students and instructors.

Excluding Student Expenses

Campus officials are also disturbed by a provision in the proposed rules that would affect the way they must account for the costs of graduate students who participate in government research.

The government now allows institutions to take into account such expenses as the students' use of a dean's office and counseling activities.

Under the proposed changes, those expenses would be excluded altogether, thus allowing universities to collect only for the salaries of such students while they are working on government projects.

At least one present policy that the OMB decided to continue greatly disturbs many campus officials — a policy that excludes interest costs, fund-raising expenses, and the costs of patents and public-relations from the list of indirect expenses that can be charged to federal research projects.

It is "unreasonable" that the government does not help pay for these costs, contended Binkley. "The government clearly benefits when we incur them."

Increase in Costly Paperwork

One of the most troublesome aspects of the proposed regulations, according to Reagan Scurlock, executive director of the governmental relations committee of the business officers' association, is that institutions will be required to document their expenses in minute detail, thus adding to the already costly paperwork that the federal government requires.

Lawmakers have urged such controls, however. They contend that institutions are responsible for inflating the costs of government research by charging for activities and services that would have been provided regardless of whether federal projects were being conducted on their campuses.

Many university officials have countered that the ever-growing federal paperwork requirements are at least partly responsible for the soaring costs of government-sponsored research.

More detailed accounting procedures and increasingly complex regulations for the protection of human safety, occupational safety, and hiring practices have all contributed to the rising costs of research, universities argue.

$2-Million Refund

University officials acknowledge that there have been some problems in the way institutions have kept records of how they are spending federal funds.

Just this month, for instance, the University of California announced it was refunding to the federal government nearly $2-million charged for university services, such as vehicle operations and storehouse supplies.

Federal guidelines require government contract and grant rates to be based on operating costs, such as the actual cost of an automobile currently in use.

The university, however, had included other expenses in its cost estimates, including inflation factors to provide for the replacement costs of equipment.

The payment was the seventh the university had made to the federal government since April 1977, following a series of HEW audits of the university's federal contracts and grants.

Details of the OMB's proposed regulations were published in the Federal Register on March 10.

Cops still explore blast

SOUTH HADLEY — Police are continuing to investigate the cause of a Thursday morning blast which destroyed a home and caused damage to surrounding homes in the exclusive Chestnut Hill section of this community.

The owner of the home, Thomas D. Raymond, 31, faces a hearing on 1976 charges of zoning violations when he was a partner in a used car dealership in Springfield. He was arraigned in Springfield District Court Saturday after being arrested Friday afternoon while talking with insurance adjustors at the site of his home.

State police Friday removed an object from the rubble of the home, but then denied that it was evidence of a bomb.

"There was a rumor that we had taken a bomb out of the house and put it in the fire marshal's car, but that wasn't the case," said Lt. William Schenker of the South Hadley police force.

Trooper Gary Pease of the state fire marshal's office ruled out that natural gas detonation was the cause of the explosion.

State police, personnel from the state fire marshal's office and explosives experts from the Federal Treasury Department's Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms Divisions have been aiding local police and firefighters in the investigation of the blast.

Schenker said the investigation would continue today but the Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms experts will not remain on the scene.

The blast occurred at 3:48 Thursday morning in the unoccupied home. The owner reportedly was in Florida at the time of the explosion while his wife was in Scotland. No one was injured in the blast, although five other homes were badly damaged.

The home, worth a reported $70,000, had been for sale for almost five months. The owners were asking $69,000 for the contemporary raised ranch, a real estate salesman said.

Shock waves from the blast were heard for 15 miles.

March postponed

The Skokie Action Committee has not yet met to discuss the postponement of a Nazi march through Skokie, Illinois by a State Supreme Court justice last week.

"We haven't met about it yet, but if there is going to be no march there, I don't think we are going out there," said committee member, Julia Mack.

Yitzhak Santis, another committee member said, "My personal comment is I'm very happy they've postponed it. I'd rather be at home on Passover rather than in front of a Nazi in Skokie, Illinois."

The Skokie action committee was planning to present a proposal and petitions to the Student Senate Wednesday for funding for a bus to send UMass students to Illinois on April 20.

Building controlled

A record turn-out at last week's Hadley Town Meeting voted by a margin of 252 to 10 to give the town increased planning controls over any major construction project proposed for the town.

This will have an immediate effect on the proposed Hampshire Mall, which the Pyramic Systems Company is planning for Route 9 in Hadley.

Single family homes will be exempted from the planning by-law.

Engineering program to be established

The UMass-Amherst School of Engineering will be cooperating with the UMass-Boston to offer a new academic program for students who might be unable to finance a full four-year program of study at the Amherst campus.

The program, which will begin in September, will lead to a bachelor of science degree in engineering.

Under the new program, students who successfully complete two years of study at the Boston campus will be guaranteed admission to the UMass-Amherst engineering school for their last two years.

Lobster resources decreasing

PLYMOUTH, Mass. [AP] — Lobster, a $50 million New England industry and a dinner delight priced for champagne appetites looms as an up-and-coming headache for the council that oversees fishing in New England waters.

Lobsters are being caught faster than they can reproduce.

And the federal government is working on a lobster fishery management plan for the New England Regional Fishery Management Council, the federally-appointed panel that administers fish quotas and helps monitor the 200-mile limit.

The plan was drafted by Thomas D. Morrissey of the National Marine Fisheries Service, who says he is alarmed by depletion of lobsters in New England waters.

The plan is now under review by the Northeast Marine Fisheries Board.

Morrissey won't be specific about the proposal, which will go to the fishery management council for review and possible implementation if approved by the fisheries board.

The council has had its share of headaches with cod, haddock and flounder, big money crops for New England fishermen.

Morrissey says the quota system for cod, haddock and flounder has been "at best, chaotic."

But the Plymouth-based federal coordinator says he hopes planning and foresight can avoid a similar confusion in the lobster industry. "At the moment, I don't anticipate quotas being proposed for lobsters," he says.

Some lobster industry spokesmen say it may already be too late to safeguard the New England lobster.

In Maine, the No. 1 state for lobster in New England, the president of the state lobstermen's association is pessimistic. "Overfishing is so bad the industry could be in real trouble in five years," said Edward Blackmore.

And Vaughn Anthony, research and development director for the Maine Department of Marine Resources, recently told a fisherman's forum to expect hard times.

"We are in for a hard time if we don't do something now. It may already be too late," he said.

Blackmore says the statistics on Maine's lobster catch speak for themselves. "We increased our fishing effort 2½ times since 1957, but over the years the catch has gradually declined by 30 per cent," said the Stonington resident and 30-year veteran lobster fisherman.

In Massachusetts, which ranks second in the region for its lobster catch, the executive director of the state Lobstermen's Association described the situation as "precarious."

"It's a known fact we harvest 90 per cent of lobsters as they reach legal size," said Robert Barlow. "And we're heavily overfished, although Massachusetts has taken the lead in conservation."

Rhode Island, which places third in lobster catch, may already be feeling the effects of the overfishing.

French kidnap victim released

it was not immediately known whether a ransom had been paid.

Police said Empain was freed at 10:30 p.m. in the brilliantly-lit Place d'Opera square fronting the Paris opera. The square was crowded at the time with tourists who had come to Paris for the Easter weekend.

Police said Empain appeared to be in good health.

The baron was turned loose following an appeal from one of the suspected members of the gang, Alain Caillol.

Caillol was captured in a police shootout Friday night when he and four other alleged gang members appeared at a rendezvous to pick up a ransom of 17 million Swiss francs $8 million.

Another suspected member of the kidnap gang, Daniel Duchateau, was shot and killed in the police ambush.

Empain telephoned his wife from the Place de l'Opera and, she immediately called police, a communique from police headquarters said.

The Italian-born Baroness Empain drove quickly to a spot where her husband told her to meet him and police arrived soon after.

Police said the baron returned home with his wife, telling police he did not want to go to headquarters on the Quai des Orfevres for questioning at this time.

Interior Minister Christian Bonnet immediately sent a message of congratulations to the detectives and the special anti-gang squad who worked on the case from the start.

Empain was kidnapped at 11 a.m. on Jan. 23 as he was being driven by his chauffer to his office.

As his silver-gray limousine drove away from his luxurious apartment on the Avenue Foch near the Arch of Triumph, a pickup truck suddenly blocked the way.

Four gunmen dragged out the elderly chauffeur, pistol-whipped him, then jumped into the limousine and sped off with Empain.

Police set up the heaviest network of roadblocks in recent memory. President Valery Giscard d'Estaing and Belgium's King Baudoin, both friends of Empain, were kept informed of every development in the case.

The kidnappers sent proof immediately to Empain's family that they were holding him. The proof consisted of a handwritten note from the baron, his identity card - and a slice from a left little finger, presumably Empain's.

These objects were found, on directions from the kidnappers, in Paris railway stations.

After the initial developments, the police and the family remained silent on the case.

Bill to raise car insurance

BOSTON [AP] — The Massachusetts merit rating law will soon be put to the test — when the bills hit home and an estimated 250,000 motorists are assessed $10 million or more in automobile insurance surcharges.

An immediate furor is anticipated in insurance circles. Twenty years ago, a somewhat similar demerit statute was repealed at the first angry outbursts.

At that time, only 18,000 motorists faced penalties, according to an insurance official.

The current law became operational in November, 1976. James Corum, acting director of the Merit Rating Board reported that 175,332 accident surcharge notices have been issued for the initial 14-month year. The actual number who will pay has been reduced several thousand by appeals or other types of reversals.

In addition, there have been 161,500 surcharges stemming from court convictions for various moving offenses. Corum said he does not yet know how much overlapping there is in the two totals. One source guessed that 20 per cent could be liable for double or triple surcharges.

Surcharged motorists will pay cash penalties to the system for one year and face negative penalties the next two, when they will be excluded from sharing the surcharge kitty. The traffic violation surcharges range from $25 to $200 and a motorist blamed for an accident will be assessed $50.

The payments will be collected by the insurance companies and will be redistributed next year to other motorists.

Lemuel H. Devers, head of the Mass. Auto Rating Bureau, readily acknowledged that startup administrative costs will offset some of the surcharge impact. This expense will be included in general rates.

He expects the picture to change in later years, probably leveling off after the third year when, because of prior surcharges, the good drivers' pool will shrink a little and credits could climb.

However, the main benefit, according to Devers, is a reduction in auto accidents that he attributes to the existence of the merit rating law.

He said Insurance Commissioner James M. Stone based part of the reduction in new auto rates on a projected drop in claims.

Under the old demerit law, accident claims dropped 19 per cent, Devers said. After repeal the count was right back up to normal, he said.

Evangelist prays to resurrect mom

REED SPRINGS, Mo. [UPI] — Tent evangelist Daniel Aaron Rogers prayed yesterday for the Easter miracle he failed to produce two weeks ago — that of raising his frozen mother from the dead.

Rogers, who was joined in the private prayer by his wife Elizabeth, said he expected the resurrection to occur sometime before Wednesday, the day Missouri health officials have ordered him to proceed with his mother's burial.

Gladys Rogers died Feb. 2 of the flu in Harrison, Ark. She was moved to a nearby Missouri mortuary after a monthlong battle with courts and health officials in Arkansas who wanted the body out of the freezer and into a grave.

Rogers, who has made the 45-mile drive to the mortuary every few days to pray over the white enamel freezer, said he wanted to raise his mother from the dead because it would "encourage a lot of people to believe in Christ."

And he said he expected to be successful this time.

"It's just a matter of faith," the non-denominational minister said. "Jesus said all things are possible for him that believeth. We're asking other people to pray. We feel the Lord will do it for their prayers, not just for mine."

About 1,000 persons waited outside the small chapel two weeks ago while Rogers, accompanied by two evangelists, prayed for two hours. A choir of 50 persons sang hymns.

"It was announced in the newspapers it was a private service last time and they (the crowd) came anyway," he said. "We've tried to avoid any notoriety or publicity from the beginning. We didn't plan it. We never intended it to be any other way but private."

Yesterday Rogers turned over his duties at his Deer, Ark., church to an assistant, then drove to the Reed Springs mortuary. He said his prayer vigil would continue through Wednesday "if necessary."

Rogers had earlier planned to recruit Indonesian evangelist S.A. Makal to aid him in his final resurrection prayers, but the plans fell through when the minister was unable to obtain the $4,300 in expense money Makal had requested for himself and an interpreter.

SARASOTA, FLA (UPI) — The body of high wire walker Karl Wallenda lies in state here. Wallenda, whose funeral was yesterday, was killed last week while performing in Puerto Rico.

Wallenda son creates new controversy

CONCORD, Calif. [UPI] — Steve Wallenda, 28, the "black sheep" of the Great Wallenda family, stirred a simmering family feud yesterday and claimed to be the only Wallenda left on the high wire after completing a shaky weekend stroll across a quarter mile of tramway cable.

"Will you carry on the Wallenda tradition?" he was asked after his performance Saturday.

"Yes, today and for the next 50 years," Steve said.

But his fathej ,Gunther Wallenda, disputed the claim from his home in Sarasota, Fla., saying, "He seems to have been a black sheep." Steve has never worked with the clan, nor has he been trained by them, his father said.

A crowd of about 1,000 watched Wallenda Saturday as he negotiated the 86-foot-high Oakland Zoo tram cable, the last 100 feet blindfolded. He slipped once and suffered a bruising fall straddle the cable, but regained his composure to complete the walk. He laid claim to two world records, one for the longest highwire act over an amusement park, the other for the blindfold stunt.

Exhausted but triumphant after the feat, Wallenda rested at his east San Francisco Bay suburban home yesterday and commented on the brewing family feud and the legacy his great uncle, the late, great 73-year-old Karl Wallenda left him.

Karl, patriarch of the family, died Wednesday in a fall from a 150-foot cable stretched between two hotels in Puerto Rico.

South bloc diminishes in Senate

WASHINGTON [AP] — A major post of congressional power soon is expected to pass from a Mississippi senator to one from Massachusetts, recording another decline in the once-formidable southern strength in Congress.

Sen. James O. Eastland's announcement that he is retiring after 37 years in the Senate means the chairmanship of the Judiciary Committee probably will go to Sen. Edward M. Kennedy. He has the seniority and, although there will be a secret vote by the committee, is expected to get the post.

Just five years ago, seven of the 11 major committees in the Senate and six of 12 in the House were headed by Southerners.

There are now five southern chairmen of the key Senate committees and two, Eastland and Alabamian John J. Sparkman of the Foreign Relations Committee, are retiring in January.

In the House, only one Southerner, Appropriations Chairman George H. Mahon of Texas, heads a major committee. And Mahon also is retiring. Under the old, unwritten seniority rule, his successor would be Jamie Whitten of Mississippi. But the rules have been overhauled and Whitten is expected to be strongly opposed.

Is it sick to love a pen?

Is it crazy to love marker pens that give you the smoothest, thinnest line in town... and feel so right in your hand? Is it mad to worship pens with clever little metal "collars" to keep their plastic points from getting squishy?

Not if the pen is a Pilot marker pen.

Our Razor Point, at only 69¢, gives the kind of extra-fine delicate line you'll flip over. And for those times you want a little less line, have a fling with our fine point 59¢ Fineliner. It has the will and fortitude to actually write through carbons.

SGA election irregularities

To the Editor:

A series of events during the recent election week has served to illustrate a basic contradiction between the Student Senate's purported role as servants of the student population and the reality of the situation.

Simultaneous with the voting on the S.G.A. presidential candidates was the equally important voting on senatorial candidates for those dorms with vacant positions within the senate. Not only was this concurrent election badly publicized [as evidenced by those surprised voters confronted by ballots concerning their respective senatorial candidates], but the administration of these elections was handled in a very careless and irresponsible manner.

On the afternoon of Thursday, March 16, a number of Chadbourne residents informed me that they had been unable to obtain Chadbourne senatorial ballots when they attempted to vote at Franklin D.C. for the last two days. When they inquired as to how they would be able to cast their ballots, the Student Senate representatives replied that they "didn't know anything about it", and made no attempt to investigate or clarify the situation. I went to Franklin and was given the same response. I then went to the Student Senate office where I was assured by an anonymous woman that she had delivered the ballots herself that morning and that they were probably mixed in with the other ballots, but she would check anyway, to make sure they were at the polls when they reopened at four. Naievly satisfied by this answer I left, only to find the identical situation of no ballots [and an identical response from the people attending the polls] that had greeted me that afternoon. Confused, I spoke to the Chadbourne H.R., Bill Harris, who immediately called the Student Senate office for an explanation.

He was informed that they had been meaning to send the ballots to Franklin all day, but couldn't get a van to take them over. They would make another effort, however. The ballots did finally get to Franklin, with one hour left in the two day election, and no hope of Chadbourne residents voicing their decisions.

Upon reviewing these events, I am continually astonished by the degree of dishonesty that I encountered in every instance. The fact that student representatives would mislead us in an attempt to placate us, and that the needs and rights of the student body are met with such indifference gives us reason to pause and reconsider the real motives of these individuals. There is no excuse for the treatment the residents of Chadbourne received, and such treatment would surely not result from an organization concerned with the rights and interests of the student body it was designed to protect.

Campaign literature is litter

To the Editor:

Receiving more interest in the current S.G.A. presidential campaign than the candidates themselves [and, surveying this year's candidates, deservedly so] has been the various tactics employed by the numerous candidates in the course of their campaigns.

We have been subjected to an infinity of posters stuck on every available surface within a ten mile radius of campus, and handbills stuffed into our pockets between every class. Admittedly, it is every candidate's right [and responsibility] to make his position known to as many prospective constituents as possible, to insure a knowledgeable choice on their parts at the polls.

However, considering that in most cases the paper used has far more value than the information printed thereon, one must suppose that those candidates who refuse to take the election and their prospective offices seriously are distributing them for the sheer joy of encountering their own names every time they turn around. The campaign may be a joke, but defacing the entire campus is not.

What the candidates do not seem to consider is that in saturating their surroundings with their dubious treatises, the only thing that they are insuring is that the campus grounds will be cluttered with their aftermath long beyond their own graduations.

As if to punctuate this sad situation, on March fifteenth the team of Edelstein and Goverman hired a plane to fly over the campus and dump a sizeable quantity of their promotional material on the heads of their fellow students. Anyone on campus at this time was witness to this snowstorm of leaflets descending, a minute portion of which were received by the voters, and the remainder of which swim in the campus pond or decorate large portions of the grounds.

It is obvious that Edelstein and Goverman had no intention of the leaflets actually reaching the voters, and that this stunt was performed entirely for its sensationalistic and publicity gaining value. Unfortunately [although this event caused the greatest eyesore] in terms of sheer irresponsibility, other candidates are equally guilty of equally sensationalistic activity, making a mockery of the entire S.G.A., student body, and ultimately themselves.

Rape film letter objectionable

To the Editor:

" ... this workshop expresses some of the myths about rape which are absorbed in the male socialization process and which tend to be perpetuated by the media ... "

This from Tuesday's Collegian. The writer was publicizing a film on rape to be shown by members of the Southwest Men's Center.

When women rattle the sabre of righteousness at men, when they accuse us of exploiting and oppressing them, they are at least pointing their fingers at concrete, flesh and blood adversaries.

But this kind of language, so serene, so polished, so well-informed, it dismisses us utterly. It deprives us even of the status of rogues and scoundrels. In a single rhetorical flourish, we are transported to the realm of abstract ciphers, bodiless bundles of conditioned responses, sans soul, sans will, sans everything.

Now look: if we have been badly brought up, have the courage to say so. Say so openly and honestly. Don't give us this smog and tawdry phraseology of the enlightened.

Your rapists, who are they?

The working man out of a job who can't face his wife and kids; the young punk who feels, in some vague way, that society is ripping him off; the bright young man on the make; the well paid professional on holiday from respectability; the guy on leave; the model husband; the entrepreneurs of every kind; the dull, the cynical, the trivial, the bored, the quietly desperate; the ones who are angry and bitter; the cowed, the self-indulgent, the prematurely stifled; the cheated and humiliated; the pathetic assholes who hang out by the hundreds: a mass movement of macho on the run, spasming out to a lewd and catchy disco beat.

It's enough to make you puke.

The male sex has reached the nadir, Frank. We have had it. Are you shocked that one in a hundred can't contain the hatred that one in ten feel for women? For women, nothing. For themselves.

And you're gonna show 'em a film? By men "who have been trained?"

This won't do. What we want is an end to rape. What we want is a generation of men who can stand up straight and shuck off this heritage of shame and guilt, men with pride and self-respect.

Because people with pride and self-respect do not rape.

So enough of this phony circumlocution. Enough of this pseudo-liberated flim flam.

Talk to us. Don't patronize us.

Matthew Groves

Apathy impaired by election

To the Editor:

This complaint is directed to the candidates who ran for SGA president. As much as it is your right to be active in student government, it is my right to be apathetic. Your cute solicitations slid beneath my door are not appreciated.

You have infringed on my right to be apathetic in so much as I have to bend over and pick up your garbage, and throw it away. Rest assured your campaigns are well publicized. I can't even brush my teeth without a poster in front of my face. [Never mind accomplish another act in the same vicinity without being visually harassed.] Please stop killing trees and large bushes for the purpose of wasting paper. The paper that you waste could be used for something important — such as better toilet paper.

I entrust the formulation of a solution to this problem to you — the concerned up and coming [or going] SGA presidents. Let the apathetic rest in peace, and find a solution to this problem — quickly.

Julie Blasi

Payroll bank is racist

To the Editor:

It has come to our attention that payrolls on all campuses of the University of Massachusetts are handled by the Worcester County National Bank, a bank which handles sales of the Krugerrand.

The Krugerrand is a one ounce gold coin minted in S. Africa by the racist and fascistic regime. It is sold around the world to strengthen that regime economically. South Africa is the world's main producer of gold and 21% of its gold sales are in the form of the Krugerrand. The sale of the Krugerrand in countries like the U.S. provides the South African regime with large amounts of foreign currency which allows it to purchase among other things, the military equipment it uses to slaughter blacks and maintain its power. The sale of the Krugerrand by U.S. banks is one more tie of the big bankers to South Africa and one more proof that U.S. imperialism will defend its racist paradise by force of arms.

Therefore, the UMass, Amherst Committee Against Racism, along with CAR chapters on the other UMass campuses, is raising the demand that UMass officials should withdraw their support of this racist sale and should threaten a big block of the profits of this bank by ceasing all business currently carried out with them until they publicly announce that they have stopped selling the Krugerrand. We are organizing a petition campaign around this demand. Copies are available from members of CAR.

Wood's non-power plant

To the Editor:

This is the time of year when universities consider means of recognizing the services of prominent persons on campus and off. I would therefore like to suggest to the University of Massachusetts community an appropriate way of honoring the conspicuous services of former President Robert C. Wood.

We should alter the name of the Tillson Farm Steam Plant to the Robert C. Wood Non-Power Plant. There are three very good reasons for this change. The first is the fact that the construction of this plant was one of the major projects of his administration. The second is that the plant is a typical monument to his planning and accomplishment. The third is the fact that, like President Wood himself, the plant does not perform any useful work and is extremely expensive.

Honor should be given where honor is due. Let us remember President Wood in this very fitting manner.

Socialism—Is 'the media the message?'

By DAVE GRAM

Leftists suffered a major setback in France last week, but it is clear they will be heard from again. And Italy is moving closer and closer to the "historic compromise, which would bring Communists into a governmental partnership with the long-ruling Christian Democrats.

In the midst of all this, one of the major institutions of the American mass media, Time Magazine, has attempted to analyze the present state of the socialist movement and to examine its implications on the spectrum of current world events (TIME Cover Story, March 13, 1978).

...as the Time article states, "socialists of one form or another control 55 percent of the world's sovereign states, 39 percent of its territory, and 42 percent of its population."

This is a necessary and noble undertaking.

It is necessary because, as the Time article states, "...socialists of one form or another rule 53 of the world's sovereign states, 39 per cent of its territory and 42 per cent of its population." For too long, the American mass media has been largely oblivious to what nearly half (42 per cent) of the world's population is doing, except in as much as it poses a threat to the "American way of life".

Time's attempt to critique socialism is made noble by the difficulties inherant in such an attempt. The most obvious difficulty is in trying to get a handle on an issue so complex and myriad in its manifestations and presenting it in an encapsulated and easily understood form.

This is a difficulty which Time is in the businss of overcoming, and in this case it does so with style and grace.

The most profound difficulty, however, is one that is not so easily overcome. In attempting to address the uniquely troublesome issue of socialism, media people must first answer some questions involving journalistic ethics and, more specifically, objectivity.

The first question that comes to mind is: Can the flagship publication of a prosperous corporate enterprise, such as Time—Life, Inc., impartially scrutinize a political ideology and economic system that would seek to dismantle the structure of that enterprise?

In plain language, Time is Big Business. Socialism is the exact antithesis and poses the most pervasive world-wide threat to Big Business. As to whether the TIME article paints an unbiased picture of the socialist movement, the answer, obviously, is no.

Time's negative bias is apparently right from the headline. "Socialism: Trials and Errors" fails to acknowledge what many proponents of socialism would term successes. By the time we are finished reading the sub-headline "An ideology that promises more than it delivers", the Time presentation has attempted to answer most of our questions about socialism even before it asks them. According to the Time article, "Italy faces the threat of the 'historic compromise'." Does Italian Communist party leader Enrico Berlinguer perceive it as such a threat?

The Time article is well researched. It presents enough facts, figures and quotations so that the objective-minded reader can arrive at his or her own conclusions. But for the reader who is less defensive about his or her objectivity, the Time presentation is quick to arrive at some conclusions of its own.

This brings us back to the questions of journalistic ethics. How closely should a national newsmagazine adhere to the principle of objectivity? More importantly, how closely can a national newsmagazine such as Time adhere to the principle of objectivity when attempting to cover an issue such as socialism?

Time, after all, is riding the crest of the wave in the American mainstream. It is understandable that a capitalist enterprise such as Time would cast socialism in a negative light. If the American mass media is merely a reflection of prevalent thoughts and attitudes, then perhaps the Time article is more indicative of recent developments within the American perception of socialism than within the socialist movement itself.

How has our perception of socialism developed since the McCarthy Era? Is socialism still subversive and "un-American"? If it is, Time is still All-American. Perhaps Time is still as All-American as apple pie (Can you imagine members of the bakers' union sitting on the board of directors at Table Talk?) and baseball (Can you imagine Reggie Jackson and Fred Lynn receiving the same annual salary as the average school teacher?).

If Time is really all that All-American, and if socialism is reaaly as evil as Joe McCarthy made it out to be, then perhaps what Marshall McLuhan was saying back in the early sixties still holds true — "The media is the message."

Senate strikes again

The Student Senate at the University of Massachusetts had done it once again! Who says lightning never strikes the same place twice?

The S.G.A. (Senators Gone Astray...from constituents) has once again taken it upon themselves to vote in their own selfish interest rather than represent their constituents: "You won't even get your seat warm on Capitol Hill if you vote against your constituents' wishes." In fact, two local state politicians are voting against their own personal beliefs on the bottle bill because their constituents favor it.

The first time lightning struck UMass was back on September 21, 1977 when the SGA allocated $2,738 of S.A.T.F. funds to the Revolutionary Student Brigade to travel to Ohio in not one, but two busses with the expressed purposes of watching, yes watching, construction that had already begun for a gym near the sight of the May 4, 1970 Kent State slayings. Did a demonstration prevent the exeuction of the Rosenbergs, or Sacco and Vanzetti? Did it stop World War I, II, the Korean War, or Vietnam? Did the RSB protest stop construction of the gym? Answer to all questions is an emphatic — NO!

You ask, "What has the SGA botched this time? Well, if you haven't been ice skating in Bar Harbor, Maine — these young Silas Marners voted overwhelmingly in favor of holding a Black American Music Festival as a Spring Concert without consulting their large white constituency as to what type of show they might like to see.

Now before I'm called "racist", a catch-all phrase applied indiscriminately to any white who disagrees with a black at UMass, I want to say the BAMF is an excellent idea with unlimited potential; I wouldn't mind paying a few dollars to see a BAMF concert that would open myself to Black culture and at the same time contribute to the Duke Ellington Foundation. The reason student senators caught flack a couple of weeks ago from their constituents wasn't due solely to the money issue, as reported in the Nummo News, but it was also because of the tentative plan to schedule the BAMF as the Spring Concert. The BAMF is a splendid idea, but not for a Spring concert that's suppose to entertain the whole University. The BAMF is simply not diverse enough to attract a large crowd from a University that is nearly 90½ White.

If the BAMF goes off as planned this May, it will hopefully set a precedent. When I say hopefully set a precedent — I mean in all fairness to all ethnic groups and Third World groups (Blacks aren't the only members) there will be in the upcoming years a Japanese-American Music Festival, an Italian American Festival, an Irish-American Music Festival, a Latin-American Music Festival, a French-American Music Festival, a Polish-American Music Festival, and hopefully, a Luxemburg-American Music Festival. I have nothing against Black Music — I have many favorite Black musicians — I just feel that the purpose of a Spring Concert is to entertain the whole University, not just a select few. The way you entertain a mass of people of different backgrounds is through diversity, not specificity.

I feel let down and cheated by the SGA who let their own feelings dictate their votes rather than their constitutents views. As a senior, I feel particularly saddened because the Spring Concert, which was originally set-up to entertain the whole University, has been twisted and contorted by the SGA into a dangerous precedent.

When a city decides it would like to have a civic center, it doesn't steamroll legislation over the voters and force them to pay higher property taxes — the legislators present a referendum to the voters, who have a voice in matters that concern the whole community. Why at UMass — whenever a vote seems to affect the whole UMass community — the SGA votes on the measure without ever considering the possibilities of a campus-wide referendum?

Somehow, these supposedly progressive young senators are more backward than the politicians out in the "dog eat dog" political arena of our corrupt cities. This does not offer us a bright outlook for the future.

Your Birthday

MONDAY, MARCH 27

Born today, you are inclined to keep to yourself, even when it would be to your advantage to socialize. The give and take of relationships is apt to worry more than inspire you. You are emotionally ill-prepared to fend for yourself; yet you are unsuited to those hail-fellow-well-met relationships that are part of the daily life of most people.

You have an instinct for protecting your interests. You know when to be aggressive about investments and when to be guarded. You are often mentioned as one who can parlay a small investment into a huge return. Your timidity disappears when facts rather than human contacts fill your time.

You have a good sense for the overview of a project, though you may not be able to discuss details knowledgeably. Your intuition about what the public will buy makes you a valuable asset to any business.

Also born on this date: David Janssen, actor; Annemarie Moser Proell, champion Alpine skier; Louis XVIII of France.

To see what is in store for you tomorrow, find your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

TUESDAY, MARCH 28

ARIES(March 21-April 19) — Dealings with family may cause a rift between generations. Seek cooperation.

TAURUS(April 20-May 20) — Avoid anything that would necessitate coming up with a lot of cash.

GEMINI(May 21-June 20) — Consult friends, not relatives, about investments. Remain cool.

CANCER(June 21-July 22) — Today you can impress those superior to you with your intelligence. Try!

LEO(July 23-Aug.22) — A confrontation with partners, business or marital, puts you one up on the competition.

VIRGO(Aug.23-Sept.22) — This is a good day for questioning one in authority. You may wish a recap later.

LIBRA(Sept.23-Oct.22) — Take care that furthering a new friendship doesn't make you miss an appointment.

SCORPIO(Oct.23-Nov.21) — Try to reduce tension, whether at home or at work. Relax!

SAGITTARIUS(Nov.22-Dec.21) — Appearance, choice of friends, and the ability to play games well are important today.

CAPRICORN(Dec.22-Jan.19) — Don't overlook any part of present problems. Solutions are in least expected places.

AQUARIUS(Jan.20-Feb.18) — Pay attention to one who can tell you when to invest hard-earned gains. Ask the right questions.

PISCES(Feb.19-March 20) — Don't deliver a message meant for another to one you hold dear, or trouble arises.

Devils, 'Cats in NCAA finale

ST. LOUIS [UPI] — It may take Duke University a while to realize just how wild a season its been.

Kentucky has known all along.

The winners of Saturday's NCAA semifinals will be going at each other head-on in tonight's championship game. But the rise to the summit for each club has come from different directions.

For the Blue Devils, it has been a stunning climb to the top and they're having too good a time to know any better.

"I just told the players we're coming out here to see the Cardinals play," Duke coach Bill Foster said yesterday.

It is a young team Foster will be taking into the finals and he's riding a strong wave of exuberance. His starting five consists of two freshmen, two sophomores and a junior. And right now, he likes what the fountain of youth has to offer.

"I love the enthusiasm part of it and hope it carries over into tonight," he said. "It's been such a big part of the success this year."

Kentucky, on the other hand, is going at it like staid southern gentlemen. The top-ranked Wildcats have been down the road before.

"It's been a season without celebration," said coach Joe Hall, whose team goes into the title game with a 29-2 record. "It started right on Oct. 15. So much has been expected of us, it's been a strained season. There's only one thing we could accomplish and this group is on the threshold of that accomplishment. We have a lot of stored-up celebrating to do."

Duke, which has never won an NCAA title, captured the Atlantic Coast Conference's post-season tournament this year before going on to defeat Rhode Island, Penn and Villanova to take the East Regional. On Saturday, Duke stopped Notre Dame 90-86 behind Mike Gminski's 29 points. Considering the Blue Devils finished at a mediocre 14-13 last year and rose to 27-6 this year, it is one of the finest pieces of southern reconstruction to come along in some time.

"What we tried to do was not look back," said Foster of the rebuilding program which began with his arrival in 1974. "The staff and I looked ahead and thank the Good Lord we had six or seven players like this come along."

Foster has assembled a quick-moving team that is also capable of holding its own on the boards.

Gminski, just 18 years old, is already blossoming into one of the nation's finest centers. Floor leader Jim Spanarkel gives the ninth-ranked Blue Devils a steady game and a good outside shot while John Harrell ar Bob Bender — who played on Indiana's 1976 championship team before transferring — do solid jobs alternating in the other backcourt slot.

Kenny Dennard and Eugene Banks are the club's two starting freshmen. And it is Banks, a 6-foot-7 forward from Philadelphia, who is most responsible for Duke's sudden return to national prominence.

The Kentucky-Duke matchup figures to be similar to the two semifinal games: speed versus muscle.

"They have a lot of meat and potatoes players," said Gminski of Kentucky. "We'll be ready but I'm sure they will be too."

I'm hopeful he can come and since he's an experienced, good college pitcher."

Mark Yacysnyn, a transfer student, had a couple of good outings and may help out in relief, Bergquist said. In addition, Brown and Jim Lewis, other newcomers to the eight-man staff, threw well in spots.

"Overall, though, our pitching was not good," Bergquist concluded. "We weren't ready, and we didn't pitch well."

In the offensive department, Mike McEvilly impressed the coach with his hitting and was the only Minuteman named to the all-tournament team. McEvilly batted .414 and also drew 10 walks. He went four-for-five against Miami in the team's final game, and Bergquist said all of his hits were solid line drives.

"It was probably the best hitting performance I've ever seen from a UMass player," Bergquist said, and it came against a staff which Bergquist termed one of the best in the country.

George Kelley was the only other Minuteman above .300 for the trip as he went six for 20.

Ed Skribiski, UMass's leading hitter last season with a .357 average, managed to bat only .156 on the trip. Welenc, filling in as designated hitter, also hit well, according to Bergquist. Welenc will probably see action there this season.

On the whole, power was non-existent as the team hit no home runs and only one triple.

Catching is also still unsettled, since Charlie Ciccone and Mark Walsh both came down with sore arms and Dave Oleksak was unable to play much as he suffered a chin cut which will sideline him for a couple of days. As a result, outfielder Neil Lojek was pressed into service behind the plate.

Although Southern Illinois and Miami were each ranked among the top 10 last season and Miami has already played 28 games, Bergquist refused to reach for alibis.

"There's an awful lot of work to be done," he said. "We need a bit more defense and a settled lineup. I still plan on doing some experimenting with the lineup.

"Everyone got a chance to play," he added. "All the pitchers except Lewis got three appearances and we were able to play in a big-league atmosphere."

The Minutemen open their northern season this weekend in the Corsair Tournament at Southeastern Massachusetts University. Vermont, Siena, and SMU will provide the opposition in the two day affair.

Philadelphia 76ers' Steve Mix (50) attempts to block Portland's Lionel Hollins from scoring in yesterday's 116-100 victory for the Sixers.

Portland falls to 76ers

PHILADELPHIA [UPI] — Julius Erving and Lloyd Free sparked a 12-point tear early in the fourth quarter yesterday to propel the Philadelphia 76ers to a 116-100 victory over the injury-riddled Portland Trail Blazers.

The game evened the season's series between last year's playoff finalists at two victories each.

Erving, who had 24 points, and Free, who had 19, each tallied four points in the spree which carried the Sixers from an 82-80 lead to a 94-80 advantage.

From there the Sixers went to a 98-82 lead to clinch their 23rd consecutive home victory. They are now 32-1 at home under first-year coach Billy Cunningham.

The defending champion Trail Blazers played without starters Bill Walton, Maurice Lucas and Bob Gross, and reserves Larry Steele and Lloyd Neal.

The Sixers were without high-scorer Doug Collins, who is nursing an injury to his left hand.

George McGinnis led the Sixers with 26 points while reserve center Tom Owens led Portland, also with 26 points.

Money doesn't talk, so Swetman walks

By JIM GLEASON
Collegian Staff

> God, I should say > has given men the two arts, > music and gymnastics
> —Plato

UMass men's gymnastics coach Dick Swetman thought this quote would be a good lead to a story explaining why he is leaving his head coaching position at the end of this semester.

Dick Swetman ponders his future, which doesn't have UMass on its horizons. (Staff photo by Steve Nugent)

The fact is, only a few people think along the same lines as the Greek philosopher. Even Swetman knows the reality of the situation of gymnastics, especially at UMass.

Swetman will be leaving this spring because he is being paid only a part-time salary and he won't be hired into a full-time position by the athletic department. But he isn't bitter about the decision that is causing him to leave.

"I have no complaints," said Swetman. "I knew what the situation was when I came here two years ago."

But when he arrived here two years ago, Swetman was hoping for a change in the situation. He was hoping that he could supplement his part-time salary with a teaching salary from the physical education department.

The department offered him a chance to teach two gymnastic classes and coach for a total of $6,000, but he turned it down.

"Coaching gymnastics is a full-time job, and if I was going to have to spend more time with teaching, I would have to get paid more," he said.

He tried for two years to work on a part-time salary while working construction during the summer, but he said it was a hassle trying to make ends meet.

"I didn't mind it while I was here (UMass), because the money was coming in, but during the summer, there was nothing," he said. "The part I really disliked was relocating to work at my summer job."

Swetman told Frank McInerney, Head of the athletic department, of his financial situation in the beginning of this season, but McInerney said there were no funds to hire him in a full-time position.

So Swetman immediately told him and the team that he was leaving, so there would be no deceit and he started applying for other jobs.

Presently, he said, there is a good possibility he will take a head coach-teaching position in a college either in Wisconsin or California.

For the remainder of his time here, Swetman will be working in the gym with his gymnasts, working on new tricks and routines for next year. He is also on the committee which is responsible for finding his successor.

When he leaves, so will the plans and hopes for the "gym extravaganza," which was a show Swetman devised to raise money for scholarships.

"The shows have been a success in the past and they would have been bigger if I was staying. I could have really dug into it," he said.

He says that he enjoyed his two years here and has enjoyed working with the team. Perhaps more importantly, it has given him the experience of coaching gymnastics, something he didn't have when he arrived here.

"Coaching gymnastics at UMass is a great job if you want the experience, but at this time, the money just isn't here." Swetman said that is one of the first things he tells his prospective successors.

Well, at least UMass baseball team was able to get away from the snow.

Other than that, the Minutemen's season opening trip to Florida was not as pleasant as it could have been. UMass was able to win just two of 10 games in its spring trip.

"We accomplished the purpose of the trip, which was to play some baseball and get ready for the season," UMass coach Dick Bergquist said. "We might have bit off more than we could chew with the competition, but that's always easy to say when you look back on the games."

The Minutemen began their spring trip on an encouraging note by beating Wesleyan, 12-7, behind an 18-hit attack, but from there things went downhill. The only other game UMass was to win came on a combined one-hitter by Doug Welenc and Mark Brown as the Minutemen shut out Bowling Green, 3-0.

After compiling a 2-2 record in its first four games, UMass went 0-6 in Miami's four-team tournament. The host school took the tourney title with a 6-0 record mark, while Southern Illinois and Westchester tied for second with 3-3 slates.

Particularly discouraging to Bergquist were 8-0 and 10-2 losses to Southern Illinois and a 19-4 crushing by Miami in the team's final game.

In general, Bergquist said he was disappointed with the performance of his pitching staff.

"Doug Welenc was probably our most consistent pitcher," Bergquist said. "His first two starts were good, although Miami hit a grand slam homer off him Saturday night."

Welenc's most impressive performance, and probably the team's "best all-around game," according to Bergquist, came in the 3-0 win over Bowling Green. Welenc pitched six innings of no-hit ball, while freshman Mark Brown came on to allow only hit, a single with two outs in the ninth inning.

"The defense and the pitching in that game were good," Bergquist added.

But Tom Nigro, who has been the ace of the Minutemen's staff for the past two seasons, did not pitch well in his three appearances.

"He had a poor southern trip," Bergquist said. "It wasn't like him. His control was off.

Ford said the bout was confirmed by Ali's lawyer, Ted Tannebaum of Chicago, last night.

Professional sports versus the three-martini lunch

Curt P. Kohlberg

There is a tax proposal initiated by Mr. Ultra-Brite himself, Jimmy Carter, that if enacted would threaten the incomes of professional sports teams (and top notch college operations). The change in the tax laws would no longer allow tickets used for business purposes to be deducted as a business expense by the buyer.

If the proposal concerning sports tickets were made on its own, it would not be hard to prove that it would be counter-productive. The economic loss that the communities surrounding major stadiums would face would more than offset the cutback on tax-deductable business expenses. But it isn't. It is only a small part of President Carters' battle against "expense account spending," symbolized by the infamous three-martini lunch. To an ordinary, uninformed person, it certainly makes a direct appeal in the essence of common sense.

It must anger many fans that "big wheels" are seemingly freeloading through legal loopholes, and that if corporations weren't allowed to purchase numerous season tickets, dedicated fans like yourself would somehow get a better break. Right and Wrong. Professional sports are already the most heavily taxpayer-subsidized business in the country because most teams play in municipal stadiums, and have enjoyed certain antitrust exemptions, such as the right to pool their broadcasting (television, not radio) rights for significant profit. Another argument directed against business deductions reasons that many feel that tax-deductable expenses enable both franchises and established clubs to continuously raise ticket prices.

"It is simply easier for monopoly sports owners to raise ticket prices when they know that the full cost of these increases will not be borne by a significant number of their customers — that is the expense account fans," said Peter Gruenstein, a spokesman for the Ralph Nader-based Fight to Advance the Nations' Sports (FANS).

Whatever the merits of tax reform in general, the specific issue of sports tickets should be examined. There is an important difference between the elements of Carter's "package plan," and each element (sports tickets, other entertainment tickets, and food and liquor expenses) should be treated separately, not universally.

Current law permits tax deductions for the cost of sports tickets and other entertainment expenses incurred in the conduct of business. The group of jokers that somehow calls themselves an administration wants to eliminate the deductions for sports tickets and those tickets to symphonies, operas, theater and other entertainment. Carter does not realize that there is a difference between sports and other tickets.

In the theatrical world, the same show, essentially, is presented many times. If the best Broadway musical is sold out on Saturday night, you can probably see it the next night. Thus, continued demand simply lengthens the run of the show, which makes the number of available seats elastic in respect to public demand.

But in the world of sports, you can witness a live event only once. Therefore, since you only go around once in life, you have to grab for all the gusto that you can get your hands on. If you are a true sports enthusiast, you want to grab that gusto and see that particular event, Schlitz or no Schlitz. The seating capacity is fixed, the event never to be repeated. So if a client arrives at Logan International and expresses a "strong" desire to see Luis Tiant face the Yankees in an important game late in September, the smart businessman will have the situation well under control. He has the solution — the season ticket. Since season tickets carry playoff-ticket privileges and other considerations they are proven to be worth the expense, especially if they are tax-deductible.

Major league teams depend heavily on season ticket sales. They are the cornerstone of marketing and organizational procedures for ballclubs. What this means is that teams know the minimum number of seats that will be sold for the season. In addition, dozens of clubs are bought and sold based on season ticket information. To make a drastic decision and change corporate season ticket expenses from tax-deductible to non-deductible expenses overnight would place perspective buyers and their plans in turmoil.

According to Bowie Kuhn, (who spoke before the House Ways and Means Committee on the behalf of the four major sports on March 17) baseball, for example, estimates that over 12 million tickets were sold directly to business. These purchases accounted for one-third of the clubs' ticket sales. Were Carter's plan in effect then, an estimated $67 million in tickets and concessions would have been jeopardized. Kuhn also stated that clubs would be "forced in the main" to recoup lost revenues by price increases of at least fifty per cent.

In addition, the National Hockey League, whose teams don't have television revenue to count upon, rely on the fan in the park for roughly three-quarters of each team's gross income. Season tickets are of vital importance to all sports, especially hockey. Without the corporate boxes (seats, that is) that make up a third of all season tickets, grave financial consequences could result. I just hope Congress is aware of all the facts before it makes any important decisions. By the way, I give Carter's unrefined proposal a one in eight chance of succeeding the present tax law. Reasoning: too much political pressure generated by sports magnates, stadiums, and concessionaires.

Thousands Slam S. Africa At Davis Cup

By JERRY HORNSBY

"Victory is the people's!"

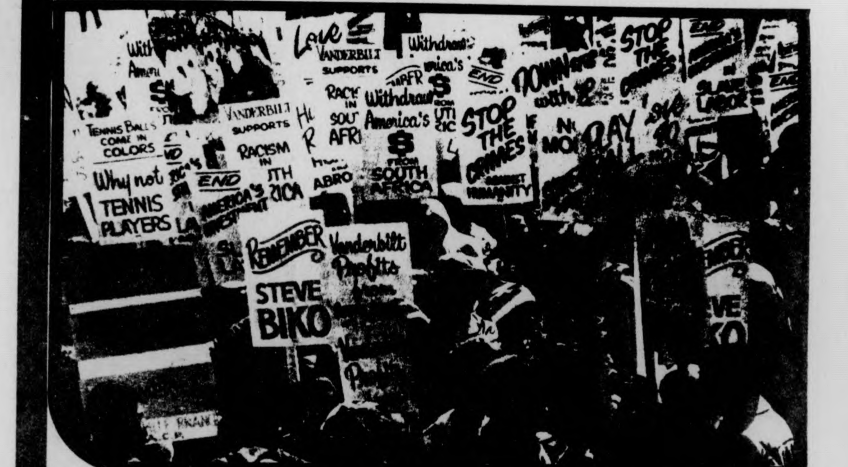
This was the ringing cry the night of March 19 as antiapartheid forces celebrated the economic devastation of the Davis Cup tennis matches at Vanderbilt University (VU) last weekend.

The three days of spirited protest against South African participation in the matches also focused national and international attention on Pretoria's brutal and oppressive apartheid system — perhaps mores than any U.S. action in recent years.

At the height of the demonstration the afternoon of March 18, an estimated 4000-5000 people were massed in protest at Vanderbilt or at nearby Centennial Park.

While demonstrators were not successful in halting the matches or Vanderbilt's hosting of the event, they played a key role in destroying them economically. Paid attendance at the March 17-19 competition at VU's Memorial Gymnasium totalled only 4460. University officials said previously they needed to draw 4000 each day just to break even. As a result, the International Lawn Tennis Federation (ILTF) was forced to take over Vanderbilt's $50,000 commitment to the matches.

Some ticket holders turned back without trying to cross the picketline of chanting, hand-clapping, sign-carrying protesters near the gymnasium's three entrances.



Those who did cross were subjected to a barrage of verbal abuse and many were jostled. Police at times formed a wedge to get tennis fans through the shouting crowds.

PROTESTERS PENETRATE SECURITY

Only one arrest was made when a man was charged with throwing a rock against the gymnasium March 18. An angry crowd surged around the police as the man was placed in a patrol car.

Five demonstrators penetrated police security. Four members of the Revolutionary Student Brigade entered the arena and managed to tape up a banner reading "South Africa out of the Davis Cup, victory will be ours" in full view of the slim audience. They were then ejected by police.

Another protester entered the gym and managed to et on court. He held up an anti-apartheid poster denouncing the spectators as "Racists with blood on your hands" before also being ejected. No arrests were made in either incident.

The demonstration got underway March 17 when protesters from predominantly Black Tennessee State University marched to the Vanderbilt campus. Enroute they were joined by students from the city's two other mostly Black campuses, Fisk University and Meharry Medical College. By the time the march reached VU, there were 2000 chanting demonstrators. Fisk University alone turned out almost 1000 students, a large percentage of its total enrollment.

DENOUNCING RACISM, IMPERIALISM

Outside the Vanderbilt gym the protesters from the three Black colleges linked up with 500 more demonstrators, mostly students who had staged their own march across the campuses of VU, Peabody College and Scarritt College.

The 2500 demonstrators cheered speakers issuing strident calls for revolution, urging support for African liberation, denouncing apartheid and Vanderbilt and linking U.S. imperialism and the oppression of peoples in Africa and other third world countries. Snow and temperatures that by early night dropped to freezing did not deter the protesters.

David Simpson, organizational secretary of the Southern Conference Education Fund (SCEF), brought the crowd to fever pitch when he turned and pointed to the "funky cops" lining entrance ways to the gymnasium and decried "this racist Vanderbilt university." cannot go on in a racist university."

Other speakers included Kenneth Makanda of the Pan African Congress (PAC); John Pike of the Progressive Action Coalition; Jimmy Mapsapoule of the South African Students Organization; Robert Birt of the New African Liberation Support Committee; Ellen Mark, executive secretary of the Steve Biko Memorial Committee of Chicago; James Harris, chairperson of the National Student Coalition Against Racism, David Huet-Vaughn, coordinator of the Tennessee Coalition AGainst Apartheid, and John Dommissee, a south African exile.

The many hundreds of signs carried high on the picketlines and in the various marches included numerous portraits of Biko and such slogans as "End American Investment in Slave Labor"; "Tennis Everyone Not in South AFrica," and "Vanderbile Profits From South Africa."

THE MARCH 18 PROTEST

A highlight of the March 18 protest was a mass march and rally organized by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP) and involving an estimated 4000 to 5000 demonstrators. Led by NAACP National Executive Director Benjamin Hooks, the marchers walked ten abreast for three and one-half miles from the Tennessee slate capitol downtown to Centennial Park.

The local NAACP chapter president, Dr. Charles Kimbrough, drew applause when he told ralliers his chapter "is taking on a new project dealing with the racism of Vanderbilt University."

The local NAACP chapter president, Dr. Charles Kimbrough, drew applause when he told raaliers his chapter "is taaing on a new project dealing with the racism of Vanderbilt University."

Other speakers included Hooks; Black actor Ossie Davis; Bayard Rustin; Fraaklin Williams of the Coalition for Human Rights in South Africa; William Booth, president of the American Committee on Africa; Dr. Richard Lapchick, national chairperson of the American Coodinating Committee for Equality in Sport and Society; Joseph Lowery, president of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, and Wilbert Davis, president of Americaa Tennis Association, the Black counterpart of the U.S. Tennis Association.

Hooks told the crowd, "in love and peace," not to cross over to Vanderbilt after the conclusion of the program. "The FBI," he said, "is here hoping people will get to the gym and act a fool and get arrested. I beg you, let's go home in peace."

Despite Hooks' exhortations a number of people went to the VU campus, including Dick Gregory who later addressed demonstrators in front of the gymnasium. It seemed clear that many Nashville Black students were angered by the decision of the NAACP national office to hold its protest in Centennial Park rather than the Vanderbilt campus. Those same students made it plain than Vanderbilt would be the focus of most of their protest.

Others who helped build the demonstrations expressed dismay at the national NAACP's nearly complete disregard for the on-campus demonstrations. They also objected to Hooks' statement at a predemonstration press conference that VU chancellor Alexander Heard and VU president Emmett Fields were "compassionate men" who appeared simply to be "on the wrong track."

Local demonstrators at a post-match rally told the crowd of an upcoming campaign against VU investments in companies dealing with South Africa and an April 11 protest when Chancellor Heard is scheduled to receive the Humanitarian Award from the Nashville Chapter of the National Conference of Christians and Jews.

Farrakhan Promoting Elijah's Ideals

By J. ZAMGBA BROWNE

In his first public appearance here since he severed relations with the World Community of Islam in the West, minister Louis Farrakhan revealed last Friday a broad plan to rebuild the Nation of Islam along the lines of the teachings of the late Elijah Muhammad.

Farrakhan broke away from the World Community last January over sharp disagreements in philosophy and direction of the movement.

Elijah Muhammad's son and successor, Wallace D. Muhammad, has initiated several radical changes within the last three years, which Farrakhan and other members feel are not in keeping with Mr. Muhammad's teachings.

Ban on Whites Lifted

For example, in addition to the name change, from the Nation of Islam, to the World Community of Islam in the West, Wallace has also lifted the organization's ban on whites. The late Muhammad had preached Black separatism, Black awareness and hard work.

The changes brought about by Wallace coupled with the movement's huge financial losses from its many and varied enterprises caused a sharp cleavage in the organization.

Farrakhan said his plan for rebuilding the Nation of Islam calls for setting up mosques, schools, and businesses throughout the country to further carry out the work and teachings of his late mentor, Mr. Muhammad.

Members Drifting Away

The 45-year-old Farrakhan, who spoke at Baruch College at the invitation of a Black student group, said members of the Nation of Islam have been drifting steadily away from the group since the death three years ago of Mr. Muhammad.

Apart from a drastic decline in membership, Mr. Farrakhan said, Black Muslims have failed to uphold the dignity of their religion.

"Smoking, drinking and crime are now prevalent in the movement," he said.

Although Farrakhan said he wasn't too surprised over what was taking place among the country's Black Muslims because, he said, "Mr. Muhammad had predicted the changes long before his death, but he said the movement would be rebuilt and its impact would be even greater."

An Oath to Muhammad

Farrakhan further stated the he and the late Malcolm X were among the few who took a solemn oath before Mr. Muhammad to build a nation of Islam and he doesn't intend to renege on that promise.

He said he didn't intend to use Baruch College as a spring board to snipe at Wallace D. Muhammad, but, nevertheless, he did seem to challenge Wallace's leadership.

For example, he was critical of Muhammad's refusal to allow the members to be referred to as Black Muslims, and how the membership has drifted steadily from the rigid Islamic code of ethics.

"While there are personal differences between myself and Wallace," Farrakhan said, "I won't allow those differences to tear us apart."

Sees Opportunity in Death

Farrahan said the death of Elijah Muhammad has "provided us with an opportunity to actually see who the true Black Muslims are. Many of us had been pretending all along."

He said his decision to break away from the World Community of Islam in the West was difficult, but now that it has been done, "I have no regrets and will begin to chart a course of rebuilding the Nation of Islam."

Before reaching a decision, Farrakhan said he carefully examined the conditions of Blacks across the country since Mr. Muhammad's death and concluded that "we are worse off."

And he placed some of the blame for the conditions of Blacks on President Carter. Farrakhan declared that the "malignant neglect on the part of the Carter White House together with Mr. Carter's insensitivity to affirmative programs designed to help Blacks pull themselves up by their bootstraps has really "hurt our cause."

Federal Actions May Slash Blacks' Jobs

A state human rights official and a highly placed state legislator interviewed this week said they fear that final approval of a long list of Federal Labor Department proposed changes in rules requiring the hiring of minorities to work on federally-financed projects will bring an end to affirmative action efforts in the building industry.

James F. McNamara, assistant commissioner of the state's division of human rights, said the proposed rules changes would "cripple" affirmative action in an industry that — with the predicted infusion of increased amounts of federal money over the next ten years — could produce thousands of high salaried jobs for Blacks and other minorities.

McNamara explained that, under the proposed rules changes, the federally-backed goals for hiring Blacks and minorities to work on federally financed projects would fall from the current 35 per cent, to only 17.5 per cent.

According to McNamara, the drop in the minority hiring goals was produced by the Labor Department's decision to scrap previous methods of computing the percentage of minorities in the work force. Formerly, New York City and other major urban centers were considered separate from surrounding communities, thus — because Blacks and other minorities often make up a large part of urban populations — the minority hiring goals called for a corresponding higher ratio of Blacks, Hispanics and others.

The proposed rule changes, McNamara explained, would base the minority hiring goals on figures gathered from New York City, plus outlaying areas including, Westchester, Putnam and Rockland counties in New York, in addition to Bergen County in New Jersey.

"Because there are fewer Blacks and minorities in the suburbs, the Labor Department people came up with a much lower ratio of minorities in the overall work force.

"That means, that when the hiring goals are computed for the entire area Blacks and minorities are not represented by their actual numbers in the locality (New York City) where they live and would find jobs," McNamara asserted.

State Senator Joseph L. Galiber, a Democrat of the Bronx and chairman of the Senate Banking Committee, said he will introduce a resolution asking the Labor Department to take another look at the proposed rules changes.

Loss of Jobs, Revenues

"We are opposed to the proposed changes," Galiber said. "The former federal concept of affirmative action in hiring is our only hope. If it goes through affirmative action will be about nil in the state."

McNamara and Galiber explained that, on the state level, affirmative action in hiring is our only hope. If it goes through affirmative action will be about nil in the state."

McNamara and Galiber explained that, on the state level, affirmative action programs for the hiring of minorities to work on state funded projects is bogged down in a court fight resulting from a suit filed by the state's building industry and some unions. "Because of the suit, which the state is appealing, there can be no real enforcement of affirmative action hiring plans," McNamara explained.

Both McNamara and Galibert predicted that the new proposed regulations would lead to the loss of thousands of jobs for Blacks and other minorities, and the loss of millions of dollars in revenues the jobs would produce and funnel into the Black and minority communities.

According to McNamara, if the proposed regulation changes are allowed to stand they would go into effect sometime early this summer.

Galiber and McNamara agreed that Black voters should start putting pressure on their Federal representatives to urge them to speak out against the rules changes. "The creators of the changes were insensitive to the employment needs of the Black, Hispanic and minority communities," Galiber said. "We have to get congressment and senators and political leaders to be sensitive to the problems the new rules and produce, and act to stop them, now."

Jamaica Official Raps U.S. Journalism Stance

International press agencies don't really understand Third World problems, or report on them regularly because they think it's of very little interest to the public, stated Arnold Bertram, Minister of Information and Culture for the Government of Jamaica, during a seminar held recently at the Columbia School of Journialism.

Commenting on the seminar's theme, "Journalism: The Third World Beat," Bertram told an audience of working media and journalism students, "What hurts the Third World doesn't really seem to anger many people in the industrialized world, especially the press."

The seminar was sponsored by the Columbia University Graduate School of Journalism and the Jamaica Agency for Public Information.

Acknowledging Bertram's stance that the industrialized nations are insensitive toward the Third World, Frank Tremaine of United Press, said most Western countries "basically disassociate themselves from the Third World. They seem to lack any understanding probably because they feel there is a lack of stability in emerging countries. A government's staying power seems to be the most important criterion on whether the industrialized countries take Third World countries seriously."

Tremaine defended UPI's coverage of the Third World. "Our policy is to disseminate the kind of news that means the most to the greatest number of people," he contended.

Bertram also stressed that there was difficulty talking about freedom of the press in countries where there was "rampant illiteracy," but said there is "an obligation that begins with giving our people objective news to read."

Adding to that, Robert van Lierop, Producer of ABC's "Like It Is," said international news coverage is "built on deeply-entrenched biases. The background and objectives of a reporter and his news-gathering agency tend to affect both the selection of what is considered newsworthy and the way it is reported."

Building on van Lierop's statements, during an audience question-and-answer period, Bertram linked the press's alleged lack of objectivity with a failure to understand the political systems in many Third World nations.

"In Jamaica's case," he said, "we are mobilizing a system that is determined to make a better life for more people instead of a select group controlling most of the wealth."

Bertram said that "private ownership of newspapers, which is the case in most industrialized nations, has shown it cannot be objective. "Poor people certainly cannot afford to start their own newspapers. So there is no alternative but for the government to assist broadly based democratic institutions to own and operate their own newspapers," he asserted.

U.S. Picketers Tell Israel: Free Esmail

Groups in several U.S. cities picketed to demand the release of Sami Esmail from prison in Israel last week. Meanwhile, his trial opened amid conditions seriously questioning the possibility of a fair hearing.

Esmail, a U.S. citizen of Palestinian descent, was arrested at an Israeli airport in December. He was en route from Michigan to Ramallah in the Israeli-occupied West Bank to visit his dying father. According to a sworn statement from his brother Basim, Esmail has stated that during a week of interrogation he was punched, threatened and questioned for 24 hours at a stretch. Nor was he allowed to see his attorney until he signed a confession in Hebrew, a language he does not speak.

In East Lansing, where Esmail was a graduate student in electrical engineering at Michigan State University, students held an all night vigil at the student union before the March 14 trial. In New York on the eve of the trial, Sami's mother, Rasmieh joined a picketline of 75 people outside the Israeli Consulate to demand her son's release.

On the same day 50 people picketed the Israeli Consulate in Boston; many of the demonstrators were Arab students with their faces covered. One of the participants explained that their faces were hidden "partially as a symbolic gesture and partially because we are concerned that our identities might be given to Israel."

A protest meeting was also held in Dearborn, Mich., and a picketline in front of the Israeli Consulate in San Francisco. The actions were coordinated by the National Committee to Defend the Human Rights of Sami Esmail, headquartered in East Lansing.

Felicia Langer, the defense attorney, reported that the opening sessions of the trial were "a farce." Substantial portions of the trial are closed to the public, including parts of the proceedings containing the testimony of Israeli intelligence agents from the Shin Beth (secret service). One of the basic demands of Sami Esmail's defense committee has been that he receive a public trial.

The U.S. State Department has thus far refused to waive diplomatic immunity to allow a consular official, Mark Davidson, to testify at the trial. Davidson saw Esmail during the interrogation period. Esmail's defense believes that his testimony would support their claims that Esmail's confession was extracted through torture and ought to be inadmissable.

The State Department has only permitted Davidson to submit an affidavit, which was rejected because of prosecution objections that Davidson couldn't be cross-examined.

Esmail is being charged with "membership in an unlawful organization" (the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine) and "contact with enemy agents." The acts named in the indictment allegedly occurred not in Israel, but in East Lansing — where Esmail is accused of distributing Palestinian literature and holding meetings — and in Libya. Israel claims Esmail underwent political and military training in Libya.

Israel officials in the U.S. earlier charged that Esmail had spent August 1976 in Libya. Now the training is supposed to have occurred in a 2-week period Esmail admits he spent in Libya. Esmail's defense points out that travel to Libya is not illegal.

Rally Demands Freedom For Wilmington

By VICKI BALDASSANO

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The steady rhythm of bongo drums echoed throughout the march transmitting with every beat the power of a movement building national momentum after seven long years of struggle.

Straddling tree limbs or standing underneath, some 8000 demonstrators gathered outside the White House in Lafayette Park March 18 to demand freedom for the Wilmington 10 and all political prisoners.

The protesters, who came by bus and car from 20 states in the East, Midwest and South, surrounded the White House chanting "Free the Wilmington 10," and "We want justice."

Wilmington 10 support actions took place concurrently in San Francisco, Los Angeles, New Orleans, St. Louis, Denver and Honolulu. The Washington action was one of the largest outside the White House this year.

The Wilmington 10 were "framed-up solely to put fear in the people, to intimidate and disrupt the North Carolina civil rights movement," said Elisabeth Chavis, reading a statement from her son, imprisoned Wilmington 10 member Rev. Ben Chavis. "I want to ... state that even behind bars we continue to struggle for the liberation of all the oppressed."

The National Alliance Against Racist and Political Repression, which sponsored the Washington, D.C., action, launched the fight to free the nine Black and one white civil rights activists in 1971. The 10 were arrested on trumped-up arson charges following their defense of a church under attack by armed North Carolina Klan members. The 10 were leading members of the local civil rights movement.

The Wilmington 10 case has attracted worldwide attention. Last year, three of the four major prosecution witnesses recanted their testimony, citing government coercion and bribes as the motives behind their false testimony.

Despite evidence of a frame-up and mounting public pressure to free the Wilmington 10, North Carolina Gov. James Hunt has refused to pardon the group. He has offered only a token gesture of reducing their combined jail sentences of 282 years.

SIX-HOUR DEMONSTRATION

The 6-hour demonstration last week began with a march from Malcolm X Park to the White House; the line of march stretched for a half mile. The rally also paid tribute to Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., assassinated 10 years ago this April.

At the Lafayette Park site, Alliance cochairperson and Communist Party member Angela Davis condemned Carter for his silence on political prisoners in the U.S., "the country that most systematically, violently and outrageously violates the human rights of its citizens. This is not the last march."

A member of the D.C. school board read a resolution calling for people to boycott all conferences in North Carolina until the 10 are freed, and also establishing March 17 as Wilmington 10 awareness day in the public schools.

Judge Margaret Burnham of Boston read solidarity statements from priosners George Merritt and Rafael Cancel Miranda; and Rep. Donald Edwards (D-Calif.) relayed a message from 75 Congress members who have called for release of the Wilmington 10.

Throughout the day's events, the Gospel Inspirationists of North Carolina and blues singer Lucy Murphy of Washington, D.C., kept the marchers' spirits alive. Folksinger Pete Seeger wrote a new song for the occasion: "Hey, Hey Mr. Peanut Man, What You Gonnda Do About the Wilmington 10?"

And Frank Shafer Corona, the only Latino member of the D.C. school board, spoke at the rally demanding freedom for "another group of political prisoners, the so-called 'illegal aliens.' "

South Africa Action Aim At Banks

Under pressure from antiapartheid forces, some of the biggest U.S. banks have announced cutbacks in loans to South Africa. Antiapartheid actions continued, meanwhile, with events in New York, New Jersey and Philadelphia.

Citicorp of New York, the nation's second largest bank and one of the Vorster regime's most important financial allies, announced March 11 that it will no longer loan money to the South African government or to government-owned enterprises—not until the government makes "tangible progress" away from apartheid.

Greeted as a "significant step in the right direction" by the American Committee On Africa (ACOA), the Citi-corp action still leaves the door open for loans to private South African interests, for the most part tied closely to the racist regime. And until the bank bars all loans to South Africa, ACOA considers it "a participant in the apartheid system."

The Citicorp announcement was issued in response to a stockholder resolution calling for a report on the baak's current commitments in South Africa.

How much the Citicorp move means is a question. In a similar situation last year Chase Manhattan Bank, headed by David Rockefeller, said it would not make loans to the South African government, its corporations, the bantustans (the phony "independent homelands" for blacks) or to Namibia. It turned out that chase meant it would "discourage" such loans and shortly after the announcement the top Chase man in South Africa commented, "We're just carrying on as before and we'll shortly be moving to bigger premises."

Now the South African economy is seriously depressed, partly because of the worldwide capitalist recession, partly because of the mounting costs of repression and the government's massive efforts to attain economic and military self-sufficiency. In the "deteriorating" situation it is no longer "feasible" for U.S. banks to make South African loans: the risk is too great.

The First National Bank of Chicago, another of the country's largest, said recently that loans to the South African government are "out of the question." In fact, in 1977 the bank made no such loans

The divestment push was an important part of actions commemorating the March 21, 1960 Sharpeville massacre in South Africa. In New York City March 21, antiapartheid demonstrators served notice on Chemical Bank, one of the six largest banks lending to South Africa.

One contingent of demonstrators picketed a midtown branch of the baak then marched to the branch at UN Plaza, while a group at Columbia University picketed a branch at the campus. In aal, the demonstrators numbered around 125 people. Sponsors of the action included Clergy and Laity Concerned, the National Lawyers Guild, the East (a Brooklyn Black cultural group) and others.

In Philadelphia, Sharpeville was commemorated on March 18 with an all-day conference on southern Africa initiated by the National Conference of Black Lawyers. Over 200 people attended the meeting. The program was addressed by Judge William Booth, president of ACOA, and Godfrey Sithole, Philadelphia member of the African National Congress.

And at Rutgers University in New Brunswick, N.J., last week, 800 students demonstrated to demand that the school's board of trustees take up the issue of disinvestment. "We say Rutgers must divest because we want to see the death of apartheid," one demonstrator shouted.

"The question is, where do you stand?" another challenged. "With the freedom and liberation of the African people or do you stand with apartheid and slavery?"

In The Community Interest

Amherst, Ma... Television in Amherst will not be the same now that the Center for Community Access Television is in operation. After three years of development and endless hours of work a group of community people with the help and cooperation of the Massachusetts Foundation for Humanities and Public Policy, a program of the National Endowment for the Humanities, have begun to cable-cast locally produced programs. The first being an eight part series on Nuclear Power.

The series entitled "The Center For Community Access Television Examines Nuclear Power" was developed by CCATV staff with the co-operation of Northeast Utilities personnel and the Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group (Mass. PIRG). "At a time when nuclear power is being debated from all sides it is our hope that these programs will help to confirm some truths and dispel some myths about this strange new energy source" said Ms. Blue Carreker, Co-ordinator of CCATV, after the airing of the first program Nuclear Power In Our Back Yard. "Many people do not have enough information about atomic energy to make an intelligent decision," she continued, "this is partly due to the nuclear industry and partly due to the mass media. We want to try and change this."

Since the Northeast Utilities Co. proposed to build a nuclear generating plant in Montague, Mass. the discussion around atomic energy has increased. It was for this reason that the Mass. Foundation for Humanities and Public Policy decided to award CCATV a grant to further enhance this discussion through the use of television. In the coming weeks topics for the series will include; Jobs and Economic Growth, Safety of Nuclear Power, Alternative Energy Sources, as well as How Citizens can become Involved in the Decision Making Process for Nuclear Power Facilities.

As well as special programming the Community Access Center welcomes and encourages people to produce shows that will be of interest to the greater community. CCATV needs the support of community people. For more information call or write: CCATV, PO Box 138, Amherst, Ma. 01002, 256-0414.

Philly's Mayor Rizo To Defend "White Rights".

By OBI BINI

The outgoing mayor of the nation's fourth largest city has made his next career choice — he will campaign nationally in defense of "white rights."

The recent announcement by Philadelphia Mayor Frank Rizzo reflects the current upsurge of openly racist and in some cases explicitly neo-Nazi activity.

In the beleaguered Chicago suburb of Skokie, for example, a federal district court has just issued a temporary restraining order against a planned April 20 public commemoration of the birthday of Adolf Hitler. The same judge had earlier approved the holding of a Nazi march through Skokie, home to a large number of former detainees in Hitler's concentration camps.

In Columbus, Ohio, meanwhile, five people arrested late last year while protesting two separate Ku Klux Klan rallies were recently acquitted of the various felony charges brought against them. Although many eyewitnesses testified that the KKK had provoked violence in both cases, no Klansmen have been arrested.

And in New Jersey, shoppers have been finding typed and handwritten notes with anti-Semitic messages slipped into packages of nonprescription drugs. State officials say there is nothing they can do about it.

In Philadelphia, Rizzo, a 2-term "tough cop" mayor, said that when he leaves office next year, he will travel throughout the country to champion the rights of "non-Black ethnics."

"Whites have to join hands to get equal treatment," the Democratic official stated.

NAZI DEMONSTRATION BLOCKED

Rizzo is upset at two recent instances of federal government intervention—in response to mass pressure—against his administration's racist treatment of the city's large Black population. The mayor stated that his "hands are handcuffed" by the Justice Department's indictment of a dozen Philadelphia cops and federal government criticism of the city's minority housing program. These are examples, according to Rizzo, of a "liberal leftist" plot that must be opposed by whites.

In Illinois, Federal District Judge Bernard Decker meanwhile ordered a 45-day stay of his earlier ruling allowing Nazi demonstrations in Skokie, a move that will halt the planned April Hitler birthday action. He acted on a request from the Skokie town council, which is appealing Decker's earlier striking down as unconstitutional three local statutes prohibiting public Nazi activity. According to one Skokie official, if the judge had not issued the stay, "tens of thousands of people were expected to attend a demonstration to counter the Nazi march."

The Ohio acquittals of anti-KKK activists involved separate cases brought against members of the Progressive Labor Party's International Committee Against Racism and the National United Workers' Organization (NUWO), a group initiated by the Revolutionary Communist Party.

In the first case, David Mann and William Gilbreth were found not guilty March 10 by a Common Pleas Court jury on four counts of felonious assault on police officers during a melee at a Labor Day anti-Klan picket.

The violence erupted at the September protest against a Klan antibusing rally when about three dozen white men, later identified as undercover members of the Columbus police department SWAT team, began clubbing and beating up the antiracist group. The SWAT attacks were followed by assaults by uniformed police, in which three cops and seven protesters were injured.

Defense lawyers credited the acquittals to the courage of eyewitnesses who gave evidence exposing perjured police testimony.

Susan Urbas, an investigator for the Mann-Gilbreth under police brutality and simply couldn't convict Mann and Gilbreth under the circumstances. They realized that cops can and do lie, and that sometimes police are guilty of oppressive action."

Also in Columbus, three members of NUWO were freed of felonious assault and inciting to violence charges in connection with a July 4, 1977 action also organized to counter a KKK antibusing rally.

In the New Jersey anti-Semitic message campaign, a retired officer at the Fort Monmouth army base was arrested in December for putting such notes in drug packages at a base store. Military officials did not, however, connect ex-Sgt. Charles E. Sublett to a wider organized drive. The Fort Monmouth notes contained messages such as "Hitler was right." Sublett was charged with misuse of U.S. property.

Philly Cops Intensify Siege Against Move

By RON WHITEHORNE

Philadelphia

Philadelphia police have all but insured a violent and bloody end to the city's conflict with the MOVE organization in the Powelton Village community here.

On March 16 over 500 police and firefighters blockaded a 6-block area around the organization's home in West Philadelphia. It was the sharpest escalation yet in the 10-month police siege of the Black anarchist group.

Police erected a 9-foot high barricade, trained fire hoses and water cannons on the headquarters, cut off the water supply and stationed police sharpshooters on the roofs of nearby homes.

Inside the house are some 20 members of the group and their 10 children. MOVE members are armed but have stated they will fire only in self-defense. Mayor Frank Rizzo has promised that if shooting starts, the police will respond with "more firepower than they've ever seen."

About 125 community residents, meanwhile, demonstrated March 17 to protest the blockade, which they called part of a "police state."

Community activists had sought to prevent the blockade by a court order. Since MOVE has stockpiled large quantities of food and water, they argue that a blockade will only lead to pressure for a further escalation—which can only be a raid.

A number of people and some city officials had also advocated a negotiated settlement, which they said was possible only if Rizzo forces and the police backed down from their confrontatory position. On March 10, for example, Dick Gregory met with MOVE and city officials in an effort at mediation. At this point, however, the Rizzo position clearly has the upper hand.

MOVE is an organization of predominantly Black youth who advocate "revolution" in the guise of a return to nature. The group also opposes any cooperation with the state.

ORIGINS OF THE CONFLICT

The conflict with the city goes back to 1976, when attempts to enforce warrants for violations of health and building codes led to the arrest of many MOVE members and their eventual imprisonment on contempt of court.

In spring 1976, friction between MOVE and the police reached crisis proportions. An attempt to arrest one MOVE member led to a fight in which, MOVE alleges, one of their children was killed by police.

In May 1977, following the eviction of a MOVE member from a nearby residence, armed members of MOVE squared off with police in front of their compound. After a 9-hour standoff in which MOVE announced that they would not shoot first, MOVE members withdrew their weapons. They refused, however, to leave their compound. The police then began a virtual occupation of the immediate neighborhood, with 24-hour stake-out squads on the streets and in apartments overlooking the MOVE headquarters.

This is not the first time Powelton Village, an interracial community with a local reputation as a hotbed of radicalism, has been targeted by the police. A united community successfully thwarted previous harassment. But in the current crisis Powelton is deeply divided. One group, the Powelton Emergency Human Rights Committee (PHREC), has brought repeated pressure on the city to evict MOVE and supports the blockade. These residents, who characterize MOVE as a fascist organization, charge they have been the victims of threats, intimidation and beatings by MOVE members.

Members of Philadelphia's stakeout squad near headquarters of MOVE

Others, organized in the Powelton United Neighbors, while recognizing the contradictions between MOVE and the community, see the danger of repression as the main issue. The group sees the attack on MOVE as strengthening the hand of Rizzo specifically and racist reaction generally. These forces actively oppose the blockade.

There is widespread opposition to the repression of MOVE from the city's Black community. The repression of Black organizations in the 1960s, symbolized in the raid on the Black Panther Party offices, has not been forgotten. The wave of police brutality over the last year, culminating in a federal probe and indictments, has stiffened this opposition.

Mayor Rizzo is seeking to exploit the MOVE situation to bolster his sagging political fortunes. As so often in the past, Rizzo is posing as the friend of law and order in advocating a forceful solution to the MOVE dilemma. The mayor is fanning the flames of racism as part of his overall political strategy. (On March 18, Rizzo announced that he was not running for a third term but will instead head a campaign to protect the rights of white Americans.)

The current crisis developed last month. Following newspaper reports that the city had spent over $1 million on police surveillance of MOVE, a new attempt was made by the city to negotiate a settlement.

Two events sabotaged the negotiations. The Philadelphia Daily News reported that the police department had trained a special SWAT team to go in after MOVE. Simultaneously, three MOVE members in prison were beaten by guards.

MOVE then categorically rejected the city's proposal and made five "nonnegotiable" demands of their own, calling for the release of all MOVE members in prison and the dropping of all charges against MOVE members.

On March 1, Rizzo responded by announcing that the city would blockade MOVE, preventing any food and water from reaching their compound.

Rizzo's inflammatory rhetoric and provocative actions have virtually insured a police-MOVE confrontation. Community activists see continued mass protest aimed at the city as the only means of preventing a bloodbath in their neighborhood.

Inequality: It Starts In The Schools And Persists With Placement In Corporate Hierarchy

By ZOE BEST

Since the 1950's, fluctuations in the economy have resulted in corresponding shifts in public education policies. After the Korean War, veterans were given government subsidization to prevent the post war recession from swelling into a recognizeably full scale depression. Veterans enrolled in college instead of queuing in unemployment lines.

The Supreme Court Decision in 1954 to desegregate schools and institutions of higher learning, among other effects, provided another rationale for government investment in education to seemingly promote equalization of blacks and whites in educational opportunities. Investment, whether from the corporate or state sectors, is never made unless a return on the investment is guaranteed. Two things were happening in this period. Externally the Soviet Union was shooting sputniks like they'd adopted the 4th of July and dropping nuclear subs into any accommodating waters. Internally the Civil Rights campaign brought fireworks of a different sort to the view of legislators. After the assassinations, the Johnson Administration's War on Poverty geared into the Vietnam War buildup. Through all this, public funding of education was part and parcel of the overall expenditures to maintain this country's military and economic position if not expand it. By the time we got to the end of the 60's and into the early 70's, the new math and science emphasis was already shelved except for those tracked into it as the junior elite. Integration with its supposed equalizing effect was a myth.

The Vietnam War had foreclosed on yet another chapter of expansionist designs by U.S. capitalists and so the economy went into another tailspin with the influx of Vietnam veterans, shifts in world prices for raw materials — copper, oil, aluminum, uranium, gold, etc. and the general devaluation of the dollar. Equal opportunity and affirmative action felt the brakes in the major cities with sizeable black populations. In New York City, 27 educational "facilities" were scheduled for closing to save the city $5 million. Open admissions in the state university system were abandoned and tuitions were raised. In the same period, spring of 1976, a Bureau of Census report showed that the gap between the proportion of blacks and whites who completed college was larger in 1974 than in 1960. Of blacks age 16 to 34, 4.2 per cent had completed four or more years of college in 1960 compared to 11.9 per cent of whites. By 1974 the figures were 8.1 per cent for blacks and 21 per cent for whites, widening the gap to almost 13 percentage points. In October 1976 a Census Bureau report showed that 26.5 per cent of blacks age 20-21 were neither in school nor had completed high school.

Cutbacks and discrimination coupled with corruption in the public sector has reduced the effects of inroads made during the 1960's and early 1970's. Last year Shirley Chisholm disclosed that special funding in the sum of $191,901 went to white schools compared to $15,726 to black schools in New York City. Currently upper middle class school boards in New York are preventing the distribution of $6.2 million designated for minority and poor students who comprise the majority of students in public schools. In 1976, the school population in New York City was 36.6 per cent and 27.7 per cent Spanish speaking. The chancellor of the school system wants these boards to comply with his order to release information of the ethnic composition of the public schools which could release the federal funds, not so much to serve the majority of students in the system, but to have that money sieve through the bureaucracy so that officials can get their cut.

In the meantime as Jim Haskins indicated in his DIARY OF A HARLEM SCHOOL TEACHER, drugs, violence, police occupation, racial conflicts, suspension, pregnancy, pervert teachers, rape and broken windows are more about the school scene than curriculum or equal opportunity. A public school nurse related to this writer that her biggest problem was dealing with twelve year olds who conceived while at school, at least three a month, again in Harlem.

At the present, there is no visible sign of any government or economic measures that will counter the trend of greater inequality. We are confronted with the situation where black enrollments in public schools are increasing, by 1980, 15.4 per cent of all students will be black, while the percentage black college graduates is decreasing.

According to Andrew Greeley in a 1974 study, "Ethnicity in the United States," college graduates were Blacks 4 per cent, Spanish speaking 4.1 per cent, Polish 5.1 per cent, Italian 5.1 per cent, Protestant British 13.6 per cent, Irish Catholic 14 per cent, German Jewish 23.3 per cent and Eastern European Jewish 27.5 per cent. Professors Bowles and Gintis who wrote SCHOOLING IN CAPITALIST AMERICA, conclude that the primary determinant of graduation from college is family income. This is substantiated by a Census Bureau report of 1972. Families having the highest median income, $13,929, American Jews, have the highest percentage of college graduates, 52.5 per cent, while those in the lowest income group, Hispanics, $7,595, have the lowest percentage of college graduates at 5.3 per cent. Native Americans are not counted in these figures. They are included in statistics for whites. We can guess, though, where they might fall in these statistics. Dr. Bernard C. Watson of Temple University has pointed out that 60 per cent of black college students included in statistics of college educated blacks, went to two-year community or vocational schools and another 20 per cent attended black colleges.

The idea of going to college is to get a good paying job with security. Bowles and Gintis show that patterns of inequality in the schools parallel income inequality within the work force. They divide the work force into two basic sectors, the "primary" and the "secondary." Corporations and government comprise the primary sector which pays the highest wages. The majority of unionized workers are in this sector. Bureaucracy and hierarchy determine job ladders, requirements for credentials and seniority or promotion rules. Bowles and Gintis note that the majority of workers in this sector are "adult, not aged, white males." They state throughout their book that "Two of the most important avenues for getting ahead economically — education and job experience — work most effectively for the already economically advantaged, particularly white males ... The economic return to schooling is twice as high for white males as for blacks or females."

The secondary sector is characterized by low wages, high worker turnover and minimal unionization. Wages are relatively low while promotion is uncommon. The majority who work in this sector of the economy are blacks, Puerto Ricans, Chicanos, native Americans, women, the elderly, youth and other minority groups. We might note that the military is "employing" large numbers of "minority" youth.

Education, the labor force and the economy are stratified. Bowles and Gintis again provide the following data: "Firms of the independent production and entrepreneurial type comprise more than 90 per cent of all U.S. businesses, although they account for only a little over a quarter of the paid work force. The addition of self-employed individuals brings this up to about 33 per cent."

The corporate sector is dominated by 1.6 per cent of all businesses that do three quarters of all sales. Two-thirds of all businesses do only 2.4 per cent of all sales. "The largest one tenth of one per cent of all corporations owned 60 per cent of all corporate assets; the smallest, 94 per cent of all corporations owned less than 8 per cent of all corporate assets. In 1973, the largest one hundred manufacturing corporations, less than one-fifth of one per cent of this category, owned over 43 per cent of manufacturing assets and captured 49 per cent of the profits in the manufacturing sector. In the same year, the largest five hundred manufacturing corporations (in all, one-tenth of one per cent of all manufacturing establishments) employed three-fourths of all workers in manufacturing. The corporate sector as a whole, while comprising less than one-tenth of all firms employs nearly half of the paid labor force ... In sum, about two thirds of all paid workers are employed in the corporate and state sectors."

What can be concluded from all this? Pretty much what we already know. To change the patterns of inequality we must change our tactics of addressing them. The state or government and corporate sectors have maintained stratification in education and the workplace through remediative reforms. Corporate profits are on the increase while real income for the majority is on the decrease. One-half of one per cent at the top profits in more ways than economically by the competition between races, ages and sexes for jobs. A college degree is not a magic wand that brings peace and prosperity unless you already are economically advantaged.

Part II of this article will show how women are stratified educationally and in the economy. Triple jeopardy among black women is no lie.

Cuba Site Of The XI Festival

Since the very beginning in which Cuba was selected as Site of the XI World Festival of Youth and Students, for all its people and especially for its youth, started a long and hard period of preparations in which the daily effort, the smile of solidarity and the wish of succeeding are mixed.

The work has been divided into different parts and tens of tasks have been accomplished.

The First National Festival of Youth and Students was carried out, to show how our youth is preparing themselves and even the pioneers in the different branches of art, culture, sports, political activities and others. More than ten thousand young people of the whole country and 500 thousand persons of the capital participated in the Festival.

During the National Festival, the Sport School and Youth Games were held in a simultaneous way, the National Amateur Festivals of the High-School Student Federation, and of the Union of Cuban Pioneers, the Arm Forces' gala program, an exhibition concerning the transportation development in Cuba, rallies of anti-imperialist solidarity and the Festival of the New Cuban Song, among other activities. As an eternal memory of that period, thousands of pines that were planted by young people, grow at the Eastern part of Havana, near to "LaGuayaba" dam, exponents of solidarity, that wonderful feeling that joins peoples and that gives its name to that place that very soon will be a leafy forest.

The last deadline for applications to the 11th World Youth Festival is April 3, 1978. Applications can be sent to: 11th World Youth Festival of Youth and Students, P.O. Box 595, Amherst, Mass. 01059.

Urban 'Removal': Small City Residents Suffer

In Washington, D.C., Atlanta, Houston and numerous other U.S. cities, downtown redevelopment schemes have forced the relocation of hundreds of poor, workingclass and third world people.

Residents of depressed, neglected areas have been shuttled around, often left homeless, to make way for fancy stores, civic centers and other profit-making ventures.

But the problem isn't confined to big cities. Residents of smaller cities suffer too, often less able to fight back. A recent feature article in Fairpress, a weekly newspaper of the Westport, Conn., area, told how Norwalk's Black residents responded to the proposals for redevelopment of their South Norwalk community.

The small group of residents, who live near or on Water Street, will be forced to move when the city begins to implement the Water Street Industrial Development Project to make way for two corporations: Charles of the Ritz, a cosmetics company, and Beldoch Popper, which rents space from Charles of the Ritz. The project, which will cost the city $4 million, will force the area's poor to move to Bridgeport, according to the mayor, William Collins. Bridgeport is already marked by extremely high unemployment.

Even Collins has timidly raised his voice against the program, which he says will force skyrocketing property values well out of the range of low-income families.

"The poor people are going to be driven out," Collins said. "For some people in town that's nifty. I don't quite view it that way. I'm familiar with the human suffering that goes on in this town."

The plan will mean relocation not only for the area's residents, but for the many Black people who congregate there as well. According to the local police chief, Water Street is "a general meeting place just like the YMCA."

"This is our community," one Black person told the Fairpress. "It may not look like much to you, but that's what it is ... It's a landmark for the Black people. Every person here from the oldest man on down was here when they were kids."

One man, who has owned a house in the neighborhood for 20 years, says he will fight the project just on principle. Although he could probably relocate with city assistance, "I'd still like to fight to prove my point," Darby Mason said.

"I've got sense enough to know when progress comes along you got to bend with it, but it looks like they're doing everything for Charles of the Ritz. It's the city putting us out, so to speak," he continued.

Puerto Rico Strikers Locked Out

By RONNIE LOVLER

The striking electrical workers in Puerto Rico voted last weekend to end their 85-day strike.

However, the government-owned Water Resources Authority (WRA) in San Juan has refused to permit their strikers to return to their jobs.

Electrical Workers Union (UTIER) president Luis Lausell said the WRA facilities were under bolt and chain and surrounded by a heavy police cordon when the more than 6000 members of the UTIER went to work March 21. The WRA is charged with providing all electrical energy for Puerto Rico. The UTIER members staff the plants.

Lausell termed the WRA action "an illegal lockout." He said the union would file charges with the Puerto Rico Labor Relations Board in an effort to force the WRA to open its doors.

Although the police presence created a situation that Lausell described a "tense" he said there were no confrontations. Instead workers mounted a massive picketing in front of the WRA's main office and various electric plants throughout the island.

WRA Executive Director Pedro Vazquez, while admitting that his action was a lockout, called it a "defensive closing" to prevent the union "from being able to do on the inside what it has been unable to do from the outside."

Vazquez was referring to the numerous acts of sabotage against WRA facilities since the strike began. He indicated that he considered the lockout legal since it was to protect public property.

Lausell called Vazquez' statement "part of the same demagogic campaign that he has carried out in the past to try and confuse public opinion.

"The lockout is illegal and we will file charges with the board for illicit practices against WRA," he said. He said UTIER would also ask that damages be paid to the UTIER and its members.

STRIKE ISSUES

The immediate issue over the union's right to return to work is whether or not a collective bargaining agreement is at present in effect between labor and management.

An agreement was signed between UTIER and WRA covering noneconomic issues last year. UTIER holds that this contract permits the union to return to work while continuing to negotiate wages and salaries. WRA says, however, that the noneconomic agreement does not constitute a contract and that union members will be permitted to return to work only after an economic package has been agreed upon.

At present, the union and management are at odds not over only salary demands, but over the duration of any contract negotiated. The union wants a 1-year contract while WRA is insisting on a 3-year agreement.

Lausell has labeled the WRA demand "a police move geared at winning partisan advantages" for the prostatehood party now in power.

The governor does not want any strikes in an election year, Lausell said. A 3-year contract would expire in 1981, a year after the elections.

The UTIER strike has been viewed by many observers of the labor scene in Puerto Rico as a critical encounter for the island's labor movement. UTIER, now under the leadership of Lausell, a member of the Puerto Rico Socialist Party (PSP) central committee, has long been one of the most militant and powerful labor unions in Puerto Rico. Many observers believe the government intends to break UTIER and hence deal a crippling blow to the more progressive sectors of the labor movement.

"We see this as one more battle in the class struggle that is being carried out between the UTIER and the WRA," Lausell said.

Puerto Rico Protests Halt Navy War Games

A growing popular and legal campaign has forced the U.S. Navy to move its scheduled Operation Solid Shield maneuvers from Puerto Rico's island municipality of Vieques. The military exercises, the largest conducted in the Atlantic, will now be transferred to another site.

The Navy made its decision in the wake of protests by the people of Vieques, who have twice in the past month disrupted the Operation Springboard exercises U.S. and NATO forces have been conducting in the area.

The Navy announcement that it will relocate Solid Shield in either North Carolina or Georgia is also an apparent consequence of a Puerto Rican government petition for a federal court injunction to halt military activities in Vieques. A ruling on that petition is still pending.

Meanwhile, the court has turned down a bid for a temporary restraining order in a separate suit by the Vieques Fishermen's Association which asked that the naval presence on Vieques be terminated immediately. The government suit asks only that military exercises be ended.

The fishermen, whose suit also seeks $100 million compensation for damage to their homes, the environment and impediments to their right to earn their livelihood, plan to appeal that court ruling.

At the same time, Juan Mari Bras, secretary-general of the Puerto Rican Socialist Party (PSP), said that Rep. Ronald Dellums (D-Calif.) would ask the House Armed Forces Committee to investigate the Navy presence on Vieques. Dellums is a member of that committee.

The Navy, which has had a base in Vieques since the end of World War 2, occupies 75 per cent of the 80-square-mile island. According to spokespersons for the 7000 Viequens, it has only been since the Navy was forced to vacate the neighboring island-town of Culebra several years ago that military activities in Vieques have been stepped up.

It took years of protests and legal maneuvers to get the U.S. Navy off Culebra and even today its 800 residents have been left with a Navy legacy in an unusual environment hazard: unexploded live mines in the water and on the land which had been fired during past naval exercises.

Live At Herter Gallery: Painting By Fitz Walker

By ZOE BEST

Intense, direct visual statements vibrate from Fitz Walker's paintings, on exhibit at Herter Gallery until the end of March. Those compositions from the 1960's hold a moment so that a viewer can read it, while those from this period take a moment out, making it aural and enduring.

In his family's apartment-studio at Butterfield House where Walker is artist-in-residence, Rasaan Roland Kirk's horn-chants consecrate newly stretched canvasses. Walker states, "My painting is an abstract as in his music; I have all his albums. Painting is like music, it has timing, balance, rhythm, culture and history. The only difference is, it's visual." Referring to artists who have their own styles of kinetics when centering on the human condition with color and composition, he speaks of Romare Bearden, over sixty years old, "He's my man." Then smiling, seeing their distinct images, Benny Andrews, James Pride and Diego Rivera are cited. Of Rivera, a native-Mexican muralist, Walker adds, "He painted people's art on the money! He was a fine muralist."

Walker then speculates on how he himself might find subsidization for a fresco mural project. He talks about the planes of history and the human content of his work, how the political tone and colors remain the same even though the compositions change.

Walker grew up in a West Indian neighborhood in Hartford, Connecticut. He has worked at a multitude of jobs from the tobacco fields to prisons where he has taught painting. This definitely orients him to the street as opposed to the gallery scene. Walker summarizes his views, "New York is not communicating. Stuff in New York is tired. To me it's been tired; I've been seeing the same thinq for ten years. That's because it's marketable."

Much of the movement created in the paintings at Herter Gallery comes from the strength of the subtle variants of the primary colors. Their juxtoposition creates the kinetic effect. Walker relates, "If you can handle primary colors, you can handle the rest."

"Angela" with her red afro and eyes that are Ra within the double pyramid, the Pole Star, looks over the show, for indeed she symbolizes the time period that many of the paintings record, the 1960's. Green and lilac faced children look out from a canvas as if someone has asked them to say "cheese", interrupting their "Conflict in Ice Cream." Their presence is very connected to this chronology that refers to "The Spiritual Image of Marcus Garvey." His portrait is masked in black, purple and orange. A strong yellow band ties Garvey to the frame.

"The Duke" performs before an invisible audience with mikes and hardware ceasing to be metal to reflect a tattered starred and stiped reference to the U.S.A. The white flecks that catch stage lights and move around a performer are present in this painting, magnified on a black open-air night sky. Viewers try to answer blue lips and tropical colors in "Is It Something I said?" A high yellow "Sis" and "The Almighty Dollar" stop us. Yes the dollar is green and it's black and it's on a field of red with loops of barbed wire adding texture. "Dr. Fidel" reveals a charismatic presence and finally on the south wall we reach Africa in the 1970's with the "People's Struggle" where the acryllic colors are less opaque and so texture from the transparantness contributes to the message. Rifle tips glisten in a charge of orange among the greens, purples, lavender and metal gray. The eyes of people in this force reflect the sun with that same orange as what is on the tips of the rifles.

Walker is proud that his works are political, just as he is proud of his Jamaican relatives, his father who are political. His paintings proceed as does the music of Jimmy Cliff and Cuba, as do all the Caribbean islands seething and surging toward a different 21st century.

In commemoration to the music artists in the area, Walker has transposed the movement of the music to movement in line. Marion Brown arching back, stretching his suspenders, lets his saxophone touch the sun. Charles Majeed Greenlee plays straight-on making rocket communication seem static. Master drummer, Max Roach looks over a green kite nose while his hand on a closer plane fuels shock waves of rhythm. Vishnu Wood embraces his bass with one hand that is yellow with red nails while the other is red with yellow nails. "Po Rasan" hears and sees through his instruments. A rainbow arc of music is gleaned from Shepp's mouth, extending its cry through the saxophone, while a strong angular hand adds more nuances. Lady Day in "Strange Fruit" stands in front of a Jook Box (thanks Zora Neale) and her vocals overflow with notes that haunt and caress. These panels in tempera and crayon are what Fitz Walker would like to see in a public place — so all can hear visually from these greats in music.

The Office of Internships offers Black and other Third World students the opportunity to work on an internship off campus as part of their academic program. Students can elect to either organize a 40 hour per week or part time experience. The arrangements are made with the help of a counselor from the Office of Internships and the cooperation of a faculty person who sponsors the student's project. Participating students receive academic credit (1-15) from the University while maintaining close contact with their faculty sponsor and internship coordinator. The internship gives students the opportunity to design a creative and possibly fulfilling experience which will be the basis for future decisions about courses, graduate school and careers.

Internships are listed for over 700 agencies. Students can also create their own internships. The host agency will make a contract with the student and the Office of Internships to provide an orientation, supervision and evaluation of the student's work. Many students are able to use the contacts they make during the internship to advance their plans for graduate school or a career.

During the actual internship the Office of Internships offers supportive counseling and seminars designed to help the student integrate their work experience with their University courses. Staff members visit full time students at their work site and discuss the experience with both the student and the agency supervisor.

Many students find the internship semester one of the most meaningful and exciting experiences they have during their undergraduate studies.

During the last year the Office of Internships has made a special effort to locate agencies interested in helping the professional development of students with a particular interest in Black and other Third World people's needs. These agencies include the office of Senator Julian Bond in Atlanta Georgia, the Black Caucus in Washington, D.C., the Black Caucus in Boston, the African-American Institute in New York City, the African Bibliographic Center in Washington, D.C. and many others including the Elma Lewis School for the Performing Arts. The possibilities are only limited by the creativity, persistence and work which the students is willing to put into making the internship possible.

If you want to know more about how to make arrangements for a part time or full time internship call the Office of Internships, 545-0727 for an apppointment with one of the counselors. Information meetings are open to all Black and other Third World Students: Tuesdays 11:15-12 noon, Tuesdays 1:25-2:15, Wednesdays 10:10-11:00, Fridays 12:20-1:10.

Note: Counseling Deadline for Summer and Fall Semester is April 29, 1978.

Anti-Bakke Group Mobilizes For April March On Washington

Several anti-Bakke groups are planning a mass march on Washington on April 15 in an effort to overturn the Bakke decision. The march, which is being organized by the Anti-Bakke Planning Committee, is expected to include such groups as the Black American Law Students Association, the National Lawyers Guild, the Peoples Alliance, the Anti-Bakke Decision Coalition and the National Committee to Overturn the Bakke Decision and their member organizations, as well as other anti-Bakke organizations.

The March on Washington will focus on four slogans — Overturn the Bakke Decision, Unite Against Racism and National Oppression, Fight for Full Equality for Women, and Support and Expand Affirmative Action on the Job and in Education.

These plans will be a major high point of activity in support of affirmative action programs in education and industry that are under attack because of the Bakke decision and other lawsuits relying on Bakke.

This decision of the California Supreme Court, if upheld by the U.S. Supreme Court, would lay the foundation for the dismantling of thousands of affirmative action programs for minorities and women that have been established as a result of the struggles for equality that the civil rights and women's movements have been waging. If the California Supreme Court's decision is upheld it would legitimize the absurd and racist concept of "reverse discrimination" that seeks to make the victim of racism and national oppression look like its perpetuators.

The various anti-Bakke groups also expressed the importance of linking up with other on-going struggles against racism and national oppression taking place on the campuses, in communities and in workplaces at this time.

The April 15 Anti-Bakke Planning Committee agreed that there would be the broadest possible outreach to other organizatons and individuals to involve them in the work of organizing the March on Washington.

Hoover Wanted Mob To Hit Gregory

Former FBI director J. Edgar Hoover once suggested that organized crime associates be used to "neutralize" Black comedian activist Dick Gregory, according to recently released FBI documents.

Gregory responded to the news last week by stating that "This did not happen to just me, Dick Gregory. It has happened to Black groups across the nation and it has not stopped," Gregory said he plans to sue the FBI.

In a 1968 memo contained in 13,000 pages of FBI documents from the Chicago area, Hoover said that "Gregory has traveled all over the country preaching Black nationalist extremism, hatred and violence ...

"Chicago should review Gregory's file and his current activities to develop counter-intelligence designed to neutralize him. This should not be in the nature of an expose, since he already gets far too much publicity. Instead, sophisticated, completely untraceable means of neutralizing Gregory should be developed."

The memo then goes on to state that organized crime figures, once called by Gregory the "filthiest snakes that exist on this earth," should be enlisted to help attack the Black activist.

Russia Names Tanker For Robeson

A Russian press agency disclosed last week that that country would name one of its new tankers for Paul Robeson.

This measure is in recognition of Paul Robeson as the outstanding American singer, prominent antifascist and Lenin Peace Prize winner, the press agency said. The new Soviet vessel will make her maiden voyage in a year.

Soviet people know the name of Paul Robeson well and highly appreciate him as a distinguished artist, prominent progressive political and public figure and peace champion. As a world-famous artist, he first visited the Soviet Union in 1934 and came to the USSR many times thereafter.

Rug burns found

Concert causes FAC damage

By SEAN HORGAN
Collegian Staff

An inspection of the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall following last Wednesday's Geils concert has revealed extensive burn damage done to the hall's rugs during the show, which could cost thousands of dollars to repair according to a Fine Arts Center spokesperson.

Barbara A. Aldridge, manager of the concert hall, last night said the inspection turned up more than 400 burns in the concern hall's rugs.

"I'm sure not all the burns can be attributed to the Geils thing," she said, "but there were many, many more than usual."

Aldridge said she could not give an exact estimate of the cost to repair the damage, but said she has been told the repair cost averages $15 per burn. That would place the repair bill at approximately $6,000.

Officials at the Fine Arts Center placed the blame for the damage on the type of audience attending the Geils show.

David Letters, publicity director for the Fine Arts Center, said the blame for the damage did not lie with the security force.

"We had increased the size of security in anticipation of trouble, so the fault didn't rest with the security," he said. "Instead, it rested with the fact the audience had no respect for the security workers or the Fine Arts Center."

Dr. John Jenkins, acting director of the Fine Arts Center, said a large percentage of the audience was made up of high school students and other persons not affiliated with the University.

Jenkins is still awaiting reports concerning the damage, but he said preliminary indications show the damage occurred despite the best efforts of the security force.

Jenkins said he should have all reports sometime today. He also said he will not make any decisions regarding future rock concerts in the Fine Arts Center until all the reports have been received.

"We have no desire to preclude the performance of any type of music in the hall, but we will have to take steps to insure that it is controlled better next time," Jenkins said.

Jenkins also said he had heard of other complaints of damage done in the Fine Arts Center the night of the concert, but Acting Director of Security Saul L. Chafin said no such reports had been received.

Aldridge said the sponsoring organization of the concert will be responsible for the repair bill once a final estimate is completed. The Geils concert was sponsored by the Union Program Council.

No spokesperson for the program council could be reached for comment.

Israel offers new self-determination formula

TEL AVIV, Israel [compiled from wire services] — Israel offered a new formula yesterday for Mideast peace talks and Deputy Prime Minister Yigael Yadin called it a "far-reaching step" toward Egypt's demand for Palestinian self-determination.

The proposal calls for the "participation" of West Bank and Gaza Strip Palestinians in determining their own future. It edges Israel slightly closer to President Anwar Sadat's demands and to a U.S.-proposed compromise formula.

But there was no firm sign of an imminent breakthrough in reviving the stalled Israeli-Egyptian peace talks, though it was reported Israel was considering sending Defense Minister Ezer Weizman to Egypt to reopen negotiations on a possible Israeli withdrawal from the Sinai Peninsula.

In Cairo, the Egyptian and Saudi Arabian foreign ministers urged diplomats attending an Arab League meeting to unify Arab ranks in order to force Israel to give up occupied lands and allow creation of a Palestinian homeland.

The bitterest opponents of Sadat's peace overtures to Israel — Syria, Algeria, Libya, South Yemen and Iraq — stayed away from the meeting. But the Palestine Liberation Organization was represented, despite a PLO spokesman's insistence in Lebanon that the organization would not attend.

About 25 per cent of the projected 4,000-man U.N. force now has arrived in Lebanon, U.N. officials said. French paratroopers are on the western front, near the Palestinian-controlled city of Tyre, Iranians in the central sector, above the strategic Kakia Bridge over the Litani River and Swedes in the east, based near the town of Marjayoun.

In Tel Aviv, the military command denied reports from Beirut of heavy artillery and rocket duels in southern Lebanon and described the mountainous region as "generally quiet."

It denied that Israel had shelled Hasbaya, a Palestinian stronghold at the eastern sector of the front.

"There is no firing going on between the terrorists and us," a military spokesman said.

A Kuwait newspaper, Al-Siyassa, quoting sources close to the Palestinian command, reported that Syria has given assurances to the Palestinian guerrillas that they will be allowed to operate against Israel across the cease-fire line in the Golan Heights.

Israel invaded southern Lebanon March 15 in order to take away the guerrillas' prime base for attacking the Jewish state.

Barenberg to propose 'coalition government'

By JON KLEIN
Collegian Staff

The third place winner in the student government popular election said yesterday he is willing to form a "coalition government" with the first place winners in the popular election held on March 15 and 16.

David Barenberg, who ran in the popular election with Susan Birmingham, said he will propose the "coalition government" at the electoral convention tomorrow night.

Barenberg will also propose that the convention vote for a second popular election instead of choosing a president in the convention. If this plan fails, Barenberg said he will then examine the possibilities of forming a ticket with Shelly Gordon and Herb Tyson. Under Barenberg's plan, only his ticket and the Gordon-Tyson team would be on the popular election ballot.

Tyson said he "would support a general election" proposal. But he said he wants to "see what the alternatives are" before committing himself to forming a new ticket.

One of the matters that needs to be worked out is that both of the candidacies involved have two people on each ticket. In the event of a coalition ticket, one candidate from each ticket would have to withdraw from the race.

The electoral convention is being held because none of the candidates in the popular election took one-third of the vote. Gordon and Tyson placed first, the none-of-the-above choice took second and Barenberg and Birmingham took third.

"The electoral college will be a zoo and make a farce of the office," said Barenberg. He added "people will do underhanded things" at the convention. "If we have a focused campaign (with only two candidates) people will get to know who the candidates are," said Barenberg.

But Barenberg said "there are a lot of problems with the general election in terms of logistics."

Tyson said "the last thing I wanted was for it to go to an electoral convention." He added that "the politics of a convention are nothing more than a coalition."

The convention was originally scheduled for Thursday night in Boyden Gymansium but was rescheduled yesterday for tomorrow at 9 p.m. in the Hatch. Only those with convention credentials will be allowed on the floor, according to convention rules.

The convention was rescheduled because the Southwest Residential area delegation had a time conflict with events in their residential area on Thursday night.

The Stockbridge appeal; not just farmers

By MARTHA KIMBALL
Collegian Staff

Just as the school trained farmers during World War I, the Stockbridge School of Agriculture continues to educate its students in practical agriculture.

Established in 1918, the original purpose of the Stockbridge School of Agriculture was to train farmers to produce food for World War I. Short courses were offered in all phases of agriculture. Later Stockbridge became a two year certificate program, and in 1966, was approved to grant an associate degree to its students.

Stockbridge offers programs in various fields of agriculture emphasizing hands-on training in its instruction. The school is a division of the College of Food and Natural Resources with a current enrollment of 520 students and presently headed by Dean John W. Denison.

Majors and courses offered by Stockbridge encompass the following departments: Plant and Soil Science, Animal Science, Agriculture Engineering, Food and Resource Economics, Arboriculture and Park Management, Entomology, and Landscape Operations. Often faculty in the various departments teach both Stockbridge and University classes. Some courses consist of both University and Stockbridge students.

Students must apply separately to Stockbridge. Admission to the University does not grant admission to Stockbridge and vice versa.

Regarding admissions, Denison said, "We stress motivation, the goals and desires of the applicant, and the student's ability to survive here academically. Some students turn on like Christmas trees when they come here because they're doing something they enjoy. We give those students with a strong desire the opportunity."

People from varied backgrounds are now entering the agriculture spectrum. No longer are the farmer's son or the farmer's daughter the only young people enrolling in agriculture schools.

Iona Reynolds, assistant dean of Stockbridge, said, "We have all sorts of people applying to Stockbridge, including older students and students from the cities."

Denison said, "There has been a change in young people's perception of agriculture. They believe it's a nicer way to live. The students that come to Stockbridge know what they want to do, yet we cannot forget the students with an interest who are not sure of their future."

"The two year program fills a niche in the educational system. It offers a general understanding, whereas the four year school is geared towards research. We teach the hows and not all the whys. There is less theory," Denison said.

Denison continued, "We try to offer a complete set of opportunities. About 25 to 30 per cent of the students do continue their education to obtain a bachelor's degree."

Regarding student success of landing jobs upon graduation from Stockbridge, Denison said, "The job market is good to excellent, but it depends upon the student and whether or not they want to move. The jobs are there; people just have to scratch. In fact, nationwide we have more job opportunities for those students in Turf Management than we can fill."

"The relationship between the university administration and Stockbridge has had excellent improvement," said Denison. "We have come from the Dark Ages of the 'get rid of agriculture' attitude. The university held on to the agricultural school. Many people still wanted to know how."

Looking towards the future Denison spoke of constructive change. "We change all the time and must work closely with industry and young people's desires although they may not fit with the faculty. Stockbridge still must train people for good solid business," Denison said.

"In the future more people will be involved in preserving the land for agriculture. Stockbridge must recognize the movement of alternative agriculture," Denison said. Alternative agriculture stresses the use of organic farming methods and encourages production by the small farmers.

Denison does not foresee growth in the school's enrollment unless a tremendous increase in demands occurs. "I feel we are at a top now in agriculture interest as far as student enrollment is concerned."

NE Vet School gains leaders support

By MARTHA KIMBALL
Colllgian Staff

The proposed New England Regional Veterinary School at Tufts University is picking up momentum as legislative leaders speak out in its support.

The Caucus of New England Legislatures gave support to the vet school at its meeting held earlier this month in Providence, Rhode Island.

The Caucus, comprised of one person from each of the six New England legislatures, endorsed Tufts' plans for a veterinary school and will work with Tufts to facilitate necessary legislation in establishing a contract system between the New England states and the vet school.

Senate minority leader John Parker, R-Bristol and Massachusetts' representative at the Caucus meeting, said, "All New England states agree with Tufts' vet school proposal and will support the contract system. Contracting is a good way to go academically instead of the state handling it. I wish Harvard or Boston University had gone that route with the medical schools."

"This vet school is not just for cats and dogs as many people think. It will be handling fish, horses, cattle and the food supply as well. The school will be a great public and regional asset," Parker said.

Henry T. Wilson, director of public relations at Tufts Medical Center, said, "Approval of the vet school by the Tufts Board of Trustees on April 29 would authorize Tufts' president to formally establish the vet sccool, form a visiting advisory committee consisting of national leaders in veterinary medicine, proceed with recruitment of faculty and the admissions process, begin negotiating with state legislatures for contracts, and allow private fund raising."

Over the past year Tufts has received support from the New England Board of Governors, and a $10 million grant from the federal Department of Health, Education and Welfare for planning and construction of the school.

States must contract with Tufts University for a number of student seats at the vet school. Money must be appropriated by the state legislatures to sponsor students.

Private funding and tuition will support the vet school. Other than the expense of contracts, Tufts is not asking for money from the New England states. Estimates for the overall vet school budget and contracted seats is confidential until the trustees vote later in April.

The vet school program involves spending the first two years at the Tufts Medical Center in Boston. Third year study will be spent in small animal clinical work at Angel Memorial Hospital in Boston, and in large animal clinical work at Grafton State Hospital. The Grafton facilities were donated by the state, but renovations and additional contruction will be funded by Tufts.

The objective of the New England Veterinary School is to provide a vet school with a large percentage of New England students enrolled. Twenty-five per cent of the seats is estimated to be reserved for students from other states and foreign countries. The first class is expected to enter in 1979.

Men protest porn tonight

A protest vigil and teach-in will be held by Men Against Rape and Violence at tonight's showing of 'Inserts,' an X-rated film sponsored by Wheeler Dorm.

The film, which stars Richard Dreyfuss, will be shown tonight at 6:00, 8:15, and 10:30 at the CCA. One spokesman from MARV said that protestors will simply ask patrons to think about the film and hand out leaflets. "We will be approaching peoples dignity, not assailing them," said the spokesman.

Bill Taylor, Associate Director of Orchard Hill and Central, said that the film was not pornography but a satirical parody on the making of pornographic films. "They (the protestors) don't understand what the film is about," said Taylor. "Or they don't give the students credit for being thinking individuals."

Taylor is the supervisor of Steven Bauer, head of residence for Wheeler Dorm, who would not comment.

MARV says they see pornography as a crime against women and that it encourages acts of sexual violence against all women. This is the organization's first public action.

House probes med school

The legislative subcommittee investigating state building contracts yesterday began closed-door hearings into the University of Massachusetts Medical School project in Worcester.

The panel, chaired by Rep. Gerald M. Cohen, D-Andover, will be investigating additional payments, beyond those originally budgeted, made to contractors working on the project.

According to the story, there have been 292 change orders approved by the state Bureau of Building Construction since the original contract was awarded to the Vappi Construction Co. in October of 1972.

The Cohen panel is currently investigating the state's contract with McKee-Berger-Mansueto (MBM), the firm hired to oversee the $135 million UMass-Boston project.

Job offers plentiful

Job opportunities for college graduates at the bachelor's level appear more plentiful for the second year in a row, according to the job placement staff at UMass.

The report on a survey by the College Placement Council shows the number of job offers made to bachelor's degree candidates by business, industrial and government employers is running 31 per cent ahead of last March. UMass participated in the national survey.

The job outlook for graduate-degree candidates is less promising this year, however. Offers to master's degree candidates show a slight national decline, and those to doctoral candidates are about the same as a year ago.

Student escorts Rabin

A UMass student recently chauferred former Israeli Prime Minister Yithak Rabin during Rabin's visit to Massachusetts.

Jim Braver drove Rabin around during Rabin's visit in and around Boston, which included a speech at the Blue Hill Country Club in Canton.

Braver said he was able to drive for Rabin because his uncle, Martin Goldenberg, coordinated Rabin's visit.

Rabin was driven around in a Lincoln-Continental, Braver said. Rabin called for "defensible borders" for Israel in his speech.

Ombudsman helps all

University Ombudsman Robert Wellman last week said his job is to assist petitioners in the just settlement of grievances concerning the structure and function of the University.

Grievances can be brought by anyone — students, staff, or faculty.

The University Ombudsman is a member of the faculty, but not an administrator or decision-maker. He has access to all offices on campus, however, and is free of constraints and pressures from all groups.

The Ombudsman's office is in Room 821 Campus Center.

Chem. Eng. awarded grant

The UMass departments of Chemical Engineering and Polymer Science earlier this month received grants totaling $10,500 from E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Company of Wilmington, Del.

Dr. Calvin Moyer, college relations supervisor for the firm, delivered the grant to Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery. The UMass—Amherst campus last year acquired more than $12,000,000 in non-state funded grants and contracts for research in all academic areas.

Souweine to run for DA

A former Amherst resident and the former director of Mass PIRG in Amherst is expected to announce his candidacy for Hampshire-Franklin County District attorney at Amherst Town Hall today.

Jonathon Souweine, who attended UMass for one year in 1965 before transferring to Columbia University, will be leaving his post as Assistant Attorney General today and will then hold a news conference to make his expected announcement.

Souweine said that while he worked in the Western Masschusetts regional office of the Attorney General he prosecuted "mostly white collar crime."

Souweine joins a crowded field to replace current District Attorney John M. Callahan who is not seeking re-election.

UMass chaplain yanked

A chaplain from the UMass Newman Center was pulled out of a St. Patrick's Day parade last week for wearing a "Peace in Northern Ireland" sash.

Reverend J. Joseph Quigley and 10 other people from a Northampton group were pulled from the parade in Holyoke. The priest filed a complaint with the parade committee which said the group had violated rules banning political statements or banners.

NEAG won't endorse

The Northeast Area Government failed to endorse a Student Government Association presidential ticket during their meeting last night.

Carol Nanley, N.E. Area Government secretary, told the Collegian "The indecision was final." She also said there was no quorum at the meeting.

In terms of the Electoral Convention which is to be held tomorrow night at 9 p.m. in the Hatch coffee shop, this means that the individual officers of the N.E. Area Government will vote as they please when they select the SGA president(s) for the upcoming school year.

Traditionally, the SGA president has been sworn in April 1st. But informed sources are as yet unsure as to whether or not the procedure will be changed due to the calamity that has surrounded this year's presidential elections.

Avi Nelson begins his sen. race

BOSTON [UPI] — Avi Nelson, a conservative talk show host, Monday began his campaign to unseat Sen. Edward W. Brooke in the September Republican primary, charging Brooke was out of touch with GOP regulars and the party's principles.

For several months, national conservatives have been urging Nelson, 35, to enter the race against Brooke.

Brooke's support of court-ordered busing and abortion and, most recently, the Panama Canal Treaties have made the two-term incumbent a major target of the GOP right wing.

"He has lost touch with the Republican Party and republican principles," Nelson said at a news conference.

"Ed Brooke is an equivocator. He straddles. A senator cannot be all things to all people. Ed Brooke has tried. He has ended up satisfying no one, and fooling no one," he added.

Nelson is a Brookline resident who narrowly lost the GOP primary in a race against Rep. Robert Drinan, D-Mass., in his last political outing in 1972.

Nelson said he opposes affirmative action and the Panama Canal Treaty, two issues Brooke supports, and feels the United States "ought to be leveraging against Anwar Sadat" to force a bilateral solution to the Middle East situation.

To date, at least $7,000 of the $80,000 raised by the friends of Avi Nelson has come from Washington-based national conservative groups, $5,000 from the conservative Political Action Committee and $2,000 from the committee for the Survival of a Free Congress.

Nelson estimated the primary challenge to Brooke would cost $700,000. In January, Terry Dolan of NCPAC, said his group's mailing list could raise at least $500,000 for Nelson's campaign.

But when reminded Monday of that claim, Dolan said, "Oh, no. Our mailing list would raise about $20,000—$30,000."

Dolan refused to rule out the possibility NCPAC would make its staff and mailing list available for Nelson's campaign, although neither had been requested.

Paul Weyrich of CSFC said his group had never made its mailing list available to candidates but added it was "conceivable" CSFC staff support would be donated to Nelson's campaign.

Miners back at work, smooth operation

[AP] — Thousands of miners ripped coal out of the earth yesterday for the first time in 112 days, bringing an end to the nation-wide soft coal strike for most of the industry.

Reports from across the coal fields showed that operations were beginning to return to normal as United Mine Workers donned their hardhats, shouldered picks, boarded heavy equipment and went back to work for their first payday since the strike by 160,000 union members began Dec. 6.

But for others it was a different story. Some miners, who wanted to get back to work and found mine construction workers picketing, followed the time-honored coal country tradition of observing picket lines.

"I was on my way up the hollow when the pickets turned me back," said James Darby, an electrician for the Valley Camp Coal Co. in West Virginia. Mines also remained closed in Illinois, Indiana, Kentucky, Ohio, and Pennsylvania.

Meanwhile, negotiations for a new contract for the 10,000 mine construction workers were going on in Washington, where both sides reported they were closing in on an agreement. "We are making good progress," an industry representative said.

The workers, who build mine shafts and other facilities, are believed to be seeking a contract similar to the one approved by the miners.

The majority of the nation's mines were open by the 8 a.m. shift. Eastern Associated Coal Co. said only one of its 17 West Virginia mines was shut. Consolidated Coal Co. said 38 of its 51 mines across the country were open. U.S. Steel and Bethlehem Steel both reported that the morning turnout was good at the total of 46 mines in three states that they operate.

"We're back to work," a U.S. Steel spokesman said. "It's been a very smooth operation so far."

Despite the scattered shutdowns, most areas said they expected some shipments of coal would start heading to coal-short utilities by the end of the day. It will take an estimated two weeks or three weeks, though, before normal production and shipping resume.

This could be slowed if the construction workers widen their picketing efforts.

The miners who were back on the job yesterday were paid a $100 bonus for returning to work, $100 for their year's clothing allowance and earned approximately $80 for the day's labor.

HARMARVILLE, Pa. (UPI) — Sheryl Haley of Lower Burrell, Pa., a mine track repairer, is "glad to be back." Even though she found part of the contract not to her liking, she said, "the pay is fine."

Yippies announce smoke-in, police seek cooperation

They're at it again.

Posters announcing a Yippie (Youth International Party) sponsored by "Amherst Smoke-In" on April 22 were hung throughout Southwest Sunday, and the rest of the campus Monday. The advertisements do not give the site of the smoke-in but say to "gather in front of the Fine Arts Center at 'high noon'."

National magazine Yipster Times in its March issue, however, gives the Amherst Commons as the location of the event.

Russel Swan, a Peirpont sophomore who organized a smoke-in which was canceled last semester, denied that he was organizing this smoke-in. The Yipster Times lists Swan as the person to contact for information.

"It's being centrally coordinated — Amherst is just one stop on the Yippie National Spring Smoke-in Tour," Swan said, adding, "There will be smoke-ins this spring at Kent State, New York, and Montreal."

Swan said at this time no site has been determined and no permit has been obtained. "Amherst Commons is only a possible site; the University itself is another possibility." Swan hopes that the site will be announced next week, as well as the names of the bands appearing at the event. Swan did not say who would be making the announcement.

Amherst Police Chief Donald Maia said that he hopes to be contacted by organizers so that they may "coordinate efforts", and to see if they're "conducting it as it should be conducted."

Swan told the Collegian that 1000 smoke-in posters have been printed and are already hanging in Boston, Springfield, Worcester, and Lowell. 5000 more posters, being printed by High Times Magazine, will be hung within the next few weeks.

A similarly billed smoke-in scheduled for October 27, 1977, was canceled by Swan after he met with Northampton attorney David Kaplan and Chief Maia. Swan cited "legal problems" as the cause for the cancellation, but foresees no such complications affecting this smoke-in.

"The last smoke-in failed because we planned it only one week in advance," said Swan. The spring Smoke-in has been in planning since December and has national backing.

Swan called this smoke-in a "united effort" with people both on and off campus working on it. Swan says this smoke-in will take place, and, as predicted of the last smoke-in, will be "highly successful."

Central gets new offices, special event funds tabled

Co-Presidents Cindy and Arty Thomas, Vice-President Paul Washburn, and Treasurer Mark Zinan held their first Central Area Council meeting last night, as newly elected officers.

Cindy Thomas said "We will work from an agenda, and we hope to stick to each point so the meetings will run better and quicker."

Zinan former council president, gave his first treasury report and said there is presently $1426.21 in the Council account.

The Council appropriated $50 for a Brooks coffeehouse on April 14.

Dan Cohen, representative for the Coalition for Environmental Quality asked for $200 to aid in the expenses of two upcoming events, Earth Day, April 14 and Sun Day May 3.

Earth Day celebrates the environment. Cohen said "Earth Day is to make people aware of issues like recycling, nuclear power, and solar energy. Activities include, films, wood technology displays, canoe races in the campus pond, and a hang gliding demonstration."

Sun Day is a nationwide event which will include solar distributor displays, energy conservation methods, and other alternative energy methods.

The allocation of these funds was tabled until next week.

Council representatives discussed the way the vote will be handled at the upcoming electoral convention. At least 12 representatives must be present in order for Central to be recognized. Other representatives are being asked to attend to insure that 12 are present.

Cindy and Arty Thomas, who for the record are not related, said they would like to encourage all Central residents to attend the meetings which are open, and take place Monday at 7:15 p.m. in the Chadbourne seminar room.

Tenants boycott meetings

By FRAN BASCHE
Collegian Staff

One of the two tenant representatives to the Amherst landlord-tenant relations committee told the Amherst Board of Selectmen she has been boycotting committee meetings to protest the way the committee functions.

The boycotting efforts of Mary Wentworth and the other tenant representative have stymied committee action on complaints because a quorum including tenant representatives is needed to process complaints.

The two representatives have boycotted the past five committee meetings.

The chairman of the relations committee, asked the board to appoint two new representatives so the committee could begin to review complaints. He said the two women would not resign.

Wentworth said the committee should have dealt with the non-cooperation of landlords in committee decisions. She said the committee lacked the power to enforce its decisions, citing a case where a tenant may have to go to court to collect money the committee determined was owed him, because his landlord has not cooperated with the decision.

"We need the power to back decisions," Wentworth said.

Wentworth said by boycotting the committee, it has prevented making pro-landlord decisions. She said resigning would not have accomplished anything because another representative would have been faced from the same problems.

Board member Nancy B. Eddy said she felt a boycott was not an effective way to change the committee. "The town meeting is the place to do this," she said.

The selectmen asked Wentworth to meet with them next Monday to discuss the problem more fully before the May town meeting.

Boardmember Daniel Reed said the Selectmen's place should be "procedural" rather than "substantive". "We should be concerned about whether the committee is functioning or not — if we get into the substance we're cutting into the committee's business."

The selectmen also heard from the Amherst Taxpayers Association whose questions concerned the town's latest property re-evaluation.

Members of the committee questioned the cost of the latest revaluation, the method of choosing the firm which handled the reassessment what "fair value" means and whether taxpayers have a right to know how their property valuation was arrived at.

Dorothy Robinson, chairwoman of the board of assessors answered several of the Association's queries. She said the firm of McGee and Magane was chosen because it was the lowest bidder. During the latest revaluation the assessors converted to using a computer, feeding information based on records previous assessors had kept.

Robinson said the state determines "fair market value," which is calculated using factors such as age, type of house, and buying trends.

"You can't lose sight of the fact that we're required by law to put it (the assessment) at full fair market value," Robinson said. The assessment decides the amount of property tax a home owner is expected to pay.

A Van Meter Drive resident, William Rice said he thinks the valuations are unfair. Rice said the assessors should revaluate the property of residents who should be paying more. "I don't enjoy paying my share of taxes when a neighbor may not be paying his share," Rice said.

TREBEURDEN, France (UPI) — Soldier and rescue workers build sand walls on the Trebeurden beach yesterday to prevent pollution caused by spilling oil from the supertanker Amoco Cadiz. French Navy experts ruled out a plan to pump the remaining 20,000 tons or more of crude oil from the wrecked tanker, the ship's American owners announced. The spill is reported to be the worst oil spill in history, and some Frenchmen estimate that the beaches may take up to ten years to return to normal.

Belchertown concerned with land, dogs, bridges

By DICK BARRELL
Collegian Staff

BELCHERTOWN — Efforts to obtain land for a new school, dog licenses, and bridge repairs were on the agenda of the Belchertown Selectmen last night.

The land for the new school is part of a parcel of some 140 acres of land at Belchertown State School which borders Routes 21 and 202. Selectmen said they have had a favorable response in discussing the proposal with members of the legislature. The town is now in the process of drawing up the bill for the legislature which will be prepared by Town Counsel Stephen B. Monsein.

According to William G. Whitlock, chairman of the Board of Selectmen, dog licenses are now available at town hall.

Whitlock said that over 1,100 were issued in 1977 setting a record for the town.

Whitlock said dog owners should come in and obtain licenses for their dogs and thereby avoid possible legal problems.

Licenses which range in price from $3-6 may be obtained from the town clerk.

Selectmen said that negotiations are underway with the town of Ware concerning repairs to the red bridge which spans the Swift River between Ware and Belchertown.

According to selectman Richard Cooke the bridge was closed last spring by the town of Ware when the bridge began to sag on the Ware side. Cooke also said that underpinning of the concrete piers had also washed away leaving the bridge in dangerous condition.

The town has applied to the state for funds to repair the bridge, because estimates for repairs ranged up to $25,000, according to selectmen.

Selectmen said Rep. Louis Nickinello, D-Framingham, chairman of the committee on transportation, suggested that the two towns split the cost of repairs with the state.

Under this arrangement, if approved, each town would pay an estimated $6,250 and the state would be $1,250.

Other matters acted on by the board included approval of a request by the Veterans of Foreign Wars to extend the annual fair and endorsement of a request for a grant by the Carriage Town Players.

The annual fair, held in October, sponsored by the VFW, will now run from Friday night until Sunday night, according to the new plan approved last night.

Members of the VFW said while presenting the plan to the board that they planned to include the 4-H Club in the fair this year.

VFW members said that extending the fair will bring in more money to the town and will allow more people to attend.

Members also said they will be hiring an expert to monitor all games and close those "not in the best interest of the town."

The selectmen appointed Ernest M. Gay, Chief of Police, to work with the person monitoring games to insure compliance with town laws.

The Carriage Town Players, a local theater group, asked the selectmen to write a letter of recommendation to support their application for a grant from the Massachusetts Council for Arts and Humanities.

According to a spokesperson for the group, $600 has been requested for an upcoming production of "School for Scandal." Grant money will be used to purchase period costume, wigs, and make-up.

Dorm fire claims its final victim

PROVIDENCE [AP] — Nineteen-year-old Laura Ryan died yesterday at Massachusetts General Hospital, where she was hospitalized following the tragic Dec. 13 dormitory fire at Providence College.

Miss Ryan, a freshman majoring in accounting, was the only coed still hospitalized and the 10th to die from the fire.

A school spokesman said Miss Ryan, a native of Mineola, N.Y., died at 4:04 a.m. in the Boston hospital. She had suffered third-degree burns over 80 per cent of her body.

The blaze, which broke out in the early morning hours was blamed on faulty wiring on Christmas displays in Aquinas Hall, the largest women's dormitory on campus.

Aquinas Hall and other dormitories had been competing in a Christmas decoration contest and hallways were filled with displays, including a nativity scene on the fourth-floor where the blaze erupted.

Twelve other women were injured in the fire and 11 have returned to school. The other is recuperating from injuries at home, according to a Providence College spokesman.

Two of the victims died when they jumped from the fourth floor to the frozen ground below. Seven coeds died the day of the fire and two others died about two weeks later.

Miss Ryan was the daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Robert J. Ryan of Mineola, N.Y.

"The sorrow of our past tragedy is once more renewed in the hearts of all of us with the news of Laura's death," said the Very Rev. Thomas R. Peterson, president of Providence College.

"All of the Providence College family join with me in expressing our sincere sympathy to Dr. and Mrs. Ryan and the other members of the Ryan family. Laura was a most courageous young lady."

Since being taken to Massachusetts General, Miss Ryan had remained in critical condition.

"She, Laura was the last remaining girl in the hospital," said Joe McAleer, school spokesman. "She was the 10th to have died."

Two civilians in a pickup truck were slightly injured. The plane, an F-14 Tomcat, fell short of a runway at Miramar Naval Air Station. The crash was the 15th of an F-14 since it was put into Navy service four years ago, and the seventh crash of an F-14 at Miramar. The Navy offered no explanation for the crash.

Ship owners liable for cleanup

AUGUSTA, Maine [UPI] — A court ruling that cleanup costs for a Norwegian tanker's 1972 oil spill in Casco Bay must be paid by the vessel's owners could force ship owners to improve their equipment and personnel training, Maine officials said yesterday.

The U.S. Supreme Court yesterday declined to hear an appeal by the owners of the 810-foot supertanker Tamano and upheld a 1st U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals ruling which made the owners liable for cleanup costs and prevented the recovery of $2 million they spent.

Marc Guerin, director of the oil conveyance services division of the Maine Environmental Protection Department, said the decision "sets a pretty good scene for the future of oil transportation."

On July 22, 1972, the Tamano struck an underwater ledge and leaked 100,000 gallons of crude oil in Casco Bay. Although the spill was considered minor by supertanker standards, cleanup costs reached $4 million.

The balance of cleanup expenses were incurred by Texaco, which owned the oil and had chartered the Tamamo, and the Coast Guard.

"This decision should put pressure on the owners to keep improving the quality of their ships. It could also make them enforce more rigid standards for their pilots and other personnel," Guerin said.

"It spells out clearly that the ship owners are going to have to keep their own house in order. They'll try new technologies, improved navigational methods and safer oil transportation," he said.

The federal appeals court ruling could also influence the federal governmen to grant the Coast Guard more money for improving passageways used by supertankers docking at terminals in this country, he said.

"This is something the environmental groups might use to fight for safer standards, too," Guerin said.

David Sait, a staffer in the oil conveyance division, said he was a field worker for the department when the spill occurred.

The Supreme Court decision to uphold the lower court ruling supports the Coast Guard, which claimed the navigation of a ship is the responsibility of its pilot, he said.

Navigational aids placed in a harbor by the Coast Guard "are just that — aids, tools for the pilots to use. They are not absolute."

The Tamano's owners said they were exempt — under maritime law — from cleanup costs because the pilot who guided the ship into the bay, Capt. Charles Dunbar of Portland Pilots Inc., was "a third party", and not their employee.

The federal appeals court ruled however, that Dunbar was not a third party in the incident.

Strikes threaten New York bus, rail and newspapers

NEW YORK [AP] — The nation's biggest city could face one of its biggest messes late this week with strikes threatened against its vast rail-and-bus transit system, its most vital commuter railroad and its major daily newspapers.

Transit officials got a temporary restraining order yesterday against a transit strike, and there was already an injunction against a rail walkout. But such legalities have proven ineffective in past confrontations.

The intention of at least one publisher to continue newspaper production without union help if necessary was pointed up Sunday with the printing of a test edition of the New York Post. The 48-page tabloid, which was not for sale, was turned out by management and non-union volunteers to demonstrate they could do the job.

The afternoon Post and the city's two big morning papers, the Daily News and the New York Times, faced Thursday night contract deadlines with 10 unions. Editorial and several craft groups already have authorized strikes.

Of potentially greater public impact, 24 hours later, is the transit deadline. A strike would shut down municipal bus and subway lines and put five private bus companies out of action. Together they carry nearly 5 million passengers every weekday.

The subway and bus workers voted Sunday after Matthew Guinan, president of the Transport Workers Union, said management was still insisting any pay increase had to come out of "give-backs" such as elimination of night differentials, lunch-hour pay and some overtime.

A bus and subway strike crippled the city for 12 days in 1966.

Trainmen on the Long Island Rail Road are set to strike in a dispute over elimination of a second brakeman-ticket puncher on many trains. Management maintains that having a second man is feather-bedding.

A city transit and LIRR strike coming at the same time would mean that no combination of alternate mass transportation would be available.

Police arrest rioters protesting opening of Japanese airport

TOKYO [AP] — Police using a crane and protected by highpressure hoses took over a blockhouse-tower complex yesterday arresting protesters who rioted all weekend trying to block the opening of Japan's new $1 billion Narita airport.

The protesters had built their complex on private land — a 60-foot tower atop a four-story blockhouse, designed to obstruct the flight path of the airport's only completed runway.

About 40 protesters had been holed up there since Saturday, holding off police with firebombs, rocks and steel arrows fired from huge slingshots.

Yesterday police climbed a crane boom and took four demonstrators off the tower. They then cut into the side of the blockhouse, which has doors and windows only in the top, and arrested six more.

Police said there may be a tunnel complex through which other protestors escaped.

Airport foes include environmentalists, farmers who were forced to sell their land for use by the airport and leftists who say it may be used for military purposes. They have vowed to fight until the airport is abandoned.

Their weekend of rioting may have succeeded in postponing opening ceremonies scheduled for Thursday at the airfield 41 miles north of Tokyo. The Japanese cabinet was to decide today whether to put off the opening.

New virus major cause of hepatitis

WASHINGTON [AP] — Scientists say they have the first hard evidence that a previously unknown infectious agent, probably a virus, is responsible for most of the hepatitis people get from blood transfusions.

Government scientists said yesterday that the agent, not recognized as a separate disease entity until recently, has become the most prevalent cause of post-transfusion hepatitis.

This side effect of transfusions, which still affects an estimated 150,000 to 200,000 persons a year, has decreased by 90 per cent in the past 10 years because of a nationwide effort to eliminate commercial blood collecting, the chief source of viruses previously known to cause the liver ailment.

But despite these efforts, post-transfusion hepatitis persists and scientists say the new agent is the culprit.

In the past, the principal cause of post-transfusion hepatitis, once known as serum hepatitis, was a virus called type B. Another less severe virus, called type A, also is implicated.

Tests developed in recent years to screen for evidence of these viruses eliminated them as the cause of most of the remaining post-transfusion hepatitis, indicating that another agent or group of agents was involved.

Because scientists don't know what the agent is, they named the new form of the disease "non-A, non-B hepatitis" for what it isn't.

"About 90 per cent of the post-transfusion hepatitis is caused by non-A, non-B, and the other10 per cent is mostly type B," Dr. Harvey J. Alter of the National Institutes of Health told a news briefing.

"We assume it is another virus, but we have no proof even though it looks and acts like a virus," Alter continued. "And there are indications it could be more than one agent."

Alter and Dr. Edward Tabor of the Food and Drug administration found in independent studies that the new agent is infectious and transmissible to champanzees from human blood.

Parents dispute son's drug treatment

HINGHAM, Mass. [AP] — The parents of Chad Green won the right yesterday to temporarily withhold drug treatment again from their leukemia-stricken son, but the dilemma will be back in court again tomorrow.

Gerald and Diane Green want to treat the 2-year-old boy with a special diet instead of the medicine that they say harms his body and turns him into "a mad animal."

After a hearing in Hingham District Court, Judge Martha Ware said the couple could keep Chad out of the hospital until tomorrow, when the hearing will resume.

Lawyers for Massachusetts General Hospital in Boston argue that the Scituate boy's treatment should continue.

Chad had resumed his leukemia treatment at Massachusetts General last Friday. That return to the hospital was worked out in a hearing Thursday before Judge Ware.

Then the judge ordered a full hearing on the boy's treatment yesterday.

The Greens had withdrawn Chad from chemotherapy, claiming that the side effects were "absolutely disastrous to the human system."

The hospital maintains that the boy's life is in danger unless he gets the drug treatment.

Coast of France

PORTSALL, France [UPI] — French navy divers opened deck hatches of the wrecked supertanker Amoco Cadiz to speed the flow of 30,000 tons of oil remaining in the grounded hulk, the ship's American owners said yesterday.

Harry Rinkema, vice president of Amoco International, said the action was taken Sunday to stop the slow leak of oil from fouling Breton beaches indefinitely and to put an end to the world's worst oil spill.

"All concerned agreed that the plan to remove crude oil from the vessel by pumps... is no longer feasible," Rinkema's statement said. Another plan to blow up the ship also was shelved, an Amoco spokesman said..

Marc Becam, secretary of state for local government and head of the cleanup program, has said that beach cleaning operations, scheduled to go into full swing today may be hampered if the oil flow continued.

Rinkema said, "releasing the remaining oil on board quickly would permit prompt and effective cleanup by crews and equipment already mobilized and in place."

Off Cape Cod

BOSTON [UPI] — A 290-foot cypriot freighter with five "loose" one-ton cylinders of poisonous liquid chlorine gas aboard fought rough seas off Cape Cod yesterday, but was given permission to enter calmer U.S. waters for repairs.

Wary after a recent Florida chlorine gas leak that killed eight persons, the Coast Guard said it had been "highly cautious" before allowing the freighter to enter U.S. waters. Coast Guard spokesman Lt. Herb Williams said the vessel Aghius Nicolaus B was en route from Newfoundland to Cuba with an undetermined number of crew members aboard. No injuries were immediately reported, and "at this point the bottles are not leaking," he said.

"We have been in radio contact with the ship from our Chatham station. Five cylinders of chlorine gas are loose, but we don't know the definition of 'loose'," Williams said.

The ship was carrying a cargo of 115 one-ton cylinders, but most were secure. The Coast Guard reported difficulty obtaining information because of language problems with the ship's Cuban radio operator.

"We're going to let her come inside Cape Cod Bay about eight miles," Williams said. "That will get them out of the worst weather to tie down the bottles."

House stalls corruption bill

BOSTON [UPI] — A special House counsel yesterday suggested the Legislature seek a Supreme Judicial Court opinion of the immunity provisions in a bill setting up a blue ribbon commission to investigate alleged corruption in stage contracts.

John J. Curtin, in an informal briefing to the Judiciary Committee, outlined several problem areas uncovered in his analysis of the legislation creating an 11-member commission with subpoena and immunity granting powers.

Curtin said the bill raised questions of whether the commission could grant blanket immunity from prosecution in exchange for testimony or limited immunity covering only testimony given to the committee.

Curtin said the proposal, filed by Rep. Philip Johnston, D-Marshfield, and Andrew Card, R-Holbrook, also failed to establish safeguards against improper use of immunity that could impede an independent criminal prosecution.

Curtin said he would present a draft report Friday to Speaker Thomas W. McGee, D-Lynn, and House Minority Leader Francis W. Hatch, R-Beverly, and present it to the committee Monday.

Meanwhile, Rep. Gerald Cohen, D-Andover, chairman of the Post Audit and Oversight subcommittee would vote Wednesday on whether to seek disciplinary action against Rep. Gerald Lombard, D-Fitchburg, and a suspended staff aide.

The subcommittee is investigating the state's contract with McKee-Berger-Mansueto to oversee construction of the University of Massachusetts-Boston campus.

Post Audit Staff Director William Finnegan destroyed original copies of minutes of a January 1973 committee meeting that discussed an investigation of MBM's contract.

Lombard suspended himself as House Post Audit Chairman after the admission.

House Judiciary Chairman Michael J. Flaherty, D-Boston, said after Curtin's presentation he doubted the committee would support the bill's key provisions for a special commission with legislative members or one dominated by gubernatorial appointees.

Some members of the committee have suggested the commission appointments be made by the Senate Judiciary committee.

Lease is best solution

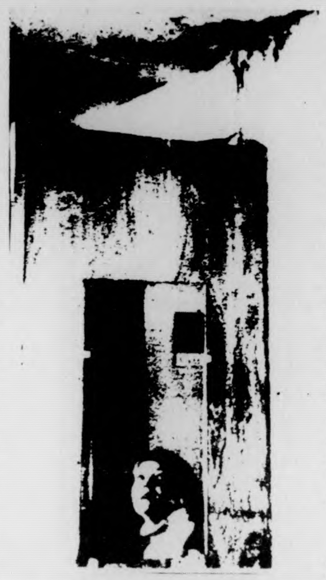
As recent news stories in the Collegian have pointed out, there is a problem on this campus with living conditions in the dormitories. There are leaky roofs, cracked walls, moldy showers, heating irregularities, exposed electrical wires, broken windows, and worst of all, grave danger of lives being lost in fires. Students are human beings, who have the same rights to health and safety that the general public has, despite the UMass administration's ignorance of this fact.

At the recent hearings in Boston, Rep. Philip Shea, D. Lowell accused Chancellor Bromery of "terrific mismanagement" in regards to the deterioration of the dorms at UMass. He is, of course, right about this, but should not have singled out Bromery, who merely heads a group of administrators who disregard not only student interests, but the interests of the University as a whole.

The problem is that students are not represented in the power structure that governs UMass. As long as this situation remains we cannot only be assured of poor living conditions but we may also be sure to have the quality of our educations decline at every level.

The fact that the students at this university are not at all represented by their so called "government" does not bode well for any initiative to get a student voice in the present student-excluding administration. There is, however, a proposal initiated by the Student Organizing Project to get the students involved in a lease agreement with the University when they rent a room on campus, enabling them to personally initiate grievances concerning their living conditions, and have some legal backing in getting their living spaces kept in good condition. This seems to be the best solution to the related problems of no student real representation in the decision making process and the unhealthy dorm conditions.



The problem is this solution covers living conditions only, leaving such questions as the direction of educational programs, the future of minority programs, the allocation of Trust Fund money, the allocation of Financial Aid, and numerous other student concerns to an unsympathetic administration and a bankrupt student government. Surely now is the time to get our voices heard, as with every year the legislature and the Governor in collusion with the UMass administration, impose budgetary and curricular restrictions on higher education in this state. The Student Senate and the Area Governments might do well to consider this larger problem when they get together Thursday to decide the future SGA presidency, and use the opportunity of a convention to question whether or not the SGA in its present form can do anything about these issues.

Men's center offers counseling

To the Editor:

The South West Men's Center [SWMC] announces the availability of its counseling services to the local community of men.

A "Men's Counseling Collective" has recently been developed with the supervision of Richard Halgin, a faculty member of the UMass psychology department and one of the clinical supervisors at the Psychological Services Center.

Run by four students who also work at SWMC, this counseling collective hears a variety of men's needs such as alcohol and drug-related problems, relationships and sexuality, adjustment to university life, and family hassles.

"What is unique about this service," explains one of the counselors "is the special attention given to sexuality and the 'male role.' As we men are confronted by the problems of sexism and a class-oppressive society many of our personal beliefs and behaviors are called to question. We need a safe place to air our frustrations. We need a fresh look at alternatives and the room to realize the care and courage needed to risk change. The Men's Counseling Collective offers this kind of support!"

The overall focus of the counseling services is peer — short term — appointment counseling. Drop-in counseling is also available at SWMC weekdays from 12 to 5 p.m. Appointments are arranged by interview or by calling SWMC at 545-0263.

Film, Inserts, satires porn

To the Editor:

I applaud the philosophy behind a group which would call itself Men Against Rape and Violence, but I cannot help feel as though its energies are largely wasted on protesting a film such as Inserts. Inserts is a film which explores exploitation but is not itself exploitive. It is rather a witty, intelligent, and incisive satire of pornography. As Vincent Canby wrote in his review in the New York Times [2-28-76], "Although Inserts has been rated X, it is not pornographic itself. It's a beautifully acted, tough-talking comedy that, at its wildest moments, manages to evoke the comedies of the late Joe Orton. It won't warm the heart, but its bleakness is almost buoyant."

What distinguishes a film such as Inserts from other films shown on campus and, inexplicably, not protested [such as A Clockwork Orange or Taxi Driver*] is its tone. It attempts to distance the viewer from its subject matter by the use of irony; camera techniques such as cross-cutting between the film itself and views of the porno film being made; the script which also maintains an unambiguous perspective on the "meat" syndrome of a porno flick; and the performances — characters so exaggerated as to make us feel as though the actors and actresses are winking at us.*

We are led to believe, as the film opens, that what we are to see is a standard porno flick — on screen a graphic sexual act is being portrayed and the sound-over contains male voices howling and yelling: the soundtrack itself mocks us, or our expected response. Thus we are immediately given an objective measure against which the film itself must be judged. This is true of the film's most potentially objectionable scene as well — the filmed rape of Harlene within the porno flick being made. At the end of the scene Harlene [and Insert's director and writer, John Byrum] are laughing not only at Rex but at the audience as well. To dismiss the argument that this aspect of the film is highly charged would be ridiculous; it is upsetting and simultaneously erotic, but viewed in its context and with the hints the film gives, it finally is neither exploitive nor does it advocate that attitude toward women [look at the attitude the film has toward those who would go see a porno film.] Irony is the important term here — and in its cool use of irony Inserts shows how degrading pornography is. People who object to the film's satire, its bold manipulation of provocative material, probably would have thought Jonathan Swift was truly advocating the eating of children in "A Modest Proposal." I would not claim the same level of moral outrage for the makers of Inserts*; I would, however, suggest that the mode of investigation — irony — which they are using is similar to the mode Swift employed. I would further suggest that a university campus is a proper place for the investigation of such irony. Knee-jerk liberalism directed against any one of a number of easy targets has never done anything but aggrandize those whose knees are self-righteously jerking.*

PLO covenant; source of troubles

There is only one nation in the entire world for which there exists a written document that expresses as its goal that nation's disappearance. That nation is Israel and this document is the Palestinian National Covenant.

Much attention has been focused on the spectacular dramatics of President Anwar Sadat's visit to Israel last November. Many words of peace and brotherhood were heard and hopes were high for a Middle East settlement that would leave everyone with smiles and feelings of brighter futures for all parties involved. However, in the orgasmic ecstasies of the past four months one thing has remained constant and that was, and still is, the documented agreement that binds together eight bands of fanatical murderers known as the Palestine Liberation Organization. This agreement, the Palestinian National Covenant, pledges to destroy the State of Israel through an 'armed struggle', and although prior to Sadat's trip the PLO was talking "peace at Geneva" (which earned Yassir Arafat the reputation of being a 'moderate' in the half-opened eyes of the world), this covenant had remained in effect.

The time has come to re-examine the PLO and expose it for what it really is: a murderous, racist, pseudo-revolutionary organization that practices the worst kind of treachery since Nazi Germany.

We have seen in the last few weeks just how much of a 'moderate' Yassir Arafat is. The treacherous attack in Israel that left 32 unarmed Israeli civilians dead, half of them children under the age of 14, was a good example of how this cowardly bunch of gangsters operates. A PLO leader was quoted as saying immediately after the attack, "I couldn't help thinking with admiration for those young people who were ready to sacrifice their lives for the liberation of Palestine." Could he have meant 14-year-old Imri Tel-Oren or 5-year-old Na'ama Hadani, two Israeli children shot to death in the terrorist's attack, or could this demonic fellow have been refering to a captured terrorist, Hussein Ibrahim Mamoud Fayed, who was ready to snuff out lives of innocents. His bloody comments were, "We were prepared to kill men, women and children." Are these the types of people the World expects Israel to sit and reason with?

The Israeli incursion into Lebanon was triggered by the PLO's terrorist attack. This attack was the straw that broke the camel's back. The Israeli response was not just a mere retaliation but a strategic move to increase security along its northern border. Since 1973 the PLO has used Southern Lebanon as a base to launch over 1500 separate raids into Israel. Some were of the type that just occurred, others were of the bomb throwing variety and still others were that of rockets and-or shells being lobbed over the border into northern Israel. The result has been 108 Israelis dead and hundreds more maimed for life. All of these people were unarmed civilians, half were children and, ironically, a good per centage were Israeli Arabs. What is surprising is that Israel waited this long before staging such a large operation as we have just seen. Any other nation would have reacted much, much sooner, but still, world opinion is that of sit down, talk it over and make nice to the PLO! This is a sycophantic idea that no nation should have to abide by.

The Palestinian National Covenant was adopted in May 1964 at the time of the establishment of the PLO. This text was amended in July 1969 and re-ratified in March, 1977. This document is still used as a binding agreement that keeps the eight terrorist gangs in the PLO 'umbrella' together. The chief executioner is Yassir Arafat who is also the head of Al Fatah, the largest group in the PLO and the perpetrators of the latest crime.

Quoting from the Palestinian National Covenant we now will be able to see what the PLO really stands for.

Article 9 of the covenant shows the PLO's stance on peace: "Armed struggle is the only way to liberate Palestine and is therefore strategy and not tactics". It is interesting that "armed struggle" should be a strategy and not a tactic. This so-called armed struggle has never been carried out against armed Israeli soldiers or Israeli military bases. The objectives have always been unarmed, helpless civilians. Also, this "armed struggle to liberate Palestine" has been carried to other areas of the world, such as Uganda, Munich, Rome, London and always against unarmed civilians.

As far as Isreal's right to exist is concerned, Article 19 speaks for itself: "The partitioning of Palestine and the establishment of Israel is fundamentally null and void..."

Article 21 represents the PLO's view for a negotiated settlement it reads: "The Palestinian Arab people.... rejects every solution that is a substitute for a complete liberation of Palestine". Anybody want to try to reason with these crazies?

As for Israel's living next to a PLO controlled Palestinian state is concerned, Article 15 expresses the PLO's view of co-existence. It clearly states: "The liberation of Palestine... is a national duty to repulse the Zionist invasion and to purge the Zionist presence from Palestine." Where Zionism is the national liberation movement of the Jewish People and where most of the Jews in Israel are Zionists, this could only be interpreted as meaning the expulsion of all the Jews from Eretz Israel.

I described the PLO earlier as being a "racist, pseudo-revolutionary organization". How, you ask can the PLO possibly fit this description? Well, let us look at the PLO's financial situation. Saudi Arabia, a right wing, reactionary monarchy that is still floundering in the muck of feudalism, has a gross national product totalling in excess of $40 billion, all of it coming from its vast oil fields. Saudi Arabia also has a well documented, though little known, Black African slave market. The PLO receives millions upon millions of 'petrodollars' from this racist, reactionary country and in turn buys arms from the Soviet Union, which is described by many 'New Leftists' as a beaurocratic, right-wing reactionary, imperialistic, repressive, authoritarian, elitist regime. The PLO is dependant on these two nations, one racist and the other no longer a true bearer of Marxist-Leninist ideologies, for its very existence. This is how and why the PLO is easily described as being racist and pseudo-revolutionary.

As long as the PLO exists in its current form and continues to perpetuate their heinous crimes against innocent, unarmed Israeli civilians will the Israeli's hearts be hardened to the idea of a Palestinian state. Not until the PLO renounces its draconian covenant can the Israeli people, as represented through their government, even consider sitting down and talking to them. It is this covenant that binds the PLO together. It is this covenant that gives the PLO its 'justification' to murder. It is, therefore, this covenant that is the source of the trouble in the Middle East, and world pressure should be on the PLO to renounce it and not for Israel to accept it.

I'd like to take you on a tour of campus, show you some things that impact upon you every minute you are here, but which perhaps you don't normally think about very often. The real UMass has no classrooms, no dormitories, no libraries. The essence of this university no more resides in its physical representation than a striking coal miner's determination lies in catchy picket-lines slogans.

The real UMass is best imagined as an intricate web of social relationships, the character and strength of which are determined by the power relations imbedded within them. These power relations exist between and among administrators, faculty, staff and students. Each group uses its power to oppose some groups and divide and subordinate others. Without question, students are the most divided and subordinated campus group.

To subordinate us, it is necessary to divide us and make us doubt ourselves. This process reduces both our ability and will to resist domination. There are three major groups which do this to us; administrators, faculty and student leaders. It is fairly obvious how we are divided. Information is withheld, favorites are played, latent animosities are fueled. But the process by which we come to doubt ourselves, to think we have neither the ability nor the right to demand our needs be met, is more subtle and devious.

Each groups' basic strategy is to blame us for problems they have created. The administration, for example, puts us in dilapidated dormitories designed with but one purpose: to shelter us as cheaply as possible. Not surprisingly we don't show much respect for our alienating, crumbling environment; and neither does anyone else. But when pressed to make improvements, the administration makes a slick move. Improvements cannot be made, they claim, because disrespectful students would deface and destroy them. They blame us for their problem; we are made to feel our requests and needs are illegitimate.

Student government does the same thing. If it really were interested in students, it would fight the web of power relations in which we are caught. But our student leaders ignore this web. Many don't even know it exists. The two finalists for SGA president are good examples. They both concentrate most of their efforts on the physical aspects of UMass, Birmingham-Barenburg touting a housing lease, Gordon-Tyson celebrating check-cashing facilities.

It is better to live in a slum with a lease than to live here without one. But with or without a lease, one fact doesn't change. We will still be living in a slum. And it is apparently better to have check-cashing service in the Campus Center than to go without one. But, almost universally, those who know the reputation of Gordon-Tyson's supporters shudder when they think those people might get their hands on additional hundreds of thousands of students' dollars. Their names have come up too often in connection with "irregularities" in the use of student funds.

The publicizing of relatively insignificant accomplishments as if they were important and a lack of integrity are the two major reasons why student government bores students, frustrates many who get involved and achieves minimal results. Insignificant accomplishments reinforce the feeling of powerlessness. And corruption makes us feel that we really shouldn't be trusted with power. Together these two feelings work to deprive us of the confidence needed to alter the web.

The only beneficial course of action that can be taken at the presidential convention is to block the ascension into power of either candidacy. They have already been discredited. Although each of them represents a wing of the power structure and consequently had the most campaign assistance, between them they could attract but 39 per cent of the vote. The input from students, as recorded in the Collegian has been overwhelmingly negative towards them. None-of-the-above drew more votes than Birmingham-Barenburg. One of Gordon's chief supporters is being charged with making personal use of SGA equipment. And the other ten or so candidates suspected that Gordon-Tyson's supporters conducted themselves in a less-than-ethical manner during the campaign. In fairness, it must be said that the evidence for this last statement is entirely circumstantial. Nonetheless, public figures should exercise better judgement when choosing campaign supporters.

> The only beneficial course of action that can be taken at the presidential convention is to block the ascension into power of either candidacy. They have already been discredited. Although each of them represents a wing of the power structure, and consequently had the most campaign assistance, between them they could attract but 39 percent of the vote.

Legally, the two candidacies are (perhaps) entitled to be the only two names on the convention ballot. Ethically, they have been repudiated, and should refuse to be part of this arrangement. Neither of them can come out of the convention with both victory and integrity. They must choose between the two and be judged by their choice.

Paying an extra month's rent

To the Editor:

We recently moved away from Amherst after living in a small apartment complex off Main Street. If you do not have a lease, be aware that under Massachusetts law, if you stay even one day beyond the end of any month you've paid for, you must then pay another entire month's rent. This was our case and we were told we could pay on a day-to-day basis by our landlord but when the case went to court for return of our deposit [kept for an extra month's rent as we stayed five days extra into a new month] we lost the case because "ignorance of the law is no excuse." Hopefully our one bad experience can prevent someone else from making the same mistake.

'Hey Wow, Kool' is immature

To the Editor:

Another day goes by and again I feel like one of Robert A. Heinlein's characters, a "Stranger in a Strange Land." Why? Because I apparently have a completely different view of life and what is important to me than 90 per cent of the students on this campus. I do stupid things such as thinking about whether or not other people want their ears blasted out at 8 a.m., or caring about what happens with my student activities money or caring about what I'm doing to my body with "Hey Wow" drugs and alcohol.

Caring about things that are important to me is what makes me so different, because I care about the strangest things, and mainly because "most" people here don't care; a blatant sign of immaturity.

I don't think this atmosphere is going to help either, because asshole babies think each other's acts are "Hey, Wow, Kool," which is why they do it, so people will think they are cool. They aren't at peace enough with themselves for personal satisfaction to be a good enough reason for doing things. They are so unsure of what they are doing that they need to try to impress other people in stupid ways to hear someone say, "Hey you're Kool."

News in brief

Carter urges change of federal programs

WASHINGTON [AP] — President Carter urged a major overhaul of federal programs Monday as part of his $8.3-billion strategy to help cities cope with conditions ranging from economic decay to sprawling growth.

"The program of cities, which for many was the promise of America itself, has dimmed for people at all economic levels," says a White House urban paper.

Key elements of the long awaited Carter plan include creation of a National Development Bank, establishment of a handful of job-creation schemes, and several proposals to direct federal urban aid to states and neighborhoods.

The Carter policy was immediately criticized by Lee Alexander of Syracuse, president of the U.S. Conference of Mayors, who said the policy is, "a significant step in the right direction, but contains too little in new funds and raises new questions about the role of local government."

While praising the proposal to create a development bank, he expressed concern over programs that direct aid to states and neighborhoods rather than to city hall.

The Carter proposals involve practically every Cabinet department, including the Pentagon, as well as four agencies. The president proposed 160 changes in 40 federal programs.

Carter's $8.3 billion proposal for fiscal 1979 would authorize new spending of $2.7 billion. In addition, it wwuld provide $1.7 billion in interest subsidies to stimulate business activity over 30 years, $1.7 billion in tax reductions to stimulate business and job development and $2.2 billion in loan guarantees.

An estimated $85 billion in federal funds already goes to state and local governments.

Beachcombing fails to net kidnap victim

ROME [UPI] — Four boys spotted digging a hole in the sand triggered a massive police beachcombing operation yesterday on the 11th day of a thus-far futile search for kidnapped former Premier Aldo Moro.

Thousands of police scoured the beaches north of Rome after an anonymous called said he had seen the boys digging in an area where a stack of Red Brigades publications dated June 1977 was found Sunday.

The ultra-left Red Brigades terrorists abducted Moro, Italy's most influential politician and front runner in the upcoming presidential race, on March 16 after killing his five bodyguards in a hail of gunfire.

The Red Brigades have issued two communiques since the kidnapping. The first included a photograph of the 61-year-old Moro in captivity and announced their intention to try him before a "people's tribunal."

The second, issued Saturday, said the head of the ruling Christian Democratic Party was undergoing interrogation to "clarify the imperialist and anti-proletarian policies" of his party.

The gang accused Moro of using the Italian Communist Party, which supports the Christian Democratic government, to spy on the proletariat so that his own party could better "oppress the working class."

Investigation sources said police tentatively had identified seven members of the Red Brigade commando team that seized Moro and spirited him away in a stolen white van equipped with a siren.

The more than 50,000 police and army troops manning roadblocks and conducting house-to-house searches throughout Italy have uncovered no sign of either Moro or his kidnappers.

But the roadblocks and the enormous police dragnet thrown over the nation have resulted in dozens of arrests of petty criminals and reduced Italy's crime rate by 60 per cent.

Radio signal linked to bodily disorders

EUGENE, Ore. [UPI] — Eugene residents are reporting a close encounter with a high frequency radio signal which some researchers have blamed for disorders ranging from cancer to eye cataracts, insomnia, headaches, hearing loss and reddening of the skin.

But others say it's unlikely that the mysterious powerful radio impulses are responsible for any ill effects.

Authorities say the most likely source of the signal is a military radar installation or a quirk of the atmosphere which causes it to bounce to Eugene from some distant point possibly as far away as Asia.

Marshall Van Ert, an industrial hygienist at the University of Oregon, brought the signals to the attention of health and communications authorities when he complained that the impulses have affected his health and possibly 25 others in the Eugene areas.

Clifford Schrock, of the Pacific Northwest Center for the Study of Non-Ionization Radiation, said yesterday he has not talked personally to anyone reporting ill effects, but said he was told that one man experienced headaches, ear aches, and loss of hearing for as long as two years.

"I'm not personally sure that anyone's affected by it," Schrock said.

The signals have been observed as background electronic noise between 4.2 and 5.2 megacycles on the short wave band. Schrock said they measured as high as 500,000 watts; were heard over a wide geographical area, and pulsed at about 1,100 times per second.

The signal was recorded at weak levels inside at least two Eugene homes and at 3,000 feet above the area.

"It is not like any normal short wave bands," Schrock said.

The Federal Communications Commission in Washington said it was informed of the mysterious signal about a week ago by the Oregon Department of Health. An FCC spokesman in Washington, D.C., said it had recommended that the FCC's field operations bureau monitor the frequency to determine where it is coming from.

World's greatest aerialist buried

SARASOTA, Fla. [UPI] — Karl Wallenda, the world's greatest high wire performer who was described as "an irreplaceable man," was buried yesterday in front of a gray marble tombstone proclaiming: "The Wallendas — Aerialists Supreme."

The body of the 73-year-old patriarch of the "Flying Wallendas," killed Wednesday in a 10-story fall from a high wire in San Juan, Puerto Rico, was interred between two other members of the family circus act he founded.

The two, Dieter Schepp and Richard Faughnan, Wallenda's son-in-law, were killed in 1962 when a seven-man pyramid fell from a high wire in Detroit.

More than 300 mourners, most of them related to circus life, attended a 20-minute funeral service at Robarts Sports Arena to hear a county official mourn Wallenda as "an irreplaceable man" who was "Sarasota's ambassador of good will." They then formed a long funeral procession to the cemetery, about seven miles away.

Sarasota Mayor Ron Norman, a longtime family friend, told the crowd that Wallenda "set standards of his profession... he gave help and courage to others. Even in his own personal tragedies, he set an example for others to follow.

"Karl Wallenda believed that God gave him the gift to walk the high wire... the inner strength to help others," Norman said.

Unlike Sunday when Wallenda lay in state, the casket was closed during yesterday's services. It was opened briefly after the service for a final visit by the family.

Mrs. Wallenda, wearing a black dress with a red velvet blouse and a black lace veil, paused briefly at the casket, touched her husband softly on the head and placed a small bouquet of flowers inside the casket.

At the cemetery service in a windswept mausoleum rotunda, Mrs. Wallenda took two flowers from the spray of red roses and orchids covering the casket. She then walked without assistance behind the casket as it was carried about 150 feet to the grave site.

Rev. Luther Willer, presiding minister at the funeral service, said Wallenda was a deeply religious man who never made a show of his religious beliefs.

Sisitsky will face reelection in Sen.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. [AP] — State Sen. Alan D. Sisitsky, D-Springfield, mentioned as a possible longshot candidate for governor, killed the speculation yesterday by saying he will run for a fourth term in the Senate.

The 35-year-old Sisitsky, Senate chairman of the Judiciary Committee, already faces a September primary challenge from Michael Albano, probation officer at Westfield District Court.

Some political observers had said during the past year that Sisitsky, a liberal, might challenge Gov. Michael S. Dukakis. A major western Massachusetts supporter of Dukakis in the 1974 gubernatorial campaign, Sisitsky later criticized the governor for reneging on campaign promises.

Sisitsky, who served two terms as a state representative before election to the Senate, said he is running again because some major projects remain to be completed. He said they include enactment of court reform and establishment of a special investigating committee to probe the state building contract scandal.

Your Birthday

TUESDAY, MARCH 28

Born today, you are highly emotional, with a penchant for the dramatic. You discover quickly the facet of anything that will appeal most to others, and you play it up royally in trying to make a good impression. Spirited and temperamental, you are not easy to live with. You are interesting and exciting, and life with you is never a bore.

Fond of members of the opposite sex, you may have trouble narrowing your choices. As a young adult, you may go overboard and gain a reputation for fickleness. In the end, however, you will use wisdom and feeling to make a reasonable and affectionate choice of a mate.

You have a narrow but visible religious streak. This does not mean that you are bound to make any organized religion your career; it does mean that whatever career you choose will have to be compatible with your spiritual nature.

Also born on this date: Pierre Laplace, astronomer; Rick Barry, basketball star; Harvey Glance, track star.

To see what is in store for you tomorrow, find your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 29

ARIES(March 21-April 19) — If you ignore old friends, regardless of how easy that is, you will cause unnecessary hurt.

TAURUS(April 20-May 20) — Decisions about change of job occupy this morning. Help another succeed later.

GEMINI(May 21-June 20) — Research should reveal aspects of the puzzle at home that solve it at evening.

CANCER(June 21-July 22) — Conclude old business immediately, or you won't be able to take advantage of PM opportunity.

LEO(July 23-Aug.22) — Rely on your feelings, not another's facts. You may be misled into near disaster.

VIRGO(Aug.23-Sept.22) — Afternoon danger has a sobering effect on you, but don't hesitate with plans.

LIBRA(Sept.23-Oct.22) — You may find it easy to steer friends from danger; not so with relatives.

SCORPIO(Oct.23-Nov.21) — A favorable business agreement brings you close to goals. A little more patience and they're yours!

SAGITTARIUS(Nov.22-Dec.21) — Be responsive to another's overtures of friendship, or you will lose a great deal.

CAPRICORN(Dec.22-Jan.19) — An unexpected visitor brings unexpected opportunity. It may help to worry.

AQUARIUS(Jan.20-Feb.18) — Tolerance of another's shortcomings may seem overdone to superiors. Demand more.

PISCES(Feb.19-March 20) — Important business decisions are not yours to make now, but you can express yourself.

Havlicek's best moves

By JOHN ANTONELLI
Collegian Staff

What's the difference between John Havlicek and other NBA players? During a recent game, one of the Chicago Bulls knocked Havlicek off-balance under the basket when he wasn't looking. Most guys would have ended up in an awkward tangle on the court, but Havlicek, almost gracefully, wound up sitting on the comfortable padding of the basket support. That is the difference.

On and off the court, Havlicek measures his every move, whether he's cutting a steak or shooting from behind Dave Cowens. Havlicek's great career was not built on flash, but perfection. He invented the word 'precise.'

Havlicek may be the best basketball player who ever stepped onto a court, as all his various records suggest (he came within one cut of playing professional football). He was recognized as great even when he was overshadowed by some teammates on the great Celtic clubs of the 1960's. And, of course, he has come through time after time when the team needed him most, often scoring a last second shot to tie and win games.

Let's focus on just the last years of his career. I realize this is like being on Mount Washington and saying, "This sure is a nice place, but let's ignore the view," but lack of space and probable boredom dictate this. The following is one person's account of Havlicek's most memorable moments, in order of least - to - most important.

APRIL 1976 — Havlicek sprained his ankle in the first playoff game against Buffalo, and it seemed possible he was through. Two games later, he was back. Boston General Manager Red Auerbach said, "The doctor told John to soak his foot in ice two hours a day. He did it 10 hours a day. That's dedication."

JUNE 1976 — In the finals with Phoenix, the Celtics blew a big lead in Game 5, and it was tied with three seconds to play. Havlicek tossed in his patented lean-in jumper off the glass to put them ahead. The Suns tied it, incredibly, before time ran out, and that unforgettable game went three overtimes before the Celtics won, and they were on their way to their last championship.

APRIL 1975 — In the last game of the regular season, the Celtics played Washington with the best record in the Eastern Conference at stake, which meant home-court advantage in each playoff series. It was a fantastic game, with everybody playing well, but nobody better than Havlicek, who played on the dead run all night. It may have been his best single game ever, as he threw in all kinds of shots from impossible angles and he displayed extraordinary floor leadership.

With 11 seconds left, the Bullets scored, putting them in the lead by one point. Havlicek calmly brought the ball up on the left, attracting three defenders, then whipped a pass to an open Dave Cowens, who popped in the winning basket from the foul line with four seconds left.

APRIL 1973 — In the Eastern finals against hated New York, Havlicek hurt his right shoulder in the first game and he had to sit out the next two. In Game 4, when he had no business playing, he came off the bench to inspire Boston to a series-tying win. With his shooting arm dangling uselessly from his side, he threw in 16 points left-handed. The Knicks, though, won the series in seven games.

MAY 1974 — Havlicek reached his glorious maximum in the sixth game of the NBA finals with the Milwaukee Bucks. The Celtics led the series 3-2 and had a chance to win the title that night, and the contest was a hair-pulling, excruciating double-overtime thriller. With the Boston Garden crowd hanging on every play, everyone's emotions had stretched to the breaking point. In the climactic second overtime, the teams traded baskets as the lead wavered back and forth. Havlicek hit shot after shot over 7 foot-four Kareem Abdul-Jabbar down the stretch in the greatest of his career clutch performances. Finally, Jabbar won the game with a hook shot in the final seconds, but the Celtics won the championship two days later in Milwaukee.

Sutton grows up to be dean of the Dodgers

VERO BEACH, Fla. [UPI] — It seems only yesterday Walt Alston was describing Don Sutton as the "baby" of the Los Angeles Dodgers' pitching staff. It wasn't yesterday, it was 12 years ago and now they're calling him the "dean".

In a few more days, Sutton will be 33, no longer a kid by any means, and although he feels he still has a lot of pitches left in him, he can also foresee that day when it will be all over for him.

Nobody will have to bother showing him the door, he says. He'll know when it's time to go.

"I won't become a baseball prostitute, I mean a guy who stays around as long as he can pick up a check," says the Dodgers No. 1 "money pitcher", who has never been beaten in World Series, playoff or All-star competition.

"Baseball does not constitute my whole life. When I have to retire, it won't be like someone's cutting my heart out. When the day comes that I have to hang it up, I'll have someplace to go, someplace that will provide me with two things — security for my family and personal satisfaction for myself."

Sutton has been preparing for that day by doing television and radio work the last few years. This past winter he worked in every phase of news production for NBC's affiliate in Los Angeles.

"I think that period between being a ballplayer and an ex-ballplayer is a dangerous time if you don't have any place to go," he says. "I want to be prepared and I think I have been preparing myself pretty well."

Sutton has won 190 games for the Dodgers since he first joined them as a skinny 165-pound kid in 1966. Only Don Drysdale has ever won more games for the club, meaning Sutton's victory total exceeds those of such former Dodger stickouts as Sandy Koufax, Johnny Podres and Burleigh grimes.

He's in excellent physical shape, with a stomach as flat as a washboard, and looks as if he could keep pitching forever. You ask him how long he thinks he can keep going and Sutton thinks about it.

"As long as it isn't a drag to come out here and do it and as long as I can perform up to the standards I set for myself," he answers.

Givens pours in 41

Kentucky cools Devils, 94-88

[AP] — Kentucky's Mike Philips jams Duke's Mike Gminski in the first half of the Wildcats 94-88 win over Duke for the NCAA title. Kentucky won its fifth national title last night.

ST. LOUIS [UPI] — Jack Givens scored a career-high 41 points in his final game and Kentucky held off a furious late rally to send the nationally-first ranked Wildcats to their first NCAA championship in 20 years last night with a 94-88 victory over Duke.

Rekindling memories of its past championship teams, it marked the fifth time Kentucky has captured the national title.

In the consolation game, Ron Brewer hit a 25-foot jumper at the buzzer to give Arkansas a 71-69 victory over Notre Dame for a third-place finish in the tournament.

With 11 seconds remaining, Duke center Mike Gminski hit a jumper from the side to bring the Blue Devils within four, 92-88. After Kentucky, a 4½ point favorite called time out, the Wildcats successfully beat Duke's full court press as James Lee drove in for a slam dunk to provide the final margin.

It was the most points Givens has scored since he put in 33 against Louisiana State in his sophomore year. It was also the most he has scored since the season-opener against Southern Methodist.

It was the most points scored in an NCAA title game since Bill Walton had 44 against Memphis State in 1973.

Givens, a 6-foot-4 senior, took over right from the opening half. In a blistering shooting spree, he scored the top-ranked Wildcats' last 16 points and Duke was virtually helpless against every move he made. In the final 30 seconds of the half, Duke pulled within one, 39-38, but Givens then put in six straight points to provide a seven-point margin at the half.

With Kentucky ahead 29-26, it looked as if Givens were booking the Blue Devils for the flight back to Durham, N.C.

Rick Robey finished with 20 points for the Wildcats while ninth-ranked Duke was backed by guard Jim Spanarkel with 21 and freshman Eugene Banks with 22.

For Banks, the game was played under difficult circumstances. According to St. Louis police, at least two threats were made on his life prior to the game. Although there were no incidents during the contest, extra security was placed around the Duke bench. An NCAA official later said he believed the threats were prank calls.

With Kentucky leading 45-38 at the half, Duke made a brief run at the Wildcats but it was hardly enough. Spanarkel and John Harrell opened the second half with baskets to make it 45-42 for Kentucky. But the Wildcats then went on a 10-4 burst to pull into command with a 55-46 lead.

It was a game billed as speed versus power, youth versus experience and emotion versus restraint. And it looked up to expectations.

With 28 seconds remaining in the game, Kentucky began removing its starters from the lineup amid a sea of blue and white pompoms, the colors of both schools.

The Blue Devils, sentimental favorites who came from nowhere, started two freshmen, two sophomores and a junior. Playing a fast-moving, exuberant game, Duke was a start contrast to Kentucky. The Wildcats, who relied on the strength of four seniors, went with their height and power — and Givens. They played a well-executed game with a minimum of mistakes.

In the first half, Givens offset an extraordinary display of foul shooting by Duke. The Blue Devils, the best free throw shooting team in the nation, made more than half of their points from the line. Duke made 20-of-21 foul shots to keep the game close.

But despite a good 2-1-2 defense by Duke, Givens was able to find every imaginable crease in the zone.

Kentucky's other championships — all under the late coach Adolph Rupp — came in 1948, 1949, 1951, and 1958. Rupp, whose career spanned 41 years, helped Kentucky become the winningest team of all time. Only UCLA has compiled more tournament victories.

For coach Joe B. Hall, who has labored under Rupp's shadow since taking over in 1972, the title is particularly satisfying. He has been under the gun by Kentucky's demanding fans, who felt it was time for the college basketball crown to be restored to its rightful place. Although his teams have averaged 21 wins a year, he felt more attention was focused on past glories rather than present accomplishments.

Is women's basketball picking up men's vices?

By MICHAEL SMOLENS
Collegian Staff

Jimmy Breslin once said that the only thing to come from passing the Equal Rights Amendment was that women would prove themselves to be just as stupid as men.

Regardless of the ERA, a look at the rapid growth — and resulting problems — of women's collegiate basketball gives weight to Breslin's point.

Women's basketball, barely past the intramural stage just six years ago, now has its own weekly Top 20, full scholarships and recruiting violations that sound hauntingly familiar to big time men's college sports. While corruption in women's basketball is nowhere near the intensity of its male counterpart; cars, thousands of dollars and coaching jobs after graduation have been offered to prod high school stars into attending a given college and to induce top-notch college players to transfer, according to Sports Illustrated (3-20-78).

Commentary

However, the greatest contrast between the problems in men's and women's basketball is the NCAA is starting to crack down on violators while the Association for Intercollegiate Athletics for Women (AIAW) is looking the other way.

Apparently, the AIAW is composed of an unhealthy balance of naive administrators who hold a purist philosophy on physical education and rambunctious coaches and athletic directors that realize the potential for big bucks (namely TV money) in women's basketball. The problems arise from the Pollyannas writing unrealistic regulations and the entrepreneurs laughing at them.

The AIAW rule most often violated states that college coaches and their associates may attend a high school game for the sole purpose of assessing player talent. The coaches may not talk to the athlete or any member of her family. This absurd rule is consistently ignored. "If we're going to spend thousands of dollars on athletic scholarships for women," says USC athletic director Richard Perry, "we want to attract the best. That mandates evaluating those players, finding out what kind of people they are and what kind of homes they come from."

And who could disagree? Women are demanding and receiving expanded athletic opportunities, but their own rules attempt to hold them back. Such rules invite not only violation but overreaction and blatant corruption.

What's worse is that the AIAW allows women to play for a college immediately after transferring, unlike the mandatory year layoff enforced by the NCAA. According to Sports Illustrated, this rule has resulted in coaches stealing players from other schools with bribes of job offers and money (from alumni). Ironically, the NCAA realized long ago that the year layoff was necessary to avoid this exact situation.

There is an obvious need for drastic change in the rules and structure of the AIAW if the organization is to survive. The stakes in women's sports are rapidly growing and etiquette and fair play are being thrown out the window. The women have taken off their gloves, but the AIAW, like an ostrich with its head in the sand, does not even have a full-time enforcement committee.

It is unfortunate that all this stems from the Title IX ruling, which was designed to increase educational — and athletic — opportunities for women. But instead of broadening the spectrum of women's sports, some schools have merely beefed up their basketball program, letting women who want to play lacrosse or volleyball suffer.

This is not the spirit of Title IX, though it is hard to fault those who want to take women's basketball to the limit of its potential. But if women's basketball is to become cutthroat as men's has, then perhaps a merger of the AIAW and the NCAA should take place. If they're going to play the same game, they should use the same rules.

The AIAW is a microcosm of the problems facing women in their struggle to share (dominate?) the power traditionally held by men. The challenge is to bring a fresh perspective to old problems, and not merely copy previous blunders. The women's movement will ultimately fail — regardless of the number of women in decisionmaking positions — if it does not learn from men's mistakes.

Lacrosse takes it

Spring is here. Well, at least it's on the way, though you'd never be able to verify this by the recent trend in New England's climate. Snow, rain, and drizzle have left our humble U of M campus in a general state of mud. But as 'they' say, you have to take the bitter with the sweet — into every life a little rain must fall — et cetera, et cetera, and all those other clever cliches thought up by some wise prophet long before Naismith pinned that peach basket above the door of his two-car garage. Or before Doubleday had the fences moved in for fan enjoyment. But before the conception of lacrosse?

Many moons ago, many, many, many, many, many, many moons ago, the Indians invented this strange air-borne version of hockey commonly known as lacrosse. The teams weren't sides with eleven men apiece, but rather two tribes. It wasn't meant to be a nice quiet, rich man's sport like golf; but instead, a bruising battle involving precision passing with somewhat crude sticks.

What has developed is the fastest sport on foot.

If you've never seen a lacrosse game, tomorrow you get your big chance when the regular season opens for the UMass squad, coached by Dick Garber. Undoubtedly you'll get caught up in 'Gorilla-fever' like many other UMies who have followed lacrosse in the past.

UMass lacrosse has been synonymous with spring, beer, and most importantly, success. A typical warm Saturday afternoon will find Curry Hick's 'Hill' lined with UMies, sipping on the brews, intensely psyched and involved in the spirit of not only their team but the sport itself. And why not, lacrosse is excitement; it seems to have taken a little away from other sports.

Lacrosse could be taken to court for petty larceny; it has incorporated bits and pieces of other sports, adding to its own popularity.

It has taken hockey checking and made it a big hit (pardon the pun) in lacrosse. In hockey while passing the puck is very basic to the game, it doesn't have to have a picture perfect pass (since the puck could always rebound off the boards and still land on the stick of the correct recipient). An air-borne lacross ball is either caught or isn't, since there is nothing for it to bounce off.

The moves of fancy moves used in one-on-one basketball, the spins, fakes and dekes can be exhibited and often are on the field. Behind the net confrontations often lend themselves to these one man-to-man encounters. The give-and-go in lacrosse, as in basketball, is one of the nicest plays especially when it connects for a score.

When the passing clicks, and the movement away from the play smooth, it is reminiscent of setting up for a shot in any sport, soccer, a powerplay in hockey, or going for the last shot in a basketball game.

So on those afternoons when you want to relax and take in what could be one of the best sports in the country, check out your spring schedule. See if Garber's Gorillas are booked to play. If so, get your gear together, and head for the 'Hill.'

Around the crease: ... the opener, scheduled for Wednesday against Cortland; game time is 3 p.m. ... if you're into lacrosse make note that the Gorillas only play twice on Saturday at home with the rest scheduled on Mondays and Wednesdays ... check out the women's team also, they're usually decent to watch ... few pointers for UMie fans attending opener 1 — don't plan on doing too much sitting on the Hill since it's soaked, 2 — don't sit behind the soccer kick-board as you'll miss a lot of the action that way, 3 — if you must talk to friends, it'd be wise to discuss the plans of the night while the opponent has the ball (it's better to miss one of their goals as compared to a UM goal — remember there's no instant replay —, 4 — check out the programs which should be on sale before each game; they can be helpful to learn the players and the money goes for a good cause ...

PLO may aid UN troops

BEAUFORT CASTLE, Lebanon (AP) — Guerrilla chief Yasser Arafat said yesterday that his Palestine Liberation Organization would extend "all our military capacities" to help United Nations peacekeeping troops in southern Lebanon disengage the Palestinians and invading Israeli forces.

But radical guerrillas in the field, under Arafat's nominal but imperfect control, vowed to fight any U.N. attempt to impose a cease-fire in their two week-old battle with the Israelis inside Lebanon.

And the commander of the U.N. forces — Maj. Gen. Emmanuel Erskine of Ghana — said despite Arafat's offer of cooperation: "Whether they will stop firing or not, I can't tell."

The complexity of the situation was further underlined when a U.N. spokesman in New York, reading a statement from Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim, said: "Mr. Arafat informed me, through Gen. Erskine, of his acceptance of my call for a general cease-fire." Waldheim issued his appeal yesterday after the Security Council made a similar call March 18.

But Arafat did not say specifically that his guerrillas would observe the cease-fire declared by Israel last Tuesday.

Nonetheless, only scattered shooting incidents were reported Tuesday, after heavy clashes and artillery exchanges during the previous night.

In other Middle East developments Tuesday:

—Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin sent a personal letter to Egyptian President Anwar Sadat, urging him to resume direct peace negotiations. The letter was given to U.S. Ambassador Samuel Lewis in Jerusalem for forwarding to Cairo.

—Egyptian Foreign Ministry officials said in Cairo that a new Israeli proposal for some self-determination for Palestinians in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip was "unacceptable" because it did not consider displaced Palestinians living in the Arab countries.

—The Arab League met in Cairo and drafted an Arab solidarity plan for future dealings with Israel. Sources said the league, which met without the five most intransigent states toward Israel, would try to enlist their support for the plan, which was not immediately disclosed.

—An Israeli poll indicated that Begin's approval rating had slipped nearly 20 percentage points since December to 59.4 percent in mid-February.

Carter visits Venezuela

CARACAS, Venezuela (UPI) — President Carter delighted his Venezuelan hosts yesterday with two short speeches in impeccable Spanish, then was greeted by a massive power blackout that plunged much of this capital into darkness.

Emergency power generators were activated at La Casona, the presidential palace where Carter was staying. The president's party was not inconvenienced.

A spokesman for the Caracas Electric Co. said almost 1 million of the city's 2.5 million residents were without power, but he ruled out sabotage and expected quick restoration.

Carter made his brief speeches in Spanish at the airport reception center and at a wreath-laying ceremony in the Pantheon at the grave of Venezuelan liberator Simon Bolivar.

The president said he will speak to the leaders of Venezuela, Bolivia, Nigeria and Liberia — the stops on his seven-day, 14,000-mile trip — about "peace, justice for individuals and nations, the defense of human liberty and how to make sure that the resources of the land can satisfy the necessities of all the peoples of the world."

"We know that in the modern world what affects one nation eventually affects all of us," he said. "That is why the vigor of democratic institutions here means so much to us. We know that whenever the rights of any individual in the world are diminished, our own rights are endangered."

Carter held talks with Venezuelan President Carlos Andres Perez, discussing mainly oil and energy supplies. Perez then hosted Carter at a state dinner at the presidential palace.

Carter and Perez agreed a delegation from the United Nations or the Organization of American States "should inspect Nicaragua or other countries where human rights are threatened."

With Perez standing at his side in the garden of La Casona, Carter said that both chief executives were concerned about the situation in Nicaragua.

There reportedly has been an increase of oppression in the Central American republic following popular disturbances in the wake of the assassination of a newspaper publisher foe of Anastasio Somoza.

Venezuela is the largest hemispheric exporter of U.S. oil, and its most reliable provider. During the Arab oil boycott, Venezuela increased its shipments to the United States.

Carter said the United States and Venezuela are in "complete harmony" on the matter of human rights, and that he and Perez had exchanged several leters about Nicaragua.

"We're both concerned about the situation in Nicaragua; we both feel a delegation from the U.N. or OAS should be welcomed in Nicaragua and other countries where human rights are threatented, to provide the facts to the outside world.

"We have a policy of not intervening in the internal affairs of other nations, but we have a right to express ourselves forcefully ..."

Roof patches only temporary; no Southwest repairs until summer

By LEO PELOQUIN
Collegian Staff

Leaky dormitory ceilings in Southwest probably will not be repaired until the summer, according to John Findley, Southwest's area management coordinator.

Findley said workers from the Physical Plant will continue to patch the leaky areas of the roofs throughout the Spring semester but that the patching was only a temporary solution.

"It hasn't worked before so I doubt that it will work now," said Findley, "the final resolution will only come when the total resurfacing is done early in the summer."

He said the total resurfacing involves putting down a layer of insulation and coating over the insulation with a newly developed substance. The substance reportedly is superior to the old coating because it is more flexible to changing weather conditions.

Twelve students living on the top floors of John Adams, Coolidge, and Melville dormitories presented a petition to Chancellor Randolph Bromery on March 16 protesting the condition of their dorm floors caused by the leaky roofs.

In the petition, the students demanded the university begin repairs immediately on the leaky roofs, initiate a comprehensive repair policy to alleviate all safety and health violations in the dormitory, reimburse students for all damages suffered as a result of the conditions, and that the university respond to the demands by this past Monday.

The students threatened legal action if they did not receive an answer by March 27. Those co-signers that could be contacted said they did receive a letter signed by Robert Campbell, acting director of residential resource management.

The letter said the roofs and the rooms had been inspected by Findley and Richard Lannon, dormitory maintenance head, and that the contract for the job was up for bids.

Findley said yesterday he put in the work requests for the roof repairs early in December.

Susan Castonguay, who has lived on the 22nd floor of Coolidge for three years, said the roof has leaked for as long as she can remember.

"I'm just sick of it. That's why I signed the petition. Its been three years and the hallway still has a big puddle in it," said Castonguay.

She said there are two leaks in the hallway, leaks in six different rooms, and that one room has been condemned because of the leaks.

Eric Pierce and Scott Miller, both freshmen, room together in John Adams 2209. Pierce said he was told by other floor members that the leaks have been there for at least five years.

"The bad thing about it is it hits you by surprise. We'd almost be better off if it leaked consistently. When it hits you by surprise, it always gets a few of your things wet," said Pierce.

He said many of his books were damaged by the water over intersession and even though the letter received from Campbell said students would be reimbursed for the damage, it was quite a bit of work to compile an itemized list of the damaged goods.

Miller said, "The hall's pretty bad. It leaks all the time. There are stains on the ceiling and the tiles are coming up on the floor. It doesn't look too good and it smells pretty bad."

Pierce said he thought students should be able to sign some sort of contract with the university, similar to a tenant-landlord pact, so students could sue when such living conditions occurred.

"Generally its an inconvenience. I pay just as much as anybody else who doesn't have a leak. Our living conditions are sub-standard but we pay for standard," said Pierce.

US 'responsible' to Vietnam

By BRYANT M. JORDAN
Collegian Staff

Anti-war activist Cora Weiss, last night said at Hampshire College the United States has an "ethical responsibility to clean up Vietnam, a nation which it tried for so long and so hard to destroy."

"There has been a food shortage in Vietnam since 1975," she said. "Last year there was a 1.2 million ton shortfall of rice. That means that 7 million people are hungry," Weiss added.

Weiss, who is a Hampshire trustee and member of the board of the Bach Mai Hospital Fund for Indochina, has just completed final preparations in Houston to ship 10,000 tons of wheat to Vietnam.

Anti-war activist and Hampshire College trustee Cora Weiss speaks of the United States' responsibility to "clean up" Vietnam. (Staff photo by Pat Dobbs)

The shipment, part of a continuing reconciliation and reconstruction effort, was donated by midwestern farmers.

"But the wheat shipment is actually a symbol to Washington Weiss said. "It's to tell the Congress and the President that it is all right for them to give aid to Vietnam now; that we, the people, will support them."

According to Weiss, agriculture is the priority of Vietnam's current five-year plan.

However, she said, the effects of American defoliation bombs and chemicals and anti-personnel weapons continue to impede agricultural development in many regions.

When the U.S. pulled out of Vietnam, Weiss said, mechanized irrigation of farmlands halted, as did the use of chemical fertilizer.

As a result, there was a great need for draft animals once more, she said, but it was a need that could not be met because so many were destroyed in the war.

As for the lands themselves, she said some lands would require many years before they would produce crops, while others would never be fit for cultivation.

Weiss said in many areas of the country, the army Corps of Engineers must precede the returning people to the fields in order to search for left-over mines.

One of the biggest reasons preventing the U.S. from giving aid to Vietnam, Weiss said, is that there are still some people in Washington carrying on a vendetta against Vietnam.

Their rationale was "if we can't beat them on the battlefield, then, by God, we'll beat them some other way," the activist said.

Weiss said a special meeting was held at the United Nations last week concerning aid to Vietnam. Every country was represented, she said, except the United States.

In spite of all its difficulties, however, Weiss said Vietnam is struggling to become a "normal nation" after 30 years of war.

Weiss, praising the health care in Vietnam, said that it successfully headed off what could have been a recent nationwide cholera epidemic by training individuals in all facets of society in immunization.

These people were then given the responsibility of immunizing everyone in their school, office, factory, or village, she said.

Desegregation 'sound'

By SEAN HORGAN
Collegian Staff

Desegregation plans formulated for Boston schools under Federal Judge Arthur Garrity "have achieved success beyond what was expected because the plans are sociologically sound," Dr. Charles V. Willie of the Harvard University Graduate School of Education last night said.

Willie, speaking to an audience of 30 persons at Hampshire College on "School Desegregation and Public Policy: The Boston Experience, traced the history and predicted the future of the desegregation process in the Boston schools.

"The desegregation problem," he said, "is no longer limited to just the cities. I believe this problem has also left the city for the suburbs, and I believe you will begin to see the people in the suburbs petition the courts to gain relief from their homogenous situation."

Willie, appointed in 1975 by Garrity as one of four masters of the U.S. District Court in Boston entrusted with formulating school desegregation plans, said those plans were based on "a desire for desegregation with a vision on the quality of education."

He stated previous plans had failed at integrating the schools because they were only partial plans, however, the present plan includes the entire Boston school system.

"The earlier plans," he said, "had excluded certain parts of the city, and had become an imposition solely on the working people. The Boston School Committee had refused to implement a comprehensive plan until ordered to do so as part of Garrity's Phase Two of court-ordered school desegregation."

The result of the earlier plans, according to Willie, was a great bitterness on the part of both blacks and whites.

"The problem with the partial plans," he said, "was that it made those parts of the city included in the plans feel like they were being experimented with."

Willie said the desegregation problem has historically been fueled by "stubborn pride, nonsense and weak people fearing the loss of their ethnic purity."

He said the greatest resistance to desegregation has not come from working class blacks and whites, but from middle and upper-middle class whites.

"American whites in that bracket are really uptight about social class, and if you were looking for the source of the greatest resistance, I think that would be it."

Willie also criticized Boston Mayor Kevin White's performance through the early stages of the integration plans, especially White's appeal of the initial court order for school desegregation.

"The violence," he said, "which came like lightning and thunder, was stimulated by the actions of public servants which cast doubts on the court's decision.

"White sent the message to Boston's citizens that the court's decision was illegal, and when public officials don't tell the facts or urge the obeyance of the law, then the result is mob rule and violence."

Tips for fire safety

Environmental Health and Safety Department officials said the recent residence hall fire drills were the most successful to date.

The department reminds students of certain important points regarding evacuation procedure in case of fire.

In the event of fire, students should:

—stuff towels in space at bottom of door
—open windows to supply fresh air
—call the Public Safety Authorities —attract attention by yelling or waving out windows
—stay near the window to breathe fresh air and await rescue.

In the case of a fire too large to put out with an extinguisher, they advise:

—close all doors in the fire area
—pull fire alarm
—call Public Safety to report fire
—evacuate and stay away from building.

Fuller will also give a three-part speech during the week of April 10-14.

Coalition possible at convention

By JON KLEIN
Collegian Staff

Candidates Shelly Gordon and Herb Tyson will meet with candidates David Barenberg and Susan Birmingham today at 1:00 p.m. to discuss the possibility of forming a coalition ticket at tonight's convention.

In other convention developments, fourth place finisher Donald Bishop is considering joining forces at the convention with fifth place winner Steve Ross.

Barenberg and Birmingham intend to go before the convention tonight to propose a second popular election to be held one week from today to choose the next student government president. If this fails they will examine the possibilities for a coalition with Gordon-Tyson.

The convention is being held since none of the candidates could get one third of the vote in the popular election. The convention of student senators and area governments will meet tonight in the Hatch at 9:00 p.m.

Under the Barenberg-Birmingham plan, the popular election will include only their ticket and Gordon-Tyson. The convention would have to approve the plan for a new election and then reconvene to approve the results.

The second convention is required under the constitution.

The catagory none-of-the-above which placed second in the popular election is not in the proposal since "it is not a candidate" says Birmingham.

If the proposal for a second election fails then the coalition may be formed. Barenberg and Birmingham say they will let the other ticket decide which candidate on the coalition ticket would be student president and which would be on the Board of Trustees. When co-presidents are elected one of them is student trustee of the board.

Tyson "fully supports" a second election "under the ideal situations. Tyson said the "ideal situation" would be if the "convention and student body are receptive to another general election." Tyson said he will attempt to determine student mood by "talking to area government people" and students who do not hold official positions.

Tyson said he also must consider "whether students can participate in another election and still have faith in the SGA."

"I don't know what he's after," said Tyson about Barenberg. "I don't know what's he's attempting to gain."

"A coalition makes no logical sense", said Tyson. He added that there are "a lot of fundamental differences" between the two tickets. "We are different people. We have different ideas about us as human beings, as students and how the President's office works."

"We ran against each other because we felt we could do a better job," said Tyson.

Birmingham said if the convention chooses the presidents and "if we win by one vote and Herb and Shelly hold the Senate votes and we hold the area government votes, there will be incredible disunity. There will be another semester of political infighting. A coalition forces a spirit of cooperation".

"They are coming to us when we are in a stronger position," said Tyson referring to his tickets larger vote total in the popular election.

Candidate Donald Bishop who is considering forming a ticket with Steve Ross, said "its going to be impossible for me to get on the ballot." The first convention ballot will have Barenberg-Birmingham and Gordon-Tyson plus any write-ins at the convention.

The second ballot and any following ballots will include the top two vote getters from the previous ballot. Other rules apply in the case of a first place finish by blank ballots which are counted in the convention. Bishop said he will have to get on the ballot through write-ins.

Late last night the members of the ad hoc rules committee and other student politicians were working out the final proposal for convention rules. The proposal must be approved by the convention. A proposal was written on Monday night but complaints from some student politicians brought about a second meeting to work out any differences before the convention begins tonight.

Senate elections tonight

By CINDY REGET
Collegian Staff

The Student Senate will hold elections for the positions of the senate speaker and treasurer tonight and discuss the rules governing tonight's electoral convention.

Senate speaker Pat Whelan or Jeff Lutsky, the Attorney General, will open the floor for the nominations of candidates to fill the positions of speaker and treasurer. Time will be allotted to each nominator to speak on behalf of the candidate they nominated. There will also be time allotted to each of the candidates to make a speech before a vote by the senators.

Pat Whelan will discuss with the senate the rules of the electoral convention to be held tonight at 9:00 p.m. at the Hatch. Whelan last night said, "the rules of the convention are extremely biased and reflect the opinions of those who wrote them, Jon Hite and his friends."

He also said he and other senators were disgusted with being excluded from the group which met to write these rules. He went on to say there might be some amendments or deletions made to the convention rules.

The senate will meet at 6:30 p.m. and adjourn at 9:00 p.m. so senators can attend the convention.

Teach-in investigates energy alternatives

By LEO PELOQUIN
Collegian Staff

A panel discussion on energy use at UMass will highlight a teach-in sponsored by the Campus Energy Task Force today, beginning at 3 p.m. in Campus Center 803.

Doug Stanley, coordinator of the task force, said the primary focus of the teach-in will be energy conservation but there will also be an investigation into alternative sources of energy for UMass.

"The primary purpose of the teach-in is to inform people that don't have a background (on the subject of energy) but are interested in how energy is used here at the university," said Stanley.

At 3 p.m., Tullio Inglese, director of the Nature-Culture Environmental Design Center, will speak about how energy is used in the studio wing of the Fine Arts Center, explaining how solar energy could be used instead of the present system of steam heat.

At 4 p.m., there will be a tour of the Solar Habitat, a structure containing a windmill and several solar collectors, at Orchard Hill.

The panel discussion, to be held from 8:30-10 p.m., will include several members of the university's faculty and staff.

Stanley said the discussion "...will go beyond plotting energy conservation. It will go into what the university is and isn't doing to conserve energy and find alternative ways to produce energy."

Edward Sunderland, head of the mechanical engineering dept. and a former chairman of the 1974 Energy Conservation Committee at UMass, will take part in the discussion. He said the energy use problem at UMass is more serious than people realize.

"There hasn't been enough done. We haven't begun to cope with the magnitude of the problem or get a solution to it yet. I see this as a major problem on the campus. We could probably reduce the campus energy use by 30 per cent without even trying hard — which would save a million dollars a year."

The other panel members are Ruth Kreplick, director of the Technical Guidance Center for Environmental Quality, who will moderate the discussion, and Theodore DeLesdernier, chief utility engineer for the Physical Plant, and Edward Simpson, a staff assistant for the planning office.

Students can 'sink or swim' DA candidate's campaign

By JOE QUINLAN
Collegian Staff

A former Mass PIRG executive director and UMass student campaigning for the district attorney's office in Hampshire and Franklin counties said yesterday he is counting on votes from the UMass students in the primaries this fall.

Democrat Jonathan Z. Souweine, 30, of Pelham who has resigned as assistant state attorney general to Francis X. Bellotti, yesterday at Amherst Town Hall said his campaign will "sink or swim" with a turnout of UMass students at the polls.

But Souweine said an obstacle to gaining the student vote is getting the students first to register to vote in Amherst. He said while many students may support him in September prior to the primary, the support will only count if the students are registered.

He said he plans to support voter registration drives on campus this spring. Eighteen hundred UMass students are now registered, he said.

Souweine announced his candidacy for the district attorney's office and resignation as assistant attorney general at noon yesterday in the Town Hall Meeting Room among 20 friends and press.

He said while he should have an inside track to student votes because of his involvement with MassPIRG, his opponents have "family connections" among voters in the area. Souweine, a New York City native, said the family connections, and not the fact that one opponent is an assistant in the district attorney's office gives the other candidates an edge.

Souweine said people in Western Massachusetts want a district attorney who can speak out on issues, and not one who just prosecutes. He said he will fight "white collar crime" as a district attorney.

Souweine faces opposition in the fall primary from assistant district attorney Bernie Whelen of South Hadley, and Donald T. Dunphy and Michael Ryan of Northampton. District Attorney John Callahan is not seeking re-election.

Souweine worked at MassPIRG, a lobbying research group found by Ralph Nader, as a staff attorney and executive director for three years until last year when he joined the attorney general's office.

Souweine, a member of the UMass basketball team his freshman year in 1965, received his bachelor's degree from Columbia University and law degree from Harvard.

SGA elections

By RENEE MOBLEY
Black Affairs Staff

It has been well over a week since the campus wide elections for SGA presidents. The votes have been compiled and tallied, yet still we have not determined who our student leaders will be.

The problem is one of percentages. The two favored tickets, Tyson-Gordon and Birmingham-Barenberg, received votes of 799 and 440 respectively.

Though the margin of votes was wide it was not quite wide enough. According to the SGA constitution, any candidate for such an office must receive at least 33 per cent of all the votes cast. The Tyson-Gordon ticket fell slightly short of this percentage with their overall 30 per cent of the vote, Birmingham-Barenberg team received 14 per cent of the cast votes.

Analysis

The determination of the SGA co-presidents now lies in the hands of the area governments and the Student Senate by means of an electoral convention.

There are a total of 100 electoral votes. The area governments control 50 of these votes with the remaining under Student Senate controls. There are seven area governments, each having a total of six votes with the exception of Southwest and the commuters with ten votes each.

Each area government must have two thirds of its delegates cast a vote. If they fail to comply their votes will not be counted. For example, if one residential area government is able to get only one fourth of its delegates to vote, that area governments votes will be eliminated and the electoral convention will then consist of a total of 94 votes.

Two thirds of all student senators must vote before the Senate's 50 votes can be counted in the convention.

All votes are counted proportionally with the highest proportions of electoral votes going to the candidates with the highest proportion of popular votes from area governments and senators.

If one particular area government casts 60 votes, 40 for candidate X and 20 for candidate Y (sum of 60), the electoral votes will be divided in the same manner as the popular votes. Four of the electoral votes will go to candidate X and 2 electoral votes will go to candidate Y.

The Senate electorate will be determined in the same way. If 100 senators vote in the convention and 50 vote for candidate X and fifty vote for candidate Y, then each candidate will receive 25 (½) of the Senate's fifty electoral votes.

Any blank protest votes will be tallied separately along with the number of non votes by any delegates present at the convention. This figure is divided in half and each candidate is given one half as part of their total popular votes. Either of the remaining candidacy teams needs only a majority of the electoral votes to win the election.

The electoral convention will be held tomorrow, March 30, in Boyden Gym at 8:30 p.m.

NBSA rally!

On Saturday, April 1, 1978, the National Black Student Association will be sponsoring a nationwide demonstration and rally in Washington, D.C., in front of the White House beginning at 1:00 p.m., to protest U.S. involvement in the exploitation and oppression of Black people in South Afrika.

The 5-College chapter of the N.B.S.A., will be providing transportation to and from this historical event. Vans will be leaving from Butterfield on Friday, March 31, 1978, at 11:00 p.m.

The time to support Black liberation in South Afrika is now! Because Black people in America can no longer complain about affirmative action and racism here, but remain silent when we see racial oppression and economic exploitation in Afrika. It's the same enemy. The same corporation that will discriminate against a Black college graduate or Black worker in America, is the same corporation that keeps the white minority government strong in order to pay Black South Afrikan workers "slave wages."

A helping hand, international studies

By ANGELA THOMAS
Black Affairs Editor

Most freshpersons and newcomers to this university will agree that adjusting to UMass can be a very lonely and difficult experience. The situation grows even hairy when one is a foreign student, new not only to UMass but also to American culture and language. Imagine being separated from home by thousands of miles, and a huge body of water known as the Atlantic Ocean. What does the foreign student have to look forward to? The International Studies Association.

The International Studies Association located in room 423 of the Student Union Ballroom, provides the opportunity for foreign students to meet other students while aiding them in adjusting to a new country and school.

Sophomore El-Youse, a student from Jerusalem and a member of the Association said, "The average American only speaks English and has had limited experience and knowledge of foreign students. It is hard to make friends with people who know so little about you."

The International Studies Association was founded in 1962 when the Student Senate voted for its establishment as an RSO group and in 1963 the organization began operations.

Composed of 600 students representing 80 different countries including Kenya, Iran, Israel, England, Japan and China, the main objective of the Association is "To bring foreign students together to enable them to better adjust and meet the host community," remarked Tahir Iqbal, treasurer of the group.

In order for foreign and UMass students to become better acquainted, numerous coffee houses, international dances, and films are sponsored.

Closer contact with other Third World organizations is another objective of the Association. Iqbal comments, "We want to establish strong links, most foreign students are from Asia and Africa."

The International Studies Association is opened every day between the hours of 10:30 and 4 p.m. All students are welcome to drop in, visit, and meet "people from all over the world."

Scenes from past International Affairs sponsored by the International Studies Association include, "An Evening in the Land of the Arabian Knights," and "An Evening in the Philippines." The next International Affairs will be held in the Campus Center Auditorium Saturday April 22.

In response to Terrell Evans' commentary on 3-10: Your discussion on "White America" is oversimplified and lacks the serious taking into consideration of poor and workingclass white America. While you are discussing people concerned with "conversations over cocktails" you seem to forget about the people in the coal mines, construction pits, factories, kitchens, etc. It may surprise you that by sheer numbers, poor and workingclass whites outnumber poor and workingclass Blacks, and that their neighborhoods and general status — though not as bad off as those of poor and workingclass Blacks — are still unenviable. Before any conclusions can be drawn as to how America's problems might be alleviated, the poor and workingclass whites ought to be taken into account and consulted.

To be sure there is much antagonism and enmity between workingclass whites and workingclass Blacks. This is the serious problem and it comes out of economic competition and cultural, mutual suspicion rather than contempt based on skin color difference alone. So, alleviation of this antagonism ought to be the first priority, and must involve equal involvement of both groups of people, through development of MUTUAL (not one-way) understanding of each by the other (without moralizations, generalizations, or cliche rhetoric).

High Notes...

Santa Esmerelda — House of the Rising Sun — Casablanca
Cameo — We All Know Who We Are — Chocolate City — Casablanca

In the fall of '77, Santa Esmerelda gave us a whirling dervish song in their remake of the Animals' hit, "Don't Let Me Be Misunderstood." This was a passionate outcry from a voice that begged, then demanded; cowered, then threatened. Combined with wild Flamenco guitar and handclaps, the vocals made this a song that really stuck with you and give you more of itself everytime you heard it.

"House Of The Rising Sun" reiterates everything we hear in "Don't Let Me Be ... ". At times, this is good but others find it a little stagnating. "House Of The Rising Sun" is a rousing appeal loaded with passion spitefully portrayed through the leads of LeRoy Gomez. Once again, Gomez will at one moment command your attention and then painfully cower to your feet and beg you for an audience at the next. The recurring use of Flamenco guitar and handclaps is effective but not too economic as the song leans dangerously toward repetition of their first effort.

While sticking to its previous formula almost religiously, Esmerelda's "House ... " is still a valiant stab at defying classification. While a viable disco prancer, their version is a no less painful lament than the Animals' and packs the same sweltering emotion. There are enough elements more or less effectively combined to defy the categorizers with an almost troubling diversity. Disco dancers will find it's merciless pulse and handclaps hard to resist even though the claps aren't the choreographed, military-type clap that they're used to. Their frustration is the rockers' delight as they'll find the song hard to ignore when they listen to its raucous, swirling guitars that surround you while the horns teasingly dart in and out to capture however fleeting thoughts of romance.

Like a caged animal in heat, the record seems to be saying "Let me out of here!" wherever it's played. With Gomez leading the charge (and knowing when it's expedient to retreat) the group seems to be trying to strike a blow for the rejection of classification. This cause may or may not seem worthy or important but that too is a matter of judgement.

A group that's somewhat easier to classify is Cameo, the group that's trying to put the "C On The Funk".

From the picture on the cover, one gets the impression that the group is going to venture into the Funk "jungle". Having their heads in the photo substituted with animal heads, the implication is that once they go into the jungle, they'll find themselves.

In the past, Cameo seemed to be blazing their own trial with cuts like "Rigor Mortis" and "Post Mortem." They appear content to follow the beaten path and make music like the other folks. While their imitative ways steer them through the woods quite nicely on some cuts, on others it leaves them hopelessly lost.

While "C On The Funk" is a stab at Parliament's P. Funk (Wants to Get Funked UP), the ballad "Why Did I Lose You?", was laid in the path of the Ohio Players' track, "Alone". Neither cut is outstanding as "C" never gets off the ground and "Why" doesn't capture half of the feelings of hurt and displacement displayed by Satch in "Alone".

As the group ventures deeper into the land of the ballads (funk groups must tread carefully in this dark area of the woods) they stalk the harmonies of the 60's and chain this already domesticated animal with a flowing arrangement that works nicely on the title cut and, "It's over".

The brightest spot on this LP is their stab at funk satire. Sounding like a cross between Parliaments campy satire and Johnny Guitar Watson's searing protests, Cameo's "Inflation" can't be ignored as it adds a new slant to this area of music. Rather than talk of inflation as merely a matter of not having enough to eat or not being able to drive a Cadillac. Cameo definitely treads new paths when they talk about inflation as the reason for many women on the pill. This hint at genocide is both fresh and important.

Aside from this, Cameo's little jaunt through the woods doesn't take us through any "uncharted" musical territory. It does, however, prove to be more than a walk in the park.

ARMY ROTC A TOUCH OF CLASS

By Randy Glenn

Saturday, March 11, the cadets of Army ROTC put together a very classy formal dinner; the Military Ball. Those people attending, had an evening of dinner, dance and good social conversation.

The Military Ball serves many purposes. Outside of giving cadet oopportunity to see cadets they normally have little contact with, it also gives many cadets a relatively accurate idea of the type of social affairs they will attend as a future officer. Also, those people interested in joining Army ROTC were given the chance to meet and talk to some of the other cadets and cadre in a far more relaxed atmosphere.

The evening got underway around six o'clock with a cocktail hour giving time for those people who are chronically late to everything, a chance to arrive. The cocktail hour was immediately followed by the receiving line. The receiving line is just what it says, more or less. The guests are greeted and introduced to the other attending members.

From there everyone went to their designated table and after a short prayer, dinner was served. Anyone who has attended a formal dinner of sorts knows that the standard food served at formal dinners is roast beef. As dinner started, the hall was filled with sounds of smacking lips, and light conversation. Much of the conversation focused around the cadre, who seemed quite content telling stories of the more humorous side of Army living to the intent ears of curious cadets.

After an entertaining dinner, there was dancing and more conversation. The joyous mixture of laughter and dancing was a very climatic and happy ending for the formal part of the evening (every formal affair has an after-party). Though there were no Cinderellas or crowned Princes, no one there had any doubts about the sheer magic of the evening.

The nucleus of cadets that endured the headaches necessary for the production of such an event, saw there rewards in the faces of those attending. Oh what a night!

Members of the Men Against Rape and Violence protest the showing of "Inserts," a movie they termed pornographic and degrading. (Staff photo by Dan Vuillemier)

Anti-porn vigil held

By DEBORAH BROIDE
Collegian Staff

Ten members of Men Against Rape and Violence (MARV) held an anti-pornography vigil last night outside of the Campus Center Auditorium where the X-rated film "Inserts" was shown.

Doug Friedman, a member of MARV, said "the aim was not to stop people from going to the film, but to start them thinking about pornography and to raise people's consciousness."

Leaflets were distributed to 800 people as they entered the auditorium. The leaflets urged the prospective audience members not to support the showing of the pornographic film.

Friedman said, "films like 'Inserts' use women's bodies in a violent way for entertainment and profit."

Pornography is a crime against woman, he added. "It presents sexual violence against women as entertainment for men. Pornography contributes to a social climate in which rape, woman battering, and sexual harassment are condoned."

Steven Bauer, Head-of-Residence of Wheeler Dorm which sponsored the film, said, "'Inserts' is not a pornographic film." Bauer distributed a leaflet which said that while the plot of "Inserts" concerns the making of a pornographic film, the actual film is not pornographic.

The leaflet further said "although 'Inserts' depicts an act of violence against a woman, it does not advocate nor encourage that act but is, rather, self-consciously critical of it."

"Though the film is an 'entertainment' the leaflet continued, it is also a serious exploration of exploitation of both women and men in a capitalistic social structure. It is a film which deals with the issue of pornography in an ironic context in order to show it for the degradation it is."

Friedman said "'Inserts' is one of the more destructive porno films because a lot of people won't consider this pornography. 'Inserts' states that men have the right to sexually assault women," he said.

Friedman defines pornography as "the use of a woman's body in a sexually violent manner." He said that "there is a difference between films which show sexual sharing versus sexual exploitation."

"The exploitation of men is wrong as well, but women as a class are oppressed by men for men's entertainment."

Bauer said Wheeler's House Council agreed on the showing of "Inserts". He said "the film has not been shown in the Amherst area and a name actor like Richard Dreyfuss would help draw in people to view the film." He added, "the profits of the film will be going to the dorm.".

Friedman considered the vigil to be successful. He said "It seems that a lot of people are questioning the issue of pornography more than before."

He concluded, "this has been a good consciousness raising experience for all involved."

"Since 'Inserts' is the provocative film that it is, I'm glad for the public discourse concerning the issues of the film," said Bauer.

Arabs attempt peace between factions

CAIRO, Egypt (UPI) — Arab foreign ministers called yesterday for a meeting of Arab chiefs-of-state and set up a committee to heal the breach between Egypt and its hardline opponents who oppose Cairo's bid for peace with Israel.

The 11 ministers and six ambassadors, seeking to "revive Arab solidarity," called on Sudanese President Jaafar Numeiry, to head the conciliation committee.

But there were doubts the conciliation attempt would work because the ministerial conference was boycotted by the five "rejection" states — Syria, Libya, Algeria, Iraq and Southern Yemen.

The conference also declared backing for the Palestine Liberation Organization as the "sole legitimate representative" of the Palestinian people and said its capabilities should be strengthened.

It approved a Beirut government request for a six-month extension of the mandate of the Arab peace-keeping force in Lebanon, which expires April 27.

Arab League Secretary-General Mahmoud Riad said the conference "emphasized the necessity of an Arab summit, to be held as soon as possible, to mobilize Arab capabilities in face of the Israeli aggressive challenge."

Soviets criticize Carter's trip

MOSCOW (UPI) — The Soviet news agency Tass yesterday strongly criticized President Carter's trip to Latin America and Africa as the "same old baggage."

In a dispatch from Washington, Tass said U.S. policy on both continents is linked to the business interests of "North American monopolies." And, while not personally attacking Carter, it assailed the administration's "demagogical" human rights campaign and the Panama Canal treaties.

"The Latin American states have long been expressing dissatisfaction at the domination of their economy by North American monopolies, regarding their predatory activity as a serious obstacle on the road of economic development," Tass said.

Tass said criticism was growing in Latin America of the "demagogical U.S. human rights campaign," and accused the United States of backing "the most reactionary regimes of the continent: the Chilean junta, the dictators of Nicaragua, Haiti and Paraguay."

In Africa, Tass said, Carter will seek support for a policy designed "to salvage the racialist regimes in the south of Africa and to create the most favorable conditions for the exploitation of the natural resources of that continent by the U.S. monopolies."

Waves split ship; demolition unneeded

PORTSALL, France (UPI) — Pounding waves split the hulk of the supertanker Amoco Cadiz yesterday, allowing tons of oil to gush from its remaining holds and saving navy divers the trouble of dynamiting the beached wreck.

Marc Becam, regional government official in charge of the cleanup program, had warned that the cleanup of the beaches, harbors and fishing areas would not be effective if oil was allowed to seep for months from the wreck.

To get the estimated 20,000 to 30,000 tons of oil out quickly, divers had planned to blow out the bottom of the wreck as soon as the weather improved.

But late yesterday, a spokesman for the Marine Pollution authority said the pounding waves again split the wreck— already in two pieces — and separated the foredeck from the midship section.

The oil immediately began gushing out, the spokesman said, making the demolition operation unnecessary.

The Amoco Cadiz created the world's largest oil spill after it grounded on sharp reefs off Porstall March 16. An estimated 90 percent of its 220,000-ton oil cargo had oozed into the sea before yesterday, polluting one of France's most popular tourist spots and killing coastal sealife and thousands of seabirds.

Decentralize the power

To the Editor:

To say the Student Government Association is presently a farce is about as controversial a statement as saying Nixon was a crook. Concluding this, the options would seem to be:

1] Support the status quo while continuing to beat the already pathetically dead horse;

2] Try to make more "efficient" the present system, which structurally guarantees to absorb and foil internal reform efforts; or

3] Fundamentally replace the present structure with one more likely to serve the serious and diverse needs of undergraduates.

Clearly the only authentic alternative is the last, and change is needed quickly because student problems are mounting.

Faculty unionization has changed the whole academic ball game. Issues which are being treated as matters negotiable only between the faculty and administration are, to students, the whole ball of wax: class sizes, curriculum selection, degree requirements, evaluation procedures, and on and on.

Formal collective bargaining upon these issues is under way right now, with students powerless to determine the outcome. Amidst this crisis the SGA is, as already observed, in danger of collapsing under the weight of its contradictions. A new system is required, one which will be truly democratic and effective.

This new system must be based upon the result of a new relationship between students and the system itself. Where SGA power is now concentrated in the hands of a relative few [however well intentioned some may be], that power must be decentralized to the many grass-root and representative student groups which already exist. Student groups [councils, assemblies, etc.] in residential areas, academic areas, workplaces, etc. must be given the power of determining what the SGA is and does.

Structurally this new system could work by replacing the present senate of non-representatives with an assembly made up of representatives of such student groups as mentioned above. This assembly could have built into it the requirement to hold one or more "town meeting style" sessions per semester, so as to foster even greater opportunity for student participation in the major policy and funding decisions of their student government. All these representatives could be recalled at any time, assuring continuous accountability.

These changes would fundamentally liberate both the SGA and the students it now tends to dominate: students would become the rulers instead of the ruled.

The student government system would finally become the enjoyable place where undergraduates could go to find solidarity and support in meeting their needs, instead of the place where students back-stab other students. And this new unity could strive for such major achievements as the recognition of student rights to be equal participants in collective bargaining.

Basically these are all ideas which different people have been recommending for several years, keyed to the name student unionization. But the name given to these kinds of changes is not important, it is the substance of the change itself that deserves our attention.

Can all of this be guaranteed to work? The answer is simple: the students themselves, not just a few students but all interested students. What is now left to succeed or fail within the hands of the unrepresentative few, would instead be placed in the hands of the representative many. And while it's still no absolute guarantee, it's a damn better gamble than what presently exists.

Come by and talk with us at the Student Organizing Project if you have thoughts on these matters.

Bob Evans

Cast a blank convention ballot

To the Editor:

Once again, student government has cheated students. This time, students have been deprived of the chance to choose their president. The two candidacies on the convention ballot, Tyson-Gordon and Birmingham-Barenburg, are unrepresentative of student choice, as expressed in the popular election.

Although there were a multitude of candidacies in the popular election, they can be reduced to three types. First are those with intimate ties to the SGA power structure, namely Tyson-Gordon and Birmingham-Barenburg. Second were those with marginal ties to that structure and third were those who think student government is a farce.

However, despite the fact that Tyson-Gordon and Birmingham-Barenburg received but 38 per cent of the vote between them, theirs are the only two candidacies on the ballot. This move has been justified by claiming that the constitution requires that the top two candidates be run-off.

But such reasoning is fallacious on two counts. First, the constitution is unclear on this subject, as parts of it indicate that more than two names can be entered. And second, Birmingham-Barenburg finished third, not second. None - of - the - Above finished second, but as that option is threatening to those in power, it was denied a place on the convention ballot.

The result of all this is that the senate power structure, which got but a minority of the vote, is trying to make sure that one of their own becomes president. The losers in this powerplay are the other candidates and the majority of students who voted for them.

We are those opposition candidates and we strongly request that you talk with your senators and area government representatives and urge them to cast a blank ballot during the voting. A majority of blank ballots will hopefully allow other names to be considered and make for a more ethical and representative convention.

Support group for black women

To the Editor:

A support-work group for black women is being co-sponsored by Everywoman's Center and the Psychological Services Center at UMass. The facilitator will be Vickie Mays, a doctoral candidate in the clinical psychology program in the psychology department.

The purpose of this group will be to share and explore how age, sex and racial identity impact upon relationships and the ability to cope with day-to-day issues of survival. It is hoped that members of the group will be diverse in terms of age, class, life-styles and political orientation as a way of opening up lines of communication.

The group will meet once a week, probably Sunday evenings, for two hours per session, beginning April 9. Meetings will be held at Everywoman's Center, 506 Goodell Hall.

This group is primarily for black women over twenty-five years of age, but the group is not limited to that age range. Calls will be accepted from anyone who wants more information or is interested in joining the group. This will not be a therapy group but is designed as a support-work group. Though no attempt will be made to prescribe or circumscribe the experience of group members, it is not recommended for individuals in need of intensive psychotherapy.

The 'un-democracy'

Bill Sundstrom

Tonight the Hatch is offering the best in live entertainment since it brought the Ramones to campus last semester. If you happen to be on your way to the pinball machines around 9:00, you might want to stop in and check it out.

The show, of course, is the Student Government Association electoral convention, at which the next SGA president will supposedly be chosen. The convention comes in the wake of the recent SGA "popular" election, in which none of the candidacies received the requisite one-third vote.

If indeed student government is supposed to be run "democratically," and the existence of popular elections would suggest that this is the case, then it is useful to decide just what a democracy is and whether the SGA actually lives up to the definition.

In theory, democracy is "government by the people." At the very least it is government sanctioned by the people. That is to say, even if students don't have the time or interest to become actively involved in student politics, they should at least be aware of what goes on and who the major personalities are so they can make intelligent judgments on candidates or referenda.

Obviously, this is hardly the case with the student government association. For a number of reasons, knowledge of the student political system is limited. First, students are usually in the university community for no more than four years, a rather small amount of time for familiarizing oneself with the political goings-on. Second, student politicians are seldom public figures — be it the fault of the local media or the low publicity value of student politics, the students at large are rarely able to follow particular 'heavies' in the system in order to judge their performance over time. Third, the student government's lack of real influence in the community has led many students to reject it as a viable force for change and input of ideas.

All of these factors would suggest that student government does not lend itself to centralization, but rather to a much more localized form than presently exists. If the majority of decisions were made at the local level, students would of necessity have better access to information about both issues and the student activists representing them.

Ultimately, it is this lack of information among the electorate, which seems to be an unavoidable feature of the present SGA structure, which has made the student senate as undemocratic as it is and will allow the electoral convention to be a forum for SGA "insiders" and the usual creeping cronyism.

In spite of the inevitable three-ring atmosphere which should prevail tonight, there remains some possibility for constructive change. One would hope that the area governments will exercise their 50 per cent of the vote in an expression of dissatisfaction with the way they have been treated by the senate, with the centralization which has excluded the vast majority of students from the process, and with the illegitimacy of a government which can only muster a 20 per cent voter turnout in its major annual election.

They call it justice

By RAHIM SHAMASH

The oppression and misfortune of the American Indians throughout the history of the U.S.A. is very well known. They became a powerless minority after the destruction which was brought by the white man, and they are now forgotten on their reservations and do not wish to be assimilated into a country which left them nothing but misery. Their suffering has been increasing for 400 years, until today, when they have no government of their own and have lost all the land that once belonged to them.

Let us imagine a situation in which the Indians realize that the only way they could run their own affairs and survive would be by taking one part of North America and establishing it as a state of their own. But everyone knows that it could not be achieved by appealing to the conscience of the world. It is obvious that their only alternative would be to arm themselves and fight to establish their control over a deserted region inhabitated mainly by Indians, and thus regain a fraction of their original land.

If this should happen, would you justify the destruction of this new state by American organizations opposed to it? Would you ask what right the Indians have to a state of their own, and would the Young Socialist Alliance support such a state? Would you call these Indians racists?

This hypothetical situation did happen, not in the U.S., but in the Middle East, in a land called Palestine. For over 3,500 years the Jews have called this the land of Israel, and it has been their homeland, whether spiritually or physically. When they were conquered and exiled from Israel in 586 B.C.E. they returned 50 years later and rebuilt the Jewish state. When the Greeks conqured the land in the fourth century B.C.E. the Maccabees stirred a Jewish rebellion and re-established Jewish control. And finally, when the Romans annexed Israel to their empire, the Jews staged two bloody revolts in 70 and 135 C.E. that both failed.

In the seventh century the Arabs occupied the Land of Israel, made it a province in their new empire and called it both Palestine and Jordan. In 1922 Great Britain partitioned the Mandate of Palestine (which had been promised to the Jews in its entirety) into two territories, Palestine (west of the River Jordan) and Transjordan (east of the river). In 1948 the U.N. partitioned Palestine again, leaving the Jews with only one quarter of the original territory. Israel became an independent state for the third time, and the Kingdom of Jordan annexed the remainder of the territory west of the Jordan River, rather than allowing it to declare its independence.

Thus, nearly two million. Palestinians became citizens of Jordan. Although the Arabs gained control of three fourths of the Land of Israel they still are not satisfied, in the same way that the U.S.A. would not be content with 49 states if the fiftieth were controlled by Indians. For the Arabs, twenty one sovereign states are not enough, they still want to destroy Israel and have twenty two independent countries, including two Palestinian states.

This desire is part of the Arab goal to be the only rulers of the Middle East. They managed to crush the Kurdish minority's struggle for independence in Iraq and are attempting to subjugate the Christians in Lebanon. Now they are struggling to achieve their "Manifest Destiny" with the destruction of Israel, and they call it "the Arab Cause" and "Justice"......

Waste not, want not

Damon Thomas

A few days ago, while meandering about in Louis' Foods, I came across several racks of "no-deposit, no-return" bottles and cans. It occurred to me then and there that not one, not a single one, of these cans or bottles was slated to be reused. Instead, the only future in store for these so-called "non-reusable" containers after emptying them of their contents is to deposit them in "sanitary land fills." Or, these bottles and cans will simply end up in ponds, on beaches, or on city streets. What a tremendous waste!

There are a number of reasons why the throwaway container system itself must be thrown out, not the least of which is the drain the system imposes on our natural resources. Currently, the beverage container industry uses seven million tons of glass, two millions tons of steel, and 500,000 tons of aluminum yearly. This amounts to 45 per cent of all glass, 6 per cent of all aluminum, and 2 per cent of all steel used annually in the United States. The National Commission on Supplies and Shortages recently released its final report to the president and Congress. In this report, Government and the Nation's Resources, the commission recommended mandatory deposits on beverage containers to insure that the rate of recycling reflects informed decisions made on the basis of the true costs of materials. Using a container more than once or recycling a throwaway one reduces the amount of virgin raw materials required to be mined and processed.

Half the amount of glass and metal in household trash are throwaway beverage containers — a total of 7 per cent of all household trash. This portion of waste is growing by 8 per cent per year while the total volume of waste itself is growing by 3.5 per cent yearly. Many communities are running out of landfill space and are being forced to look at more expensive methods of disposal. Every ton of throwaway bottles and cans adds to the problem and to municipal costs. The national average cost for collection and disposal is $26 per ton. About 28,000 tons of beverage containers annually reach the solid waste stream in Massachusetts alone.

The throwaway bottle system burns up to four times as much energy as one in which a returnable bottle is used 15 times. These figures released for the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA), by Midwest Research Institute include the energy cost of returning the bottle and washing it for reuse. In a Federal Energy Administration study released in the autumn of 1976, it was estimated that if a national returnable bottle law exists in 1982 with can sales remaining at their 1976 level and with refillable bottles reused at least ten times, 81,000 barrels of oil will be saved daily. This would amount to a 44 per cent energy savings for the industry as a whole.

Under a reusable container system the bottler or canner buys the container once, fills it over and over again (the national average is 15 times), and sells the contents. As it stands now, throwaway bottles and cans force the consumer to buy a throwaway container that the customer need not own. Thirty to forty per cent of the cost to the consumer for a drink in a throwaway is for the container alone. Consumers are really forced to pay for that unwanted throwaway three times; first, for the container, then, for disposing of the containers; and finally, in the form of litter collection for those who fail to "please put litter in its place." Since it costs the Commonwealth of Massachusetts $750,000 a year to pick up litter, the savings involved are substantial.

Currently, a piece of legislation known as the "Bottle Bill" is being debated by the Massachusetts legislature. The Bottle Bill requires a minimum five cents deposit on every beer and soft drink beverage container sold in Massachusetts. If past action is any indicator, the bill will probably be defeated again, thanks to the diligent pressure of container industry lobbyists who realize that under capitalism there is profit in waste.

Write to your local legislators anyway, and tell them to support the bill. Also remind them that passage of the bill in Massachusetts will create a net gain in jobs according to a 1975 study (Kopcke Report) released through the Federal Reserve Bank of Boston. If your elected representative continues in his-her non-support of the bill, you could always dump a few non-returnable cans and bottles on her-his front steps. You may be arrested for doing so, but at least you will get your point across. And you will also rid yourself of any unwanted "no-deposit, no-return" white elephants at the same time.

The heat is on

Frank Denton

The post-vacation stretch has reared its ugly head. Otherwise known as senior slump or the critical melting point of spring, spring fever is a germ to avoid. Love is fresh, the grass is wet, and the books are appallingly dry.

Studying is now the butt of many punchy lines, or rather, paunch lines, as we eat the words and resolutions offered up on New Year's Day. Many of us would rather sleep by the bubbling brooks than doze before puttering professors. Students are on strike.

A number of reasons come to mind for ignoring studies and classes. It is more thought-provoking to write a Collegian column, for example, than to construct carbonylic allylic models, measure marginal cost or subject one's subjunctives to closer scrutiny. Other items of higher priority are sleep, laundry, today's mail and yesterday's funnies.

The rationale propounding academic endeavor is not as prodigious. One's grades are at stake. One has to do something. One enjoys the subject.

Actually, enjoying the subject is an excuse of long and illustrious tradition. When universities originated in medieval Europe, the matriculated students controlled the curricula and tenure of the faculty. Instructors were fined for being late. Philosophy sharpened the intellect.

Perhaps we could take our example from the renaissance philosophers. Perhaps we could establish priorities of phenomena to be examined, such as the applied physics of the frisbee or air currents in a hookah. Perhaps we could flunk.

To our great aggravation, the nine days of respite we just enjoyed merely marked the initiation of the second semester grind. Half of the midterms have still not been taken. Most of the papers are not yet written. And finals are chomping down with mandibular mastication.

In the crush of the next eight weeks, good study habits will find a place of primary importance, usually in a closet. This is inexcusable. In an effort to enlighten the masses with my long experience and short nights, I have capsulized the essence of study habits.

Good Study Habits: One is much more efficient and coherent after eight hours of sleep per night. A discursive outline of salient points and definitions from notes and text is excellent for cursory review, and writing it improves knowledge of concepts. One should be able to review notes for at least three full days before an exam. One should study two hours for every class hour.

Emergency Study Habits: Prayer helps. For some reason, an all-nighter is easier if one has had only four hours of sleep the night before, instead of eight. No-Doze won't corrode or macerate one's stomach as coffee will. Most chapters can be understood by the summary at the end and the topic headings. Exams from previous years are very illuminating. If one must do problems at the last moment, one should do only every third or fourth one; the material between those is redundant. One should do anything but the material covered by a particular exam in the last half hour before said evaluative exercise. Warm or hot coke and aspirin can produce a very convincing pestilence on short notice.

There are eight weeks left, fellow students, eight weeks we should not waste. The first half of the game was a picnic compared to the free-for-all that awaits us. We can either pay now or pray later.

New Star Trek film

Kirk, Spock to return

HOLLYWOOD [UPI] — Paramount Studios plans to make a $15 million motion picture based on the old TV series, "Star Trek," with members of the original cast.

Producer Gene Roddenberry said Tuesday William Shatner will return as Capt. James Kirk and Leonard Nimoy as the Vulcan first officer, Mr. Spock.

He said Oscar-winner Robert Wise would direct the science-fiction space thriller and the USS Enterprise would be refitted for the film.

Studio executives said they decided to bring back "Star Trek" next year after "Star Wars" and "Close Encounters of the Third Kind" proved science-fiction space movies are here to stay.

been estimated at 1.6 billion dollars. South African Apartheid survives due to the economic investment of the U.S. In South Africa, equal employment is illegal for Black people, Black people are paid starvation wages, and as a result there is a 53% child mortality rate. Black people have to carry passes in order to walk in the city, and they work fifteen hours a day. Everyday there are hundreds of planes flying overhead carrying napalm bombs, ready to destroy the Black people. Every attempt to change apartheid for the better has only resulted in increased bloodshed of Blacks, by the White minority, who are backed by the seven billion in economic investments from Britain, 1.6 billion from the U.S., billions from France, Canada, Germany, Israel, Japan, and others.

There will be workshops on organzing around university divestment, Coordination for Regional Demonstration is set tentatively for April 30th, the formation of a regional Communications Network for Coordination and Outreach for anti-apartheid (a South African Support group communications syndicate), and there will be many educational workshops on the structure and situation of South Africa itself. There will be also films.

This movement has been underway for some time and is gaining momentum.

The bus or busses will leave the Campus Center Concourse at 4:00 p.m. Friday afternoon, the price is $3.00. The Registration fee is $2.50. There is housing, and if a bed is desirable, it costs $3.00. The bus will be leaving Yale at 4:00 p.m. Sunday and is expected back at the Campus Center 5:30-6:00.

Cypriot ship stays, deadly gas aboard

BOSTON (AP) — The Coast Guard granted permission to the crew of a Cypriot freighter to stay at anchor in Cape Cod Bay until this afternoon in order to secure a dangerous cargo.

A spokesman said the captain of the port, Capt. Lynn Hein, issued an order allowing the 290-foot Aghius Nicklaus B to remain off Provincetown until 4 p.m. today.

The action followed an inspection of the vessel by officers of the Coast Guard cutter Cape Horn.

The Cypriot ship dropped anchor to secure five one-ton bottles of deadly liquid chlorine gas which had broken loose in stormy weather.

The Coast Guard said the gas was not leaking and was no danger to people ashore. The Aghius Nicklaus B anchored eight miles off Race Point at the tip of Cape Cod.

Parents fight son's chemotherapy care

HINGHAM, Mass. (UPI) — The parents of 2-year-old Chad Green will be back in court today for the latest round in their fight to discontinue chemotherapy for the leukemiastricken boy.

A Massachusetts General Hospital doctor insists Chad will die if the treatments are stopped, but Gerald and Diane Green say they'd rather have their son go to a "better place" than be tortured physically and emotionally.

Chad was supposed to undergo chemotherapy yesterday. But when Hingham District Court Judge Martha Ware continued Monday's care and protection hearing until today, she did not order any therapy in the interim.

A care and protection suit has been filed by the Boston hospital, whose doctors say Chad has no chance of surviving the disease without continuous chemotherapy.

"There's absolutely, no question. The boy will die without chemotherapy." said Dr. John Truman, 42, who is treating the boy. "The purpose of chemotherapy is to kill the leukemia cells. If the cells are allowed to live, it only hampers our chances of treating it."

Urban leader praises Carter

BOSTON (UPI) — State Sen. Joseph F. Timilty, chairman of the National Commission on Neighborhoods, yesterday praised President Carter's new national urban policy as a "people-oriented" plan that will aid Massachusetts city neighborhoods.

The proposed two-year, $10.4 billion federal program emphasizes cooperation among federal authorities, state and municipal governments and private businesses.

It calls on Congress to approve tax breaks and lowinterest loans for companies investing in the inner cities. It also encourages creation of jobs for unemployed inner city residents, establishment of neighborhood clean-up programs and return of suburban residents to urban areas.

Your Birthday

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 29

Born today, you have a strong character and a pleasant personality. Honest and straightforward, you find it difficult to understand the devious and deceitful. You try to get along with your fellow men, regardless of whether you agree with their actions or understand their motives. You enjoy the aesthetic, and are inclined to indulge yourself in it.

You enjoy travel and will leave one place for another with almost no provocation. You do not insist upon traveling first class; you consider part of the adventure is traveling as inconspicuously as possible. If you can be taken for a native of the place you are visiting, you are happy.

You have many prosperous friends, though you may have a long way to go before being even moderately well off. Others enjoy doing things for you, however, so you may be able to live beyond your means without having to exceed your budget.

Others born on this date are: Walt Frazier, basketball star; John Tyler, 10th president of the United States.

To see what is in store for you tomorrow, find your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

THURSDAY, MARCH 30

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Be ready for new duties in old employment. Friends may help late today.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Foresight will serve you, hindsight will cause regrets. This may be a bitter-sweet day.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — You should acquire a few of life's luxuries today. Children show you joy.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — With your ambitious nature, you can progress easily today. Listen to elders.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Be inspired by another's success. Today could be one of the best of the year.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Give creative urges free rein, especially during the morning, when opportunities for gain are many.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — The optimistic Libra survives troubles in good spirits. Children plan for the future.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Don't take too seriously the negative side of the present phase of your work.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Another's shrewdness may disturb concentration this morning. Try to progress later.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Use your ability to make friends easily to your advantage today.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — You need a fertile brain to come to the rescue with ideas. Encourage your fancy.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — Ask advice of one who has shown ability to find new methods of doing old jobs. Late gains are exciting.

Sports in Brief

A's dump Allen

MESA, Ariz. [UPI] — Slugger Dick Allen was given an unconditional release from the Oakland A's yesterday after sitting on the bench for the entire spring training season.

Allen was voted the most valuable player in 1972 and is currently the third highest career home run hitter among active players. The 14-year veteran was signed with Oakland as a free agent and had previously played for Philadelphia, the Chicago White Sox, Los Angeles Dodgers and the St. Louis Cardinals.

Pistol Pete gone

NEW ORLEANS [UPI] — Guard Pete Maravich said yesterday his injured knee will sideline him for the rest of the season, but New Orleans jazz officials said the NBA's second leading scorer will remain on the active list.

In an interview with a New Orleans newspaper yesterday, Maravich said his right knee remained swollen, but jazz spokesman Dave Fredman said the guard's condition will be considered on a game-to-game basis.

The Jazz were a half-game ahead of the Atlanta Hawks for a final playoff bid.

Catlett goes home

MORGANTOWN, W. Va. [UPI] — West Virginia University yesterday hired Gale Catlett as its basketball coach to succeed Joedy Gardner, who was fired after leading the Mountaineers for four years.

Catlett, 37, head coach at the University of Cincinnati the past six years, said at a news conference that he would work hard to "get the job done" at his alma mater where he played in the 60's.

"I am not a miracle worker," said Catlett. "I have no secrets, no tricks — just hard work, dedication and loyalty to offer.

"This is a great opportunity for me. I have a special kind of love for the state, the university, and for the people. I'm a West Virginian, and the thought of coming back to WVU has been pressing on my mind for years."

In his six years at Cincinnati, his teams won 126 games while losing 44. By seasons, Catlett-led clubs were 17-9, 19-8, 23-6, 25-6, 25-5 and 17-10.

Without quoting a figure, Catlett said he didn't take a cut from his near-$33,000 a year pay with the Bearcats to accept the West Virginia job.

Lanier cops award

NEW YORK [UPI] — Detroit Pistons center Bob Lanier was voted the winner of the 1978 Walter Kennedy Citizenship Award by the Professional Basketball Writers Association of America, it was announced yesterday.

The award, named this year in honor of the late NBA commissioner, is presented annually to a player, coach or assistant coach in the league in recognition of outstanding humanitarian achievements within the community. It was won by Wes Unseld in 1975, Slick Watts in 1976 and Dave Bing last year.

The 6-foot-11, 255-pound Lanier, one of the league's all-time leading scorers and rebounders, gave clinics and demonstrations in the inner city during the summer, worked with the police athletic league and the Metropolitan area boys club of Detroit, and donated his time for many public service and charity events. He is honorary chairman of this year's Easter Seals telethon.

Heinsohn flaps gums without fear of "T"

BOSTON [AP] — The Boston Celtics fired Tom Heinsohn but no one can shut him up.

The former coach still is bellowing — not at National Basketball Association referees' but into a microphone.

He's a sports commentator, with visions of unearthing sports scoops for his "Tommy Heinsohn Show" on radio.

Heinsohn was the winningest active NBA coach when the former Holy Cross and Celtics gunner was fired Jan. 3, with Boston bogged down in the league's lower echelon.

It didn't take him long to resurface, first as a color man for Boston College basketball telecasts, now as a radio personality.

"I just let it all hang out," says the hefty former coach, sandwiched into a tiny recording studio like a bulldozer in a one-car garage. "I'm just going to be myself."

Being himself means letting words fly.

In his first commentaries — aired several times daily on WROR-FM, a rock music station — Heinsohn boomed:

— "Mr. Leon Spinks — and anyone who can take me out with one punch deserves to be called 'mister' — is entitled to his big payday against Muhammad Ali. Kenny Norton, wait your turn."

— "Don Zimmer is being set up as the villain if the Red Sox don't win the pennant."

"I hope we're not headed for a generation of Lloyd Free lookalikes in the NBA.. guys who slow down the game so they can take their pet 25-foot jumpers."

— "It looks like we're headed for a full dose of Rick Barry on TV in the NBA playoffs ... "

Needless to say, Heinsohn covets the national television role of Barry, the Golden State Warrior who is a color man for NBA playoff games.

Heinsohn thinks the national networks do a poor job of televising NBA games, failing to report on team strategy and play patterns, overemphasizing "one-on-one stuff."

Heinsohn claims he's turned down three college coaching jobs since his firing. NBA offers might come after the playoffs.

"I got into coaching because it was fun," he says. "At the end it was frustrating, and I'm not politicking for a job."

Heinsohn has asked his new bosses to obtain press passes for him this spring — although not at Boston Garden. He wants to cover baseball, soccer and tennis.

"I want to sit in the press box," he said. "Scoops? You never know. I don't want to be wishy-washy. If I end up controversial, fine."

At age 50, Howe still enjoys it

HARTFORD, Conn. [UPI] — Gordie Howe turns 50 Friday and the legendary hockey veteran says he still plays because "I enjoy it." Some people might wonder why.

"I've broken a wrist, ribs, toe, collarbone, had three knee operations, one elbow operation and had double vision for three months," Howe said.

"But the worst was when they said they had to open my skull to relieve some pressure on my brain. They didn't know if I would play again."

Howe, nursing another injury, a broken thumb, made his comments in an interview with the Willimantic Chronicle.

It is Howe's 30th year in professional hockey and his first season for the New England Whalers, runners-up to Winnipeg in the World Hockey Association standings.

When he was 20, he didn't think he would still be playing hockey at 50.

"Heck, no. It's like a kid who learns from a coach and thinks he's pretty good until he plays the coach. He finds out the old man isn't too bad either. I guess I can stay around. I still play because I enjoy it."

Some of the greatest names in hockey — Bobby Orr, Gump Worsley, Bobby Hull, Eddie Shore, Sid Abel and Bill Gadsby — will help honor Howe in pre-game ceremonies at the Springfield Civic Center tomorrow when the Whalers take on the Cincinnati Stingers.

"I don't know for sure yet about next year, but I am more positive than negative about it," he said. "A year like I've had makes me think about coming back.

"Jack Kelley (Whalers director of operations) is thinking about me quitting the year after next. I'm still in shape but you never know when something is going to give. It's been a year-to-year thing for quite a while," he said.

The 6-foot-2 Howe, who weighs 200 pounds, may have taken a beating in his long career, but he can mix it up with the best of them, including players half his age. And he still thinks he can keep up.

"I'm still within a stride of the average player in the league. Maybe not with the fastest ones — but close. I don't know that I pace myself. Once I'm in shape I feel good. But getting in shape at the start of the season gets tougher. It hurts."

His sons, Mark, 22, and Marty, 24, are also enjoying fine seasons with the Whalers. After his father, Mark is the second leading scorer for the team. Marty, who started the season as the fifth defenseman, has worked his way into a starting role with heads-up, intelligent play.

"Both Mark and Marty like it here in New England. In fact, the whole family is happy here. We're used to this kind of snow after 23 years in Detroit," Howe said.

After a quarter century at Detroit, Howe retired for two years. But in 1973, the Howes joined the Houston Aeros where they played until last May when they came to New England.

The Saskatchewan, Canada, native scored his 1,000th career goal Dec. 7 at Birmingham.

He said he plans to stay with the Whalers once he hangs up his skates.

"I'd like to help recruiting and be an assistant at the ice level. And, of course, I'll help with anything on the promotional level — anything that will put fans in the stands."

Spinks files suit for crown

LAS VEGAS, Nev. [UPI] — Disputed heavyweight champion Leon Spinks, battling to win back the full crown he took from Muhammad Ali, yesterday filed suit against the World Boxing Council to prohibit the WBC from recognizing Ken Norton as its champion.

Spinks' attorney Ed Bell of Detroit, brought suit in federal court against the WBC, its president Jose Sulaiman and 17 other officers of the WBC, seeking a temporary restraining order, a preliminary injunction, a permanent injunction with damages in excess of $10,000.

U.S. District Judge Roger Foley refused to issue a temporary restraining order against the WBC, clearing the way for the group to formally award its title to Norton in Los Angeles Wednesday. The judge set April 17 to hear arguments on whether to issue a preliminary injunction in the case.

"The WBC action is unprecedented in boxing," said Bell. "Never before has the heavyweight champion had his title removed 30 days after he won it."

Spinks wants the court to order the WBC to restore his title, which was stripped from him when he refused to make his first defense against Norton. Spinks is still designated heavyweight champion by the rival world boxing association and the New York State athletic commission.

The suit seeks to restrain the counsel from awarding its title to Norton or anyone else and prevent the WBC from sanctioning any other fights as heavyweight championship bouts.

The WBC, meeting in Madrid, sanctioned Spinks' fight against Ali Feb. 15 in Las Vegas with the requirement that the winner defend his title against Norton with no intervening bouts.

Spinks insulted

SAN JUAN, P.R. [UPI] — Boxing promotor Don King yesterday called Leon Spinks an "illiterate" black who is being taken advantage of by "white slave master" Bob Arum, King's principal rival in the promotion business.

King, who is also black, said Spinks was stripped by the World Boxing Council of the World Heavyweight title he won by defeating Muhammad Ali because of Arum's "deviousness" and King added he will now promote the new WBC champion, Ken Norton.

For the 'ultra-serious'

On Monday night, the Kentucky Wildcats defeated the Duke Blue Devils 94-88 at the St. Louis Checkerdome. To the casual sports fan, the finals of the NCAA tournament is the pinnacle of the college basketball season, a game that shouldn't be missed.

This year's final was no exception. Kentucky led throughout the game, but the young Duke ballclub was never "out of it" by any means, that is, there was always a glimmering, however slim, chance that the Blue Devils could win the game, but the hot hand of senior Jack Givens thwarted numerous surges by Duke. Duke was the winner of the Atlantic Coast Conference, the toughest division in college hoop.

But the game was of more significance to the ultra-serious sports enthusiast, the gambler who wagered on the game. The game at the Checkerdome proved to be a real nail-biter for the gambler, even though Kentucky maintained a significant lead throughout the game. Why? Because the betting line (or spread) on the game listed Kentucky as the favorite, surrendering 4 ½-5 points, depending on which bookie you talked to.

What this means is that if you decided to place down some bucks at standard 6-5 odds, and you took Duke, you would collect if Duke was either victorious or if they were defeated by less than five points (assuming the spread was five). If Duke was beaten by five, then no monetary transaction is required on the part of either party. If you decided to bet on the Wildcats, you could only collect if Joe B. Hall and his dedicated troops beat Duke by more than five. As the final score indicates, Kentucky won by six, thus rewarding their backers who were giving the points, and momentarily destroying the Blue Devils' supporters who elected to take the points.

Even if it seemed that Kentucky would win the game, the fan who bet on the game giving or receiving the standard number of points was seriously wondering if he would win or lose right down until the final buzzer. To the regular fan, who would win the game was of sole importance. To the gambler, the margin of victory was all that mattered.

To put it simply, the final outcome of any game is critically dependent on the two men wearing the black and white, controlling the flow of the game, the infamous referees. In most games where two fairly even teams do battle, officiating often determines the victor. Monday night was no exception. Although Kentucky did win the game, key calls by the refs actually determined the final margin of victory.

My opinion is that the referees that work key games throughout the tournament should be able to call a consistent game, and (of equal importance) be required to be in excellent physical condition in order to keep pace with the fast-moving, more or less run and gun type offenses that often is the tempo for important games. (Even though both teams in this instance can play effective zone defenses, Duke the 2-1-2, and Kentucky often goes with their awesome 1-3-1.)

I wonder, if an official is some fifty years old geritol pusher (as was the ref I am voicing my complaints against in Monday's game), how can the NCAA appoint him to ref the most important college hoop game of the year? In my opinion, send the guy to some nursing home, and bring in some youth to the officiating corps. At one point this ref failed to call an obvious travelling violation against Kentucky. And when Bill Foster started "making the motions" and screamigng, he was hit with a technical that resulted in a four-point swing late in the second half. As Al McGuire calmly put it "He blew the call. He knows it."

For this reason, that key games are often decided by officiating, an uncontrollable variable, I no longer (I'm 90% honest) bet on sporting games. Harness racing, well that's a different story. I think that over the long run, betting on a game in which there are uncontrollable elements and where literally anything can happen and usually does, betting is inevitably a losing proposition.

On Monday night I watched my best friends drop a crisp two grand simply because LaVon Williams jammed the ball with one second to go in the game. One second. Until that final second my buddies were winners. But because the man in the prison outfit did not call what was an obviously intentional foul on the man guarding Williams, Williams went in untouched for the stuff, and (instead of going to the line for a one-and-one) all the gamblers that were backing Duke went from near winners to solemn losers. It was a shame to watch this uneventful ending to a truly well played game.

Presumptious Prediction ... Al McGuire, Dick "Sports Challenge" Enberg, and Bill "who the hell am I?" Packer will be rehired in a package deal to do the NCAA's next year.

Season of the Gorilla

Once again the season is here
Which UMass fans love so dear
One which opponents will likely fear
The crowd summons the "Gorillas" to appear.

The season starts with snow on the ground
With some players short winded and round
Six weeks till the grass is a little greener
Our bodies slimmer, our senses keener.

We practice cradling, shooting, scoring and winning
The season is young, this is just the beginning
Taught by our coach to love the game we play
This hard work and heads up will bring us to the NC double A's.

Let's take a look at 2 years of playoffs gone by
Hopkins beat us 11 to 9, we were just 2 shy
Cornell nipped us at the end last year,
We showed them a game, not awe or fear.

Patterson, Spooner and Menna of the past
They shot the ball so hard and so fast
They moved so well and so quick
The goalies checked for the holes in their stick.

Rudi, Keefe, Laterra and Lobello at the midfield caused their opponents to most of the time yield
Back and forth 110 yards they trot
The blood and guts of battles hard fought.

On defense we had Dondi, Duke, Moose and Mac
Who loved to shut down the attack
Shuffling, poking with an occasional whack
Usually laying out the offense on their back.

Some players say "goalies are blessed with luck"
Not so with our goalie — "Duck"
He's held the fort with skill and sense
Why not? He's the last line of defense.

Dick Garber, the man that does it all
Who picks up the pieces and spirits when they fall
Nobody knows the game better or is respected as he
What more would you want a coach to be.

The whistle blows the ball goes to "Pit"
"Dave Martin" circles and takes a stiff hit
"Brooksie" scoops through and cradles it high
"Pit" sets up and whistles it by!

This is some of the play you'll be seeing this season
We are there to win for a good reason
For pride of our school and of our fans
Who support us so greatly by clapping their hands.

Some new faces will be there and also some old
But only those who fit the tough gorilla mold
Put all the things together, you got a team that's first rate,
All the better because we're winners in "78".

Pressure off, 'Cats home

ST. LOUIS [UPI] — Four hours after the nets had been cut down and placed around Jack Givens' neck, college basketball's newly crowned champions returned home.

The University of Kentucky spent its Easter weekend confirming what it had known all along.

The top-ranked Wildcats, who lived in a pressure cooker for six months, were the best team in college basketball this year. And no one was about to argue.

"The pressure had mounted all year," said Coach Joe Hall after his plane landed in Lexington, Ky., early yesterday morning. "It's a great win for the team."

Shortly after Kentucky had beaten Duke 94-88 Monday night to capture its fifth NCAA title, there were reports from Lexington of fans jamming the airport awaiting the team.

At 3:45 p.m. EST they got what they were waiting for. Hall and his players were escorted to a balcony and given an audience with their following, including former Kentucky Gov. A.B. "Happy" Chandler, the former major league baseball commissioner.

Officials said it was an "unbelievable crowd." In the mayhem, 24 persons were taken into custody and another 12 reportedly had fainted.

Championship basketball had indeed returned to Kentucky.

"There's no better way it could all end," said Givens from the Checkerdome in St. Louis after he scored a career high 41 points in his last game as a Wildcat.

"The people back home have been waiting a long time for this. They deserve it. They're super fans."

Givens was a sight to behold in Monday night's title game, the first ever played between two southern teams.

The 6'4" senior forward put on a dazzling show that ranks alongside Bill Walton's 44-point effort in UCLA's 1973 championship victory over Memphis State, also at St. Louis.

In the final 5-½ minutes of the first half, Givens scored Kentucky's last 16 points, six coming in the final 30 seconds of the period. Everything he sent up fell through the hoop: shots from the side, from the circle, from the lane.

Givens, the Wildcats leading scorer this season and a Lexington native, was the runaway choice for MVP honors. More than 500 media representatives were on hand for the tournament which next year will be held in Salt Lake City.

With the victory, Kentucky won its first title since 1958 and raised its record to 30-2. It marked the first time since 1966 the Wildcats won 30 or more games during a season.

For Duke, the prodigy of college basketball this year, there was no feeling of defeat.

It had been one glorious season for the Blue Devils, who finished with a 27-7 record after going just 14-13 the year before. The 27 victories equaled the school record for most wins in a season.

Hockey playoffs begin

The UMass Hockey Club opened its quarter final round playoffs Monday night at the Greenfield rink with the number one seed Breen's Bruins winning by forfeit over number eight seed Smith, and number two seed, Inesons winning over number seven seed Walsh's Whales by a score of 7-5.

Inesons carried the play in a fast hard-hitting first period with numerous shots on Whales' goalie Bill Simmons while Inesons' goalie Roddy Benevides hardly worked up a sweat. The Whales came back with some fancy goals by Marc Gervais and Joe Walsh and at the beginning of the third period the score was tied 4-4.

Good forechecking, good defense, very hard hitting, and flaring tempers kept the game close. Both teams were playing well and goaltending was at its peak with Simmons coming up with spectacular saves to keep the Whales in it, but with 8 minutes left to play the flurry of shots was too much for him. Kevin Milmoe and Andy Wilkie led a 3 goal uprising with some neat Jimmy Laffan assists. Benevides kept the Whales at bay with only 1 more goal.

Milmoe and Wilkie led Inesons to victory with 3 goals each while Gervais netted 3 in the losing effort. Semi-finals will be played Thursday night in Greenfield at 9 and 10 p.m.

The paper champs

I have resisted for some time writing a column on the Red Sox but I can resist no longer.

On paper, the favorite term of the optimistic fan, the Bosox are as good as the Yankees, if not better. But what looks good on paper can turn out pretty bad in reality. With this in mind, I present my analysis of the Red Sox.

Starting at one corner of the infield I find myself at first base. At least I think it's first base. There's this massive object blocking my view. Oh, it's Haystacks Calhoun, pardon me, George Scott. If he is to be effective as in the past, I suggest he stock up on Ayds. There is a saying that 'fat is beautiful', but not on the baseball diamond.

There can be no criticism of the second base play of Jerry Remy or the shortstop performance of one Richard Paul Burleson. Both will play almost every game which leads one to wonder why the Red Sox were willing to pay Jack Brohamer $100,000 a year to ride the bench.

At the "hot corner" there is Butch Hobson, and behind Hobson is Ted Cox, provided Zimmer finds it in his heart to keep the youngster. Hobson proved last year he can tote a heavy bat and Cox shows the signs of a fine hitter for average; his only problem has been frequent muscle pulls. Perhaps he should try Bill Robinson's (Pittsburgh) pulled muscle preventer — panty hose.

Moving to the outfield we find a collection consisting of a man of four eyes, one of four decades, a Fantasy Island guest star, who talks to a stuffed monkey and takes it out to eat, and a rightfielder who hits .290 and bats eighth.

Yet, this collection which seems to be of stranger than normal proportions is amongst the best in the game.

Yaz is as close to immortal as one can get (no errors in left last year and the gold glove for doing it) and Jim Rice with contacts will now be able to see a lot of the pitches he was striking out on and make himself an even better hitter than his .320 average of last season. Evans and Lynn have returned to a healthy status and Bernie Carbo, despite playing out his option, still has his spring swing which makes him worth having.

Having digested all this preliminary banter we come to the heart of every ball club, the battery.

Behind the plate will mostly be occupied by Carlton Fisk going for a record two injury-free seasons in a row. Good luck! The Sox will have a new face backing Pudge up this year, his name is Bo Diaz and all he's done this spring is hit over .300 and throw runners out left and right. Don't you Bob Montgomery fans fret though, you're hero will still be wearing number ten, probably forever, although I doubt he'll be more than a bullpen catcher all season, a position he enjoys very much.

Without further adue, I now attempt to decipher the mystery of the ages better known as Red Sox pitching.

With Luis Tiant out until April 15 (dislocated finger), Rick Wise has suddenly become a starter for Don Zimmer. Wise has had a fine spring training period and may just have reacquired the fine touch he had as a youngster in the National League. Bill Lee appears almost fully recovered from elbow surgery two years ago and is ready to begin his quest for an unprecedented "more than seventeen wins" campaign. The 2.7 million dollar man, Mike Torrez has been getting bombed all spring but shrugs it off saying that he'll be ready when the bell rings. Could the Sox have gotten themselves a 2.7 million dollar lemon? Mike Paxton must prove himself to be as good as he was in his rookie season, that is, avoiding the famed sophomore jinx.

The bullpen the Sox have been blessed with is equal to any in the majors. Drago, Campbell and Willoughby, if he remains, provide dynamite from the right side. Tom Burgmeir, although 34, will finally give the Red Sox a lefty reliever they can count on.

Cleveland and Stanley look to be the long relievers for the hose.

All in all, there is this glistening ray of hope that after two years of disappointment, success may find its home on Thomas Yawkey Way.

Write-ins send SGA to new vote

By JON KLEIN
and CINDY REGET
Collegian Staff

The Student Government Association electoral convention recessed last night after no candidacy was able to get a majority of votes cast on the first ballot. The convention will re-convene Monday for a second ballot.

A write-in effort last night removed the third place finishers in the popular election from the second ballot.

Two candidacies were on the ballot under convention rules. Popular election first place finishers Shelly Gordon and Herb Tyson were on the first convention ballot, together with David Berenberg and Susan Birmingham, who finished third in the popular election. "None-of-the-above" finished second in the popular election.

Gordon-Tyson received the most convention votes with 37. A write-in effort by Senators Donald Bishop and Bob Dion finished second with 27 votes. The Barenberg-Birmingham candidacy was third with 16 votes. The Bishop-Dion candidacy removed Barenberg-Birmingham from the next ballot.

Under SGA rules, the top two finishers on a ballot which does not decide a winner become the two candidates on the next ballot.

A quorum was called an hour - and - a - half into the convention. For the electoral convention to conduct its business there must be a quorum of five out of a possible seven area government and senate delegations present. These delegations can vote only if they maintain the required quorum of two-thirds of their credentialed delegates.

Many of the delegations had difficulty maintaining this quorum. Ted Ericson, president of Greek Area, called the quorum (a count of the delegations present which had the required amount of delegates) saying, "it is 11:15 and I've lost my quorum." The quorum was passed with only two areas not meeting their quorum, the Greek and Orchard Hill Areas.

Susan Birmingham made a motion that the Student Government Association president be chosen in another popular election. The voting would be between the top two candidacies, Susan Birmingham and Dave Barenberg, and Shelley Gordon and Herb Tyson. It would exclude the position of "None - of - the - Above" from the ballot.

The new popular election would be a non-binding referendum; a final decision would still lie with an electoral convention.

The Student Government Association constitution says if in the general election no candidacy receives one third of the popular vote, the decision for the presidency would then go to the electoral college. The motion for another popular election would merely give the delegates in the electoral college the opinions of their constituency.

Following the motion made by Birmingham, there was another motion to postpone a Rules Committee report, in order to deal with Birmingham's motion. The report was next on the agenda. The motion to postpone was overwhelmingly defeated, and Birmingham's proposal never reached the floor.

Conservation hampered by lack of funds

By LEO PELOQUIN
Collegian Staff

The major barrier to effective energy conservation at UMass has been the state's refusal to fund campus energy conservation projects, according to a panel that met last night to discuss energy use at the University.

The panel discussion concluded a day-long teach-in on energy conservation sponsored by the Campus Energy Task Force, a branch of the Student Center for Educational Research.

Panel members were Ruth Kreplick, director of the Technical Guidance Center for Environmental Quality; Theodore DeLesdernier, chief utility engineer for the Physical Plant; Edward Sunderland, head of the mechanical engineering department; and Edward Simpson, a staff assistant for the planning office.

Simpson said "energy conservation has not gotten enough attention at the State House to even qualify as a priority. The single most important priority there is budget conservation."

He said part of the problem lies with the state's budgeting procedures for UMass.

"One of the things that makes planning difficult is that the state runs on a one-year budget plan," Simpson said. There is a one-year budget mentality which makes it a little difficult to make a long range plan."

Sunderland said he proposed a project two years ago to change the lighting in Machmer Hall from incaNdescent to fluorescent after a study showed that the savings would be much greater than the required capital investment. The state refused to fund the project.

"There is a fantastic, ridiculous waste of energy in this country," Sunderland said. "We are just not facing up to the energy problem. Nationwide, the whole concern over conservation has dwindled. The whole mood has changed in a disastrous way." Simpson agreed.

"The energy crisis isn't enough of a crisis yet for dynamic leadership to appear," he said.

DeLesdernier said the cost of providing utilities for the campus have doubled from 1974 to 1976 because of rising coal and oil prices. He said he can't even begin to think about increasing energy efficiency because of the constraints imposed by state budget cuts.

"We are still struggling to recover from the governor's personnel squeeze and we are struggling with old equipment," said DeLesdernier.

He said he "seriously doubts" the Tillson Power Plant, an oil-burning plant, will be used because even if legal problems are worked out and the proper repairs made, the price differential between coal and high-priced oil is bound to widen over the next several years.

"We have discussed a number of alternatives (for Tillson) and have come up with nothing that would be cost effective or attractive. Coal still seems to be the most attractive."

Simpson said that any effective energy conservation program would have to be broader in scope, not like the "piecemeal" efforts that have been tried.

Sunderland said that many conservation measures can be taken with relatively little cost, including removing unnecessary lighting, turning off radiators in entryways to buildings, and installing better thermostat and temperature controls in heating systems.

An energy conservation movement in 1973 sponsored by the Energy Conservation Committee convinced the University to turn down thermostats and close down non-essential buildings during intersession. The move succeeded in lowering the campus energy bill by seven per cent, according to a committee report.

Officials investigate Hampshire College fire

By BERNARD DAVIDOW
Collegian Staff

Amherst fire officials yesterday were still investigating the cause of the one-alarm, 3:30 a.m. Hampshire College fire that in the morning gutted one apartment and burned through the ceiling of another.

Meanwhile, the eight students who lived in apartment 90 of Prescott House residential area spent the day salvaging personal belongings and finding temporary residences.

Four engines and one ladder truck were called to the living area, built in 1973 on the western edge of Hampshire College, at 3:30 a.m. yesterday and had the fire under control one hour later, according to Amherst Fire Chief John T. Doherty.

The fire began in one of the eight bedrooms in apartment 90, probably from a blanket at the end of Elizabeth Ross' floor-level mattress that was lying next to an electric heater, according to another apartment resident, John Rosemiller, an 18-year-old first-year student from New York City.

Rosemiller, who lives on the level above Ross, said he was awakened by the alarm from the apartment's smoke detector. "I thought it was my alarm clock. I threw it against the wall and it broke."

Rosemiller said he then smelled burning rubber and plastic, and ran from the apartment.

There were eight students and three visitors in the apartment when the fire broke out. All escaped without injury.

"Early discovery and early alarming due to smoke detectors" prevented injuries and potential deaths, according to Doherty. He said that if one of the students had thought to close the door to Ross' apartment, it would have been a one-room fire.

Melody Avery, a first-year student from Bethesda, Maryland, said her room faired better than others because her door was left open only a few inches. Avery's bedroom was next to Ross'.

Peter E. Gluckler, director of public relations for Hampshire College, said the fire spread through the two levels of the apartment, into a concealed space under the roof, and then over the ceiling of apartment 89.

Energy fair agenda set

By MARCIA MURPHY
Collegian Staff

The third annual Toward Tomorrow Fair at UMass will be held June 16 through 18 and include 100 to 120 exhibits, two concerts and at least 32 speakers, according to Ernie Corrigan, publicity coordinator.

The fair will focus on energy and shelter, mind and body health, and the difference between nuclear and solar powers, Corrigan said.

"The central aim of Toward Tomorrow is to present to the public the wide range of technological and social options available to our society, both now and for the future," according to a fair brochure.

This year's keynote speaker will be Barry Commoner, ecologist and professor of environmental science at Washington University in St. Louis.

Commoner wrote "The Closing Circle," "Science and Survival", and "The Poverty of Power."

When Commoner spoke at last year's fair, he criticized the Carter energy plan, saying it was based on increases in coal production and future dependence on nuclear power rather than on conservation. Commoner called nuclear power the most expensive and unreliable source of energy available.

Buckminster Fuller, an 84-year-old universally known designer, poet, philosopher and futurist, was last year's keynote speaker and is a guest speaker this year.

"Buckminster is really quite a character and we are looking forward to seeing him again this year," said Corrigan. "Last year he spoke for three and a half hours to an overflow crowd at the Fine Arts Center."

Other speakers for this year's fair include Bruce Anderson, vice-chairman of the New England Solar Energy Association; Dennis Meadows, co-author of "Limits to Growth"; Amory Lovins, author of "Soft Energy Paths"; J. Baldwin, Soft Technology editor of Co-Evolution Quarterly; Helen Caldecott, a researcher of radiation's effects on children; and Scott Burns, economist and journalist of the Boston Herald-American.

A benefit concert by Pete Seeger is planned for June 15 and "negotiations are being made for a second entertainer", according to Rick Taupier, co-director of the Fair.

This year's fair will be in conjunction with the 9th annual World Game Workshop to be held June 16-22.

World Game is "designed to offer solutions for crucial world problems" and will focus on energy and shelter, according to Corrigan.

Toward Tomorrow Fair began in 1974 as a series of week-long workshops on wind generator construction, organic farming, aquaculture and other topics.

More than 30,000 people attended last year's fair, where exhibits included alternative energy, transportation, health, agriculture, human rights, conservation and economic reform.

Speakers included Georgia State Senators Julian Bond, Hazel Henderson, co-director of the Princeton Center for Alternative Futures and member of the Future Studies program here; and consumer advocate Ralph Nader.

The fair, sponsored by University Summer Session, operates on a total budget of $100,000, including about $20,000 in grants, according to Taupier.

The fair's income comes from gate receipts, exhibit space rentals, concerts, food vendors, and grants and contracts, according to Taupier. Last year's fair lost $5,000.

Tickets will be $4 for non-students and $3 for students, an increase of $1 over last year. Multi-day passes will be available.

"Toward Tomorrow pays more than any other single event on campus in parking fees with 25 cents out of every dollar going to the parking office," said Taupier.

A staff of 18, all students except Taupier, are now working on the fair. About 60 more people will work during the fair, according to Taupier.

Taupier, 27, has a bachelor's degree in Psychology and Education, and worked on the fair last year.

"I see myself as an educator," he said. "I'm interested in informal education. Toward Tomorrow is an excellent program that's doing a lot to educate people about a lot of crucial Issues."

Corrigan, a senior journalism major, also worked on last year's fair.

UM has 'poor' taste in its choice of beer

By BETH SEGERS
Collegian Staff

Beer drinkers, beer drinkers at the Wall, what's the most popular beer of all?

A rating of 18 popular beers in a taste test by Washingtonian magazine listed the best tasting beers as Heineken, Old Milwaukee, Pabst Blue Ribbon, Schlitz, Miller High Life, Tuborg, Budweiser and Michelob. The test was published last year in "The Book of Lists" by "The People's Almanac."

But all local beer drinkers do not agree with the findings, according to Paul Barbato, manager of The Blue Wall. He said Tuborg Gold is the most popular — because of its price.

"I could put "Old Sneaker" on tap, and if it was the cheapest beer around, it would sell in this place."

Barbato said the Blue Wall, which spends about $2,300 each week on the purchase of 115 kegs of beer, carries only Tuborg Gold, Miller High Life, Budweiser and Miller Lite. "We used to sell dark beer a couple of years ago, but it just doesn't sell."

A similar taste testing of imported beers was held yesterday by clerical and managerial workers of the Campus Center and Textbook Annex, but unlike the formal testing rules used in the Washingtonian, the employees were "just out to have a good time and get away from their jobs for awhile," said Jack McGill, sponsor of the event and Campus Center food and beverage director.

The Washingtonian taste test was conducted by a panel of seven persons — two noted beer experts, two former professional athletes, and three "notorious" beer drinkers. The beers were served without labels in groups of three, with bread available between tastes to reset the taste buds. What is the most popular beer among university staff?

"Free, definitely," said Walt Yandl, Campus Center worker and part-time liquor salesman at Spirit Hous. "When I have money I like Heineken but the beer I drink is Miller," he added.

And Barbato, who once sold 52 kegs in four hours at a Happy Hour last semester, said his own rating of beers also differs from the recently published list. His ordering of beers is Heineken, Michelob, Miller, Lowenbrau (now a domestic beer brewed in New Jersey) and Coors. Coors was ranked 14th out of 18 beers in the listed ratings.

According to the "Book of Lists," the 10 biggest beer drinking countries listed by liters per capita, are Czechoslovakia, West Germany, Australia, Belgium, Luxembourg, New Zealand, East Germany, United Kingdom, Denmark and Austria.

Steady flow of beer keeps canoes in race

RUSSELL, Mass. (AP) — The 25th Westfield Wildwater Canoe Races are on for this weekend after all, thanks to what may be remembered as the Great Suds Compromise of 1978.

Under an agreement drawn up Tuesday, the towns of Huntington and Russell will receive $20 for eachcld at the event.

Selectmen from the two rural towns had threatened to stop the annual race because the sponsors refused to pay for the cost of policing and picking up after an anticipated crowd of 20,000 people.

But the selectmen agreed Tuesday to give bar owner Roger Westbrooks temporary licenses to sell beer at four outdoor locations during the fourday event, which starts Saturday.

Westbrooks says he can sell 100 barrels, which means the towns' coffers will get $2,000.

Debaters go to nationals

Two members of the UMass debate team, Al Rosenbloom and President Nick Burnett, have qualified to go to the national debate competition in Denver, Colorado April 20-25.

Rosenbloom and Burnett will be representing the New York-New England region together with teams from Harvard, Dartmouth and Bates. The terms qualified at a tournament at UMass the weekend before spring break.

This is the second year Rosenbloom and Burnett have qualified to go to the nationals. It is the sixth consecutive year a UMass debate team has been represented.

UMass junior wins spot in billiards competition

UMass junior Mark Dallas is one of 15 men throughout the United States to win a place in the 1978 National Intercollegiate Billiards Championship.

Dallas, seeded sixth, will compete in the national championship next week at Florida State University in Tallahassee. More than 15,000 men and women had competed in local campus qualifying tournaments for the right to play in the Florida contest.

Students unhappy with recruitment

Student Senator John Foley is planning to meet UMass officials Friday to discuss J.P. Stevens Company recruitment efforts on campus. The company is scheduled to be here next Thursday.

Foley, a commuter, will meet with placement officer Clark Edwards and Director of Student Services Daniel Fitzpatrick. Foley said a representative from the Student Organizing Project and a representative from the J.P. Stevens Support Committee will also be at the meeting.

A Student Organizing Project staff member said he thinks UMass students should be aware that the company has been "cited for unethical and unfair labor practices," by federal agencies.

Foley wants to arrange for a booth in the placement office while the J.P. Stevens Company is there. "Students should get the other side of the story," he said.

Still no action by MSP

The faculty union has not yet taken legal action against UMass administrators concerning the two and a half per cent salary hike the administration recently gave academic chairmen and department heads but not faculty members.

Massachusetts Society of Professors Chairman Larry S. Roberts this week said the action, should it be taken would probably be in the form of an unfair labor practices charge against the administration.

DeLima reelected as SGA speaker

By JACK GALLAGHER
Collegian Staff

Former Student Government Association speaker Brian J. DeLima was re-elected as speaker at last night's Senate meeting. The vote was 51 to 43.

"In terms of my position as speaker last year, there was too much talk, no action — only personal venting of frustrations. I was in conflict with the professional staff."

He cited the Legal Services Office and the Student Organizing Project as examples.

DeLima also said the "senate has improved in terms of attendance and interest but there is no plan. No goals."

DeLima said he resigned "in order to write my proposal." His proposal is the controversial pamplet entitled "The Case of the Administration vs. The Students of UMass-Amherst."

The pamphlet was subpoenaed by the SGA government affairs committee because of its depiction of a student with a screw through him. That was similar to campaign literature in the Gordon-Tyson campaign. The pamphlet suggested students are not treated well at UMass.

The position of senate treasurer was due to be filled last night but was not because of the presidential Electoral Convention. The position is being sought by Senator Paul Kolesnikovas and Senator Michael Doyle. The senate last night attempted to fill the position presently but the vote was a tie.

In other business, the Senate installed 40 new senators.

Luxury car bought for UMass president

BOSTON [AP] — Although Gov. Michael S. Dukakis still uses the compact cars sent up by the state's motor pool, the University of Massachusetts recently bought an $8,049 luxury automobile for its president.

This was revealed at a hearing Wednesday before the Committee on State Administration on a proposal giving the Dukakis administration control of the 685 vehicles owned by higher educational institutions.

Former UMass President Robert C. Wood and current interim President Franklin K. Patterson could not be reached for comment last night.

It also was reported that a faculty member at North Adams State College used a state car to purchase liquor in New Hampshire, when he supposedly was returning home from a conference at Castleton College in Vermont.

Some committee members also learned of a past instance when an employee at UMass-Boston, used a school truck to move personal furniture and to deliver cement blocks to his home.

Arthur Sweeney, director of the state motor pool, said UMass paid $8,049 to purchase a Ford LTD for the president's office last year, turning in a 1974 Chrysler.

Sweeney said the most expensive vehicles his agency buys are station wagons, at approximately $5,000. He said most of these are assigned to public and mental health hospitals and are used to transfer patients.

Otherwise, the regular motor pool cars are all compacts, he said. The governor often uses a pool car when traveling on state business.

Dukakis normally commutes from his Brookline home via mass transportation.

Sweeney's office controls the use of all state vehicles, except those assigned to higher educational institutions which have fiscal autonomy.

The out-of-state liquor purchase involving a school vehicle happened a few years ago and, North Adams President James T. Amsler said, there was "nothing unusual" about use of that particular vehicle. He replied to an inquiry from Alfred Wright of the motor vehicle unit who was pursuing a citizen's complaint.

Amsler said the unidentified faculty member attended a physical education clinic at the Vermont school and stopped at the New Hampshire liquor store en route home. Amsler said all personnel have been advised to be "careful and discreet" in the use of college cars.

A letter to Wright on the UMass truck incident said the driver paid for the cement blocks he was delivering. It was reported there was a citizen's complaint about the use of the truck on three successive Saturdays.

Speaker denounces US Middle East policy

By DAVE GRAM
Collegian Staff

A spokeswoman for the Youth Institute for Peace in the Middle East last night said that unless President Carter reverses his stand on proposed jet fighter sales to Egypt and Saudi Arabia, he will be "a one term president."

Kris Bruun, executive director of the institute, and a member of Social Democrats USA, said Carter has offered "a package deal" to Congress, calling for previously approved arm sales to Israel to be countered with similar military aid to the two Arab nations. Bruun said Carter's action has "outraged members of Congress as well as the American Jewish community."

Carter's arms sales proposal calls for shipment of 60 F-15 fighter planes to Saudi Arabia in 1981 and 1982, in addition to the 110 currently being shipped. Egypt is slated to receive 50 F-5E fighters.

This represents a major shift in U.S. Mideast policy. Until now, the U.S. has provided Egypt with only "non-lethal" military equipment.

The increased aid to the Arab nations is coupled with a proposed decrease in military aid to Israel.

Testifying before the House International Relations Committee in February, Secretary of State Cyrus Vance said partial rejection of the portions of the arms sales package calling for planes for Egypt and Saudi Arabia would be "unacceptable."

Bruun said Carter's chances of being reelected in 1980 have been greatly diminished because "much of the money in the Democratic party comes from the Jewish community." She said a major Democratic fundraiser originally scheduled June in New York has been cancelled because many large contributors to the party in New York are Jewish and "there's no way they're going to give him (Carter) any money now."

Speaking about the recent flare-up of Mideast hostilities, Bruun said the March 12 Palestinian terrorist raid on an Israeli tourist bus was provoked by the peace initiatives undertaken by Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin and Egyptian President Anwar Sadat. She said Palestinian Liberation Organization Leader Yassar Arafat promised "a wave of terrorism" to demonstrate PLO disapproval of the Egyptian-Israeli talks.

"Arafat has kept his promise," she said.

Parking lots designated for campus motorcycles

By ROB YARVITZ
Collegian Staff

The Parking and Transportation Council has formulated a new parking plan for motorcycles, University Parking Coordinator Susan Campbell said yesterday.

The plan designates interim parking areas for motorcycles within lots 44, 31, 50 and 34. Campbell said signs will be posted in these lots next week that clearly indicate where motorcycles can be parked.

although Lot 25 already has permanent concrete paths and posts in the ground to which motorcycles can be secured, it won't be until next September such work is done in the remaining lots, said Campbell, who blames the delay on a tight operating budget for the rest of the fiscal year.

Campbell said a permanent parking area is being placed for motorcycles in Lot 63, by the East Experiment Station. However, she said, that will not be possible until September because spaces in Lot 63 are reserved for autos for the remainder of the semester.

Last semester, motorcycles were ticketed in various locations on campus; some were towed. The Parking Office then said there was no motorcycle parking in the "core" campus.

As a result, motorcyclists formed a co-op to let their feelings be known.

The parking issue was discussed at great length at the co-op's first meeting.

Co-op president Charles Guerard said motorcyclists didn't have much choice last semester but to park their bikes on campus. He said Lost 25 was too secluded; and if motorcyclists left their motorcycles in Lot 25 for too long, they could easily be vandalized or stolen.

All but a few of about 30 persons at the meeting said they received parking tickets last semester. They said the most frequent places where motorcycles were tagged were outside the Campus Center entrance by Hasbrouck, in front of the Student Union Building and library, and next to classrooms all across campus.

The new plan, said Campbell, gives motorcyclists reasonable places to park their motorcycles at each end of the campus — in Lot 31, off Governer's Drive; and in Lot 34, across the street from the School of Business Administration. She said if a lot of motorcyclists would begin parking in these interim areas, as well as in Lot 25, the constant flow of bike traffic through these areas would provide ample protection for the motorcycles.

New proposals discussed at Stockbridge meeting

By MARTHA KIMBALL
Collegian Staff

Stockbridge Student Senate President Geoff Macduff last night told the senate of new proposals discussed at yesterday's Stockbridge Educational Policies Committee meeting.

Proposals by the policies committee include an increase in the number of credits transferable from Stockbridge to UMass, changes in preregistration procedures for UMass students enrolling in Stockbridge courses and vice versa, and an increase in cost of room and board for students leaving Stockbridge for early placement.

The committee discussed the quality of education at Stockbridge. Its members include Stockbridge Dean John W. Denison, deaartment heads and the senate president. Stockbridge has a separate admissions process, curriculum and student governance from the rest of the University.

The committee proposed a maximum 53 credits be allowed to be transferred from Stockbridge to UMass if a C grade or better is obtained. These credits would not be considered residential credits. Students must still fulfill 45 residential credits in the University.

Residential credits are credits earned while "in residence" at the University, as opposed to transfer credits.

Candidate favors state funds for student loans

By BETH SEGERS
Collegian Staff

Lewis Crampton, candidate for state treasurer, yesterday said he favors "placing state funds for investment in banks that make loans to students."

Crampton made the remark on a brief stop here during a sweep through Western Massachusetts. He will officially announce his candidacy April 14.

Crampton's investment plan, which he calls a "link-deposit" system, will "link the deposit of state cash with socially and economically useful goals." He also said he favors loans to local communities for economic development.

"The treasurer, through smart investments, can earn money for the state," Crampton said. He said he thinks he can earn $42 million through his proposed policies.

Crampton, in his bid for state treasurer, will be running against incumbent Democrat Robert Crane, who has held the position since 1964. Crampton is the only GOP candidate expected to seek the treasurer's job and is seen by a number of Republicans to be the most serious GOP challenge in the November elections.

Commissioner of the state's department of Community Affairs during the Sergeant administration, Crampton recently served as a consultant to House Speaker Thomas McGee. He has been a public official specializing in public affairs for 14 years.

Crampton graduated from the Woodrow Wilson School in Princeton University, with a degree in public administration. He holds a Masters degree in east asian studies from Harvard, and is working on a doctorate in urban and regional planning at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

He is currently a senior analyst at the Cambridge-based Abt Associates Inc., a national consulting firm.

Carter arrives in Brazil; to meet dictator's critics

BRASILLIA, Brazil [UPI] — President Carter flew here Wednesday to patch sour relations with an old ally — and promptly arranged to discuss human rights with two candidates harshly critical of his host, Brazil's military dictator.

Escorted by Brazilian warplanes, Carter arrived aboard Air Force One from Caracas, where President Carlos Andres Perez warned him that oil-rich nations will use their precious fuel to force industrial countries to help create a new world economic order.

His welcome in this ultramodern, space-age capital by President Ernesto Geisel was cordial, correct and restrained — reflecting the recent chill in relations between two long-time allies over nuclear proliferation and human rights.

A high administration source said Carter told Geisel of his plan to confer Friday in Rio de Janeior with Cardinals Dom Paulo Evaristo Arns and Eugenio Salles.

Brazilian officials did not mention the proposed meeting in the visit schedule given Brazilian reporters, calling the entire Rio segment of Carter's stay "unofficial," with no events scheduled.

The administration source said he believed Carter's hosts will not be upset by the visits with the cardinals, strong defenders of human rights and unstinting critics of the Geisel dictatorship.

Brazil was the second stop on Carter's four-nation, seven-day, 14,000-mile trip. Ahead were Nigeria on Friday and Liberia on Monday.

Carter and Geisel met for "cordial and constructive" talks that did not touch on nuclear proliferation or human rights.

White House Press Secretary Jody Powell told reporters they discussed Africa and the Middle East, saying "no substantive differences emerged."

Powell said Carter's plans to meet with the cardinals were part of the president's efforts to "talk to people who represent a broad spectrum and many facets of Brazilian society."

"It's not unusual for him to spend his time that way," Powell said. "He's done so on many other occasions."

In airport remarks, Carter said "all of us are joining in the worldwide struggle to advance the cause of human freedom and the rule of law. This is a struggle that will prevail only when we are willing to recognize our own limitations, and to speak to each other frankly and with understanding."

In welcoming Carter, Geisel struck a conciliatory note, saying "We will be extremely satisfied if the present visit can contribute to you and Mrs. Carter forming a fair opinion of the Brazilian reality."

U.N. peacekeeper killed in Israeli-held Lebanon

BEIRUT, Lebanon (UPI) — The U.N. peacekeeping force in southern Lebanon suffered its first fatality yesterday when a landmine killed one Swedish soldier and injured another just north of the Israeli border.

The announcement of the casualties came as witnesses reported that Palestinian guerrillas ignored an Israeli ultimatum and continued to fire on Israeli positions in south Lebanon and northern Israel.

But the witnesses said the Fatah guerrilla organization of Palestine Liberation Organization chairman Yasser Arafat generally appeared to be holding its fire, in line with Arafat's agreement Tuesday to abide by the U.N.-sponsored cease-fire.

A U.N. command car in which the Swedish soliders were riding detonated the landmine as it approached the Khardaly Bridge in the eastern sector of Israeli-held Lebanon.

"The incident took place on a small road looked upon as cleared for mines," said Swedish Col. Jonas Lundgren. "The car seems to have left the minecleared path."

The dead soldier was identified as Karl Oscar Johansen and the injured man as Max Lundberg.

Faculty Senate to discuss membership proposal

By MEGAN O'REILLY
Collegian Staff

The faculty senate today will face a proposal aimed at redefining membership qualifications for the Graduate Faculty.

Some senators feel the current membership qualifications limit academic freedom.

Also on the agenda will be Acting Provost Jeremiah M. Allen's stance on student rating data in personnel decisions and a motion to adopt a general policy on the rights and welfare of human subjects used in university research.

Senator Robert E. McGarrah says that Graduate Faculty qualifications should be rescinded because they established an arbitrary index of faculty which confers first, second and third class citizenship.

The present system discriminates against faculty who have not recently published McGarrah said, because they are thus ineligible to chair Masters and Doctoral committee's and advise graduate students.

"This interferes with faculty's academic freedom and prods them into producing more publications," he said.

Provost Jeremiah Allen will address Senator Frank A. Singer's question regarding the accuracy of faculty ratings by students and the effect they have on personnel decisions.

Singer says higher teacher ratings are not necessarily received by teachers whose students learn more.

"Will the provost aggressively communicate these factors to personnel committees regarding this serious limitation of the rating data?" Singer asks.

A change in the Federal regulations regarding human subject welfare policy will require faculty senate okay on university policy revision or UMass will risk the loss of research funds in all areas where the use of human subjects are proposed.

The policy calls for an institutional review board to review and approve each proposed activity involving the use of human subjects.

Contract ready for mine construction workers

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The United Mine Workers bargaining council, its leader felled by a stroke, approved a new contract yesterday for mine construction workers, clearing the way for a final ratification vote next week.

With UMW Vice President Sam Church presiding, the council voted 37-0 in favor of the new pact after four hours of discussion at UMW headquarters.

The unanimous consent raised hopes the 14,000 mine construction workers would ratify the contract in balloting set for Tuesday and finally bring peace to the soft coal industry.

UMW President Arnold Miller suffered a mild stroke earlier Wednesday and was under intensive care at an undisclosed hospital. Miller, 54, had been warned by doctors to take it easy after five-months of negotiations and the 110-day coal strike which officially ended last Saturday, Church said.

Most of the 160,000 miners were reported back on the job Wednesday but scattered picketing by mine construction workers disrupted operations in Indiana and Illinois. In keeping with traditional, union miners won't cross picket lines.

Several bargaining council members indicated they expected little trouble with ratification.

"It's a pretty good contract," said Don Lawley, a council member from the OklahomaArkansas district. "They got more than the coal miners got."

"I finally voted yes," said Eddie Sturgill, an international executive board member from District 19 in central Kentucky and Tennessee who had voted against all three contracts the coal miners were offered.

The construction contract was similar to the one approved by 57 percent of the miners except for an improvement in the health program. Church said coverage included company payment of all prescription drugs include those for shortterm illnesses.

UMW and industry negotiators reached agreement Monday night on the contract which covers the workers who build mine shafts and other coal operation facilities.

The council's vote of approval apparently headed off a move to dispatch pickets to mines throughout West Virginia to disrupt operations on Thursday.

Steel prices up

PITTSBURGH (UPI) — United States Steel Corp. yesterday announced a 2.2 percent price increase on steel mill products "to cover the cost of the new coal contract." The move sparked the wrath of the White House Council on Wage and Price Stability.

The council said the increase of $10.50 per net ton, the second price increase in 1978, was unjustified and inflationary. Wall Street analyst David Healy of Drexel Burnham & Co. anticipated it could boost the cost of the average automobile by $10 or $15.

Miller has stroke

WASHINGTON (UPI) — United Mines Workers President Arnold Miller, told by his doctors to rest after the grueling miners strike, collapsed Wednesday and was hospitalized with a mild stroke.

Union Vice President Sam Church said Miller, 54, was in a hospital intensive care unit but "I'm not going to say where."

Church said Miller's doctors had advised him last weekend to take a rest after five months of negotiating with the soft coal operators and the 110-day coal strike that officially ended last Saturday.

Used car 'deals' could be bogus due to blizzards

LONG GROVE, Ill. (UPI) — U Cars soaked in saltwater during crippling East Coast blizzards may be offered as spring "bargains" by some dealers but will give buyers "nothing but trouble," an insurance executive said Wednesday.

"The corrosive nature of salt water's action on metal parts and on a car's electrical system will make these autos nonperable, rusting lemons with months," said Marvin Verbeck, vice president and claim manager for Kemper Insurance Co.

"No matter how cheaply these cars may be priced, they are nothing but trouble and should be avoided," Verbeck said.

He said residents of states which do not have laws requiring car titles to be stamped, "submerged" or "flood car" will be especially vulnerable to the sale of saltruined cars.

Verbeck said some 5,000 cars were judged total losses by insurance firms during the February storms that sent seawater sloshing over Massachusetts. He said owners appropriately insured were compensated.

Kemper and other insurers are requiring that submerged and "totaled" autos be broken up, with parts reconditioned and used as replacements.

Verbeck offered the following hints for potential used car buyers:

—Check for sand, silt or salt deposits under the carpeting in the passenger compartment. A stagnant odor also may be present.

—Ask to remove a seat cushion, then drop it bottom side down on pavement. If salt falls out, beware.

—Check recesses in the intake and exhaust manifold and other crevices for indications of sand deposits.

—Check for sand in chrome headlight rim.

—Check wiring for signs of corrosion. Note copper connections: they turn green when exposed to salt water.

—Ask to see title to determine if it has been stamped "submerged" or "flood car."

—Be especially careful of any car brought from Massachusetts since February.

—Be suspicious of any car that does not have its Vehicle Idntification Number attached, since Kemper and some other insurers have ordered vechicle ID tags removed from cars declared total losses.

Walls might fall at state college

BOSTON (AP) — The 8-yearold Cape Cod Community College in Hyannis has suffered almost $1 million in water damage, and some walls may collapse, a state report says.

The college's administration building, auditorium, library, gymnasium, commons, science building and two classroom buildings are extensively damaged, said the report prepared for John R. Buckley, state secretary of administration and finance.

The study, written by Engineers Design Group of Cambridge, said, "It has been concluded that some of these areas are overstressed, and structural failure and collapse is possible."

Cypriot freighter OK, leaves U.S. waters

BOSTON (UPI) — The Coast Guard yesterday escorted out of U.S territorial waters a 290- foot Cypriot freighter en route to Cuba carrying a potentially lethal cargo of 115, one-ton containers of liquid chlorine.

Earlier in the day the crew of the Aghius Nicolaus B completed the task of battening down five of the containers which had broken loose from their deck lashings in rough seas.

The vessel had been sitting five miles off Provincetown, Mass., at the tip of Cape Cod since last Monday night when the master of the vessel radioed the Coast Guard for permission to enter Cape Cod Bay in order to tisoadown which had been bounced around the ship's deck.

The freighter was escorted out by a 44-foot Coast Guard lifeboat from the Race Point Coast Guard Station.

The vessel was en route from Newfoundland to Cuba when it was allowed to anchor Monday night where the waters were calm enough to complete the job.

Couple wins right to treat stricken son

HINGHAM, Mass. (AP) — A Scituate couple won the right Wednesday to treat their leukemia-stricken son with health foods instead of the drugs recommended by his doctor.

Judge Martha Ware dismissed a request by Massachusetts General Hospital to give custody of the 2-year-old boy to the state Welfare Department so his drug treatment could continue.

The decision on the fate of Chad Green was made in a closed-door juvenile session of Hingham District Court. The judge did not announce the reasoning of her ruling publicly.

Chad's doctor, John T. Truman, said the disease is now in remission, but unless he gets more drug treatment, it will return in one to six months. He said the boy will die shortly after the cancer returns.

Petition filed for bottle bill

HARTFORD (AP) — Supporters of a bill to require 5- cent deposits on all beer and soda containers prepared yesterday for what they hoped was "the last mile of the long walk toward the bottle bill."

That was the phrase used by Senate Majority Leader Joseph Lieberman as he accepted 30,000 petitions in support of the bill from Marc Caplan, director of the Connecticut Citizen Action Group.

Meanwhile, opponents of the bottle bill, who favor an antilitter program awaiting Senate action, issued statements about the potential costs and health hazards of the bottle bill. Two industry groups said the cost of beverages would go up if the bill were passed.

The House passed the bill 87- 57 last week and a final vote in the Senate was scheduled for today. Gov. Ella Grassohassaidshewillnthe bill, which has been debated for five previous years and died last year in a parliamentary maze after both chambers passed the bill.

Picketing and leafleting by proponents of reproductive freedom will take place Saturday from noon to 2:00 p.m. in front of the Newman Center where a conference on "Nuclear Disarmament and the Right to Life" will be taking place.

The conference is being sponsored by the New England Catholic Peace Fellowship. Mary Wentworth, who is active in the Clamshell Alliance, said a number of anti-nuclear armament and anti-nuclear groups were asked to send representatives to help plan the conference.

The groups included the Clamshell Alliance and Mobilization for Survival, a national organization which concentrates on nuclear disarmament. When members of Mobilization for Survival found that an anti-abortion stance was going to be a main theme of the conference, the organization withdrew its representatives. Wentworth said other participating groups are considering similar action.

"The protest is being organized for three main reasons," Wentworth said. "We are concerned about a right-to-life conference taking place on the UMass campus and are afraid it may prompt additional harrassment of the abortion clinic at Amherst Medical Associations, where Right to Life vigils have already taken place.

"We are concerned about the fact that abortion rights are currently being taken away all across the country. And many of us who work in anti-nuke groups don't want people to confuse the two issues and get the idea that our groups are anti-abortion," Wentworth said.

She said although the Clamshell Alliance includes a few Right to Life proponents, the majority of the women involved in the group are pro-choice.

Wentworth and co-worker Pat Wieland are urging all concerned people to take part in the pro-choice demonstration. They encourage UMass students to attend the demonstration and express their disapproval at the use of UMass facilities for an anti-abortion conference.

"We feel it's time for pro-choice women in the Amherst area to take a public stand against anti-abortion forces and the repeal of pro-choice legislation that's been going on at both a state and a national level," Wentworth said.

"If Right-to-Life groups can get away with being active in the Amherst area, where there's such a large feminist community, they should have no trouble at all with the rest of the country," she said.

Whitmore lessens roommate choice

To the Editor:

On Wednesday, April 5, all students who presently plan to reside in dormitories next fall, will participate in the first step of the semesterly room choosing process. In the past, dormitory residents have had a freedom of choice in the selection of roommates. This is a policy that has been unquestionably equitable and served the best interests of the vast majority of the on-campus student body.

However, taking immediate effect for future semesters is a Whitmore Housing Office change of procedure. It states that a resident can only sign up with a new roommate, providing that the new roommate presently resides within the dorm. Those desiring to room with a friend from another dorm will have to participate in a campus-wide rooming lottery. This policy places great constraints on one's freedom of choice for a roommate.

This change in policy has resulted from outcries that all residents should be guaranteed an equal chance of gaining admittance to a dorm of their choosing; that something must be done to destroy the homogeneity of various dorms; and to eliminate the possibility of people signing up for more than one residence. But outcries from whom? Not the students! While I agree that some of these arguments deserve some merit, I protest any solution that limits in any way, one's freedom of choice in selecting a roommate. As this new policy will greatly affect all dorm residents, I am angered that student input was never openly requested with regard to this policy change.

This new procedure may be bureaucratically efficient, but what it actually accomplishes is to show the administration's gross insensitivity to students' basic needs. Once again this is a glaring example of Whitmore's inability to effectively deal with a problem. It is time they stop running this institution as a business and begin to realize there are more than 10,000 students living on campus who are more than numbers in a computer.

The logical thing to do is organize. This is an excellent opportunity for student government to show us what they can do. But even still, students must take an active role. An organization is being formed to combat this inequity. If interested please contact me at 546-9693. Something must be done!

Placement Center lacks support

To the Editor:

Do you expect to find a job in your field upon graduating from UMass? Have you ever thought about where to go for help in finding one? Do you think the University should help students find ways to use the skills they've learned here? If you answered yes to any of these questions, read on.

Post-graduate employment is a primary concern of most students on campus today. According to a 1976 survey conducted by SAREO, the Placement Office, the Financial Aid Office and the Alumni Office; 67.1 per cent of seniors seek jobs after graduation. Due to the present economic situation, however, finding a job is more difficult in 1978. Consequently, there is a need for an effective service to aid students in their attempts to find work. While a Placement Service does exist, it is one of the most neglected services on campus.

Demand for the Placement Center has quadrupled since 1974. The budget in no way reflects this increased demand. The full-time staff has dwindled from five professionals in 1973 to the present staff of three full-time, and one part-time, professionals. The Placement Center is located in Hampshire House which is on the fringes of campus. The physical conditions are extremely inadequate, particularly for on-campus interviewing.

Many students aren't even bothering to consult the Placement Center. According to the above mentioned survey, 50.6% per cent of the 1976 graduating class were not registered with the Placement Center and 80.4% had never consulted Placement counselors. It may be concluded from the results of this survey that the Placement Center lacks effective outreach and advertising and that many students consider the center too inadequate to even bother consulting.

The Placement Center services are particularly inadequate for liberal arts students — those who traditionally have the hardest time finding jobs. Recruiters are attracted to UMass by the reputations of the business and engineering schools, not the liberal arts schools.

The above are just a few of the many problems plaguing the Placement Center. The administration, always slow to recognize changing student needs, is finally recognizing the increased demand for the service. Hopefully, the trend is changing and improvements will be made as the Placement Center becomes a higher priority. Presently, through the Student Center for Educational Research, students are researching the center and possible alternative services. It is important for students, particularly freshmen and sophomores, to be aware of the Inadequate services provided by the Placement Center. Students must then pressure the administration to make positive substantive changes which reflect students' needs.

Oppose U.S. in S. Africa

To the Editor:

It is a favorite line of many youth "experts" today to say we are more conservative than the late sixties, early seventies generation. They point out that college students are taking business courses so they can get jobs after graduation. The campuses are quiet; students concerned only with themselves.

This generalization isn't true. Young people today are as sensitive and committed to seeing a better world being built as any of our forebearers were. The recent campus activity opposing apartheid governments is testimony to this.

Recently students in the northeast have won some major victories; UMass, Hampshire College and Smith College have all sold stock in corporations in South Africa due to the pressure brought on them by students.

Students from these schools and from some 15 other universities that are currently waging divestment campaigns, are getting together with other anti-apartheid groups at Yale University in New Haven, Connecticut March 31 through April 2.

Why is apartheid of such concern to students here in the U.S.? The U.S. is intimately involved in the internal conflicts in Southern Africa by defense and political interests and large economic considerations. The current U.S. policy is one of tacit acceptance and support for the racist regimes. This support is based on the economic advantages to the U.S. government and U.S. corporations which far outweigh what the government sees as possible political repercussions.

U.S. business has over two billion dollars directly invested in Southern Africa; this investment constitutes 40 per cent of all its investments in Africa. There is a two to one favorable balance of trade for the U.S. and the profit rate on investment is the highest in the world in South Africa.

The U.S. government's statements opposing apartheid are a shallow coverup to the real economic and political support it gives these regimes. But thousands of students, religious leaders, unionists and civil rights groups are coming together to change the current policy of tacit acceptance to one of total opposition. We are also organizing to pressure U.S. corporations, the mainstay of the South African economy at this point, to withdraw their investments.

In terms of human experience, apartheid means officially enforced violence for the millions of black people living under it. One out of two black children in South Africa die of starvation before the age of five. Years of separation of children from parents, husbands from wives and brothers from sisters are caused by laws that allow only employed blacks to remain in "white areas" of these countries. Every move a black person makes is regulated by laws. Blacks cannot vote, cannot form unions, cannot demonstrate or express their views in any legal manner. The total result of apartheid is an attempt to dehumanize blacks; they are reduced to objects, machines working for the white population.

The white population of South Africa has the highest per capita standard of living in the world. The white minority governments are determined to force acceptance of this status quo by any means at their disposal.

The black populations have been trying to throw off this pariah system for decades. The massive protests of black students in 1976 in South Africa, which gained support from black workers there, and the guerilla warfare going on against the Rhodesian regime are continuations of this fight for humanity, justice and freedom.

It is this spirit of resistance and humanity that has moved students in the U.S. to support the struggles of the black people in Southern Africa. We have taken a look at our government's policies regarding the situation and found it totally lacking in concern for the aspirations of Black people in Southern Africa.

We invite all interested people to attend the conference in New Haven, Connecticut. We will be discussing the situation in Southern Africa and how to go about building a movement in the U.S. to end our government's and corporation's support to apartheid. Registration is $2.50 and housing is available. For more information please write Nick Ollcott, P.O. Box 154, Yale Station, New Haven, Connecticut.

A rebuttal to senate speaker

To the Editor:

In response to Senate Speaker Pat Whelan's comments in yesterday's Collegian that "the rules of the [Electoral] Convention are extremely biased and reflect the opinions of those who wrote them, Jon Hite and Friends," I can only say that Mr. Whelan himself helped write the rules proposed to the Convention. If these rules are biased, then Mr. Whelan's bias is reflected. Whether or not Mr. Whelan considers me a friend, is his business. Considering the fact that 15 or so dedicated people spent many hours over vacation and during the past few days writing rules that would be fair and impartial, I can only hope that Mr. Whelan's cheap demagoguery would put me on his "enemies list." This would only be fitting.

Spring Racism Preview

By K. STEPHEN SHAIN

No sooner had I finished lambasting one Mr. Nkrumah Olinga for using the word "nigger" in one of his "social commentaries", did Arista Records release a collection of tunes by one Miss Patti Smith entitled "Easter", that included a dangerous little ditty, "Rock 'n' Roll Nigger", an apparent opus to her budding young super-punk-stardom and a celebration of her alleged life "outside of society". What bothers me most is not that Arista's president Clive Davis would do such a thing, because he did, or that Patty Smith should have had more sense than that, because obviously she doesn't. What bothers me most is that the very same people who extended their congratulations to me for my effective demolition work on black bad influences, are of the opinion that white bad influences, namely Patty Smith's racism, is not a bad influence at all; it is an "artistic statement". Naturally, the congratulators are white but what exists here is not just the usual "double-standard". It is a display of baldfaced, unbridled, American racist liberalism cloaked beneath a libertarian rationale.

Every fad and every generation seems to have a character or two that push the line that, through overusing words or phrases, people can redefine them to their tastes, delegitimizing their old meaning, and through their new usage, give them new meaning. This particular view, liberal in theory and liberal in practice, was germinated in the years immediately following the McCarthy era when acceptable social critics like Lenny ("he died of drugs, not of his politics") Bruce and Dick ("all the evidence, but no convictions") Gregory began to sprinkle their monologues with racist jargon to "prove" their liberalism. Using terms like "nigger", "kike", or "spic", Lenny would explain, nay, rationalize, that he was helping to redefine these words by not using them in their intended racist context, thus taking away their power. Let's add right here that Lenny Bruce was a comic, not a social theorist, and he may have been funny but he is by no means right.

Dick Gregory on the other hand, felt that by saying things like "up from nigger", he could wrestle such racist terminology away from the racists, proclaiming them standard conversational grist for black American conversations. To say "up from nigger" denotes that "nigger" was once somewhere, somewhere that needed rising above. This is an awkward but effective form of historical legitimation; to the real anti-racist, "nigger" was never anywhere at all and no one was really ever a "nigger".

But not to Patty Smith. Like Jerry ("kill your parents") Rubin who propounded in the name of the hippie movement of the sixties that "students were white niggers", or John ("boy am I confused") Lennon and Yoko ("girl helped to confuse him") One who proclaimed, on behalf of struggling women everywhere, that "women are the niggers of the world," Patty ("in heart I am an American artist") Smith not only legitimizes the word "nigger" further, but romanticizes its deprecating connotation by revealing in her own alleged "social outcastedness". Patty is no more outside society than you or I; anything that can be sold is within society and Patty Smith and her records, movies or books are no exception.

> "Changes in (word) usage do not always yield a historical change in definition and racist terms are, perhaps, historically, the words most dependent on overall social change for redefination."

What Patty and her followers-devotees fail to understand is the fundamental difference between word definition and word usage. Changes in usage do not always yield a historical change in definition and racist terms are, perhaps historically, the words most dependent on overall social change for redefinition. The word "nigger" is fundamentally and historically defined as a racist word. It has been used, as mentioned earlier, in a variety of ways, but even Patty knows that she depends on the shock value of the misused word "nigger's" definition to carry her song. It is the images that this word conjures up in the listeners' mind that gives her song-filled statements about Jimi Hendrix, Jesus Christ and Jackson Pollack, as well as her egorific self, any weight at all.

Racism is the nation's most dangerous pollutant. It destroys both black identity and white integrity in a way that contaminates, poisons and destroys young and yearning minds and impedes prospects for the unity of all. You don't neutralize DDT by spreading it around in abundance. You neutralize it by isolating it and transforming the system that produces it. Like DDT, "nigger" pollutes and its neutralization lies not in spreading it around; rather it lies in the transformation of the system that created the word and its uses.

No doubt some of those liberals out there will ask: What about the music? It is the lyrics of Patty's music that are racist, not the insistent bar-chord progressions that pound and-or clang from one cut to the next. In fact, Bruce ("accessory to the fact") Springsteen has contributed a song to the album that'll probably be Patty's poke at the AM air-play charts. Sort of a pamp-pimp-punk tribute to love. Or night. Or ignorance....

At any rate, here we are again at the end of another fine editorial. Sorry to go, but I'd like to wrap this column up with a suggestion upon a recommendation. While you newly converted punks out there (and really any one else who cares to care) are busy fighting racism, listen to Elvis Costello's latest album, "This Year's Model." It's got a tribute to Patty on it — "This Year's Girl." Hope it's her last.

BOG catches CC

jerry rogers

Clubhouse politics, cronyism, and clouds of secrecy surrounding what should be information accessible to the public are sure signs that a seemingly representative government or bureaucracy is in fact guided by a more exclusive "permanent government."

The concept has already been applied here to the student government in the "criticism, self-criticism" spirit, but the administration's efforts toward consolidating power are more worthy of students' scrutiny and scorn. Almost a year ago the Campus Center administration provided us with a good example of its permanent government tendencies. Clouded by the hush-hush approach, the CC administration's actions were unchallenged except by the Board of Governors. And BOG work never receives the attention it is due.

In moves reminiscent of lame duck appointments, Dean of Students William Field, acting Campus Center director until last summer may have aided in having two members of the Campus Center administration promoted without affirmative action searches. The CC Board of Governors, as reported in the Collegian, publicly condemned the promotions.

Both the CC assistant director and the Conference Services manager received promotions from lower positions, yet affirmative action searches were not conducted for either of the two positions.

The Campus Center Affirmative Action plan says: "Promotions will be made in accordance with Affirmative Action guidelines. Traditional practices, and 'gentlemen's agreements' will not be honored if such actions are found to be contrary to Affirmative Action guidelines."

The intention of the plan is to insure a supply of qualified women and minority applicants through an internal search, if possible. If no qualified applicants can be found then an outreach search must be conducted to insure women and minority applicants.

Neither internal nor external searches were conducted for either position. Campus Center Director William Harris is unable to confront the issue officially because he was hired after the promotions. Field has discussed the promotions only in executive session with the BOG.

After discussing the matter with high-level CC administrators, one member of the BOG explained the administrations' philosophy narrowly defining how affirmative affirmative action must be.

The BOG member was told that whenever possible personnel are shifted internally to fill openings. Should a new position be established, only then would a full affirmative action search be mandated.

The BOG member pointed out that redefining an employee's job description so he or she can effectively step into an open position without an affirmative action search only circumvents the intention of affirmative action. No argument was offered in rebuttal.

It becomes clear then, that even if the UMass administration has progressive standards written into its personnel policies, it lacks the intention needed to effectively carry out those policies.

Unfortunately, it is doubtful as to whether a third party such as the BOG can file a complaint with the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, and it is obvious that the pressure an employer exerts on employees often make it extremely hard on employees initiating such action. The scrutiny of informed students supporting BOG work is, however, somewhat effective.

New lease on life

Everyone is applauding the idea of a lease these days. It appears to be the only useful thing to come out of student government all year, and our peerless leaders are clutching at it, hoping it will give them a new lease on legitimacy. They are rallying around it like bees to honey, like flies to..., a sure indication that there is more to it than they are telling.

A lease is nothing other than a legal contract, which should start the warning bells ringing. We have probably all heard the slogan that the legal system is "America's only working railroad." The message behind that motto is clear: there are power relations existing in this society, relations which the legal system helps protect. Those who are not powerful get legally railroaded. The legal system to which the lease appeals then, is designed to serve the administration and the Commonwealth which built and owns the dormitories, not the students who pay for and live in them.

The university's rights, as landlord, are already guaranteed. The lease would simply articulate our rights as tenants. It is, therefore, a good idea. The unfortunate aspect is that those rights are not substantial enough, and their enforcement is problematic. The administration has already shown its disregard for the law by allowing the dorms to deteriorate to the point where they violate virtually every health, sanitation and safety law on the books. There is little reason to believe that a lease would suddenly imbue administrators with virtue.

We could sue, of course. But LSO is hopelessly backlogged, meaning a long and frustrating wait for most students. Rooms could probably be changed before suits could be resolved in court. And if by chance the lease does culminate in widespread improvements, we will pay the bill.

The dormitories were poorly constructed to save money in the short-run. In the long-run, naturally, the repairs made necessary by shoddy construction exceed the cost of building the dorms properly in the first place.

Furthermore, because the dorms are oppressive places to live in, we often react hostily, causing additional damage. All this adds up to an astronomical repair bill, which Chancellor Bromery has stated publically will be passed on to us in the form of higher rent.

A better solution is an end to mandatory housing, combined with rent control in the local community. We probably have the ability and the numbers to accomplish both.

But this can be done only at the grass roots level, for it requires getting large numbers of students interested and involved, and student government is both unable and unwilling to do this. Apparently those at the top of the SGA find it more convenient, gratifying and lucrative to restrict their efforts, if their presence on the fourth floor can be characterized in that manner, to wheeling, dealing and stealing with and from each other and the administration.

Thousands of student dollars went into developing the lease. Supposedly it is for the benefit of all the students. But it has been turned into a campaign issue, and the money of all and the time of many is being used for the benefit of a few. Such attitudes poison the atmosphere and paralyze the operation of the SGA.

As the best SGA can give us, the lease is worth voting for. But also as the best SGA can give us, it is simultaneously an indictment of our government's ability to serve us. And finally, the manner in which it has been given us is a self-accusation of the integrity of those who claim to serve us.

Your Birthday

THURSDAY, MARCH 30 Born today, you are a restless individual, never satisfied with the status quo. No progress is enough; every setback is too much. You aspire to great things, and if you can develop patience to steady progress, you may achieve them. Ambition must not keep you from enjoying minor triumphs.

Your have a flexible nature, and are quick to push disappointment aside, to begin again to build your future. When one avenue closes, you are ready to seek another. Failure is a word you refuse to allow in your vocabulary; success you court continually.

You are methodical and intensely concentrated on getting ahead. At the same time, you know how to relax, to join with family and friends in the kind of fun that rekindles ambition, restores spirits, rests the body and renews the creative chambers of the mind.

Also born on this date: John Fiske, actor; Don Carlos of Spain.

To see what is in store for you tomorrow, find your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

★ Leaman

the Eastern Eight. It was the mid-life challenge that Leaman sought, and it was all the better since it meant remaining in Amherst. The league has forced Leaman to work harder at all facets of his job, and he's enjoying it.

"It's an entirely different job now," he said. "It's tough to win 20 games in a season because the talent is that much better. We played a team that finished third in the NIT, (Rutgers) and a team that finished second in the Eastern Regionals (Villanova)."

The greatest advantage to coaching, Leaman said, is the continuing challenge working with young men offers. Last season UMass finished 15-12, perhaps his most disappointing season ever at UMass, but Leaman feels he learned from the experience.

"I thought overall the kids played well. We lost a lot of players for a lot of games while playing our toughest schedule ever at UMass. I still think you have to teach basketball though, and maybe we got away from that last season. Maybe we tried to rely too much on raw talent."

Leaman was criticized by certain team members and fans this season for not allowing his team to open up and play a faster paced, fast break brand of basketball.

He doesn't think the criticism is justified.

"I don't ever remember telling our team they couldn't run. The problem was we didn't have the right combination of forwards to play fast break basketball. When Mike (Pyatt), Mark (Haymore) and Lenny (Kohlhaas) were in the game we didn't have anyone to run. And when Eric (Williams) played we didn't rebound the ball. The three reasons for not running were: one, quickness; two, rebounding; and three we weren't in condition. No, I don't think that's a fair criticism saying I prevented the team from running."

His next major goal is to see the school obtain the type of facility needed to operate a first class basketball operation. "Right now," he says, "the Cage is our biggest disadvantage."

Jack Leaman flew to Pittsburgh yesterday on a recruiting trip. He says he's going after a shooting guard and a quick forward to improve next year's team.

The rumors will have to wait for another season. It's obvious Jack Leaman will be back for another year.

Sox triumph

BRADENTON, Fla. [UPI] — A chronic back ailment forced John Candelaria, star of the Pittsburgh Pirates' pitching staff, to walk off the mound in the second inning Wednesday during an exhibition game won by the Boston Red Sox, 6-0.

Pirate trainer Tony Bartirome said Candelaria's back bothers him "three or four times a year". Bartirome said he expected Candelaria to pitch again on his normal turn Sunday.

Boston pitchers Rick Wise and Dick Drago combined on a four-hitter as the Red Sox raised their exhibition record to 11-8. Wise struck out seven in six innings, giving up two hits and two walks.

Get it on your chest.

AIAW nationals no joke for UMass gymwomen

By LAURA BASSETT
Collegian Staff

While this weekend will undoubtedly be filled with fun and games in honor of April Fools Day, the women's gymnastics team will not be joking around. The team traveled to the University of Washington at Seattle yesterday to compete in the Association of Intercollegiate Athletics for Women gymnastics nationals.

The gymwomen earned an at-large bid on March 13 after finishing third at the Eastern Regionals with a score of 139.20. The team has been seeded eighth in the competition behind Southwest Missouri, Penn State, Cal-State at Fullerton, Clarion, USC, University of Louisville and LSU.

Competition opens tomorrow for the team championship. UMass is in the third rotation at 7:30 p.m. and will compete against Penn State, USC and LSU. The team and all around champions are decided by performances tomorrow. On Saturday, the top twelve gymnasts in each event from tomorrows competition will compete for the individual titles.

The gymwomen are not strangers to post season competition. In the last seven years the team has always qualified for nationals. In the last four years UMass has finished out of the top five only once, back in 1976 when the Minutewomen finished seventh.

The season has been marked by the absence of the services of Jill Heggie, UMass' top all around competitor last season. The team has also been battling injuries and reoccuring bouts of the flu. Coach Virginia Evans feels the flu has weakened her team's growth capacity this season. "We haven't reached our peak yet this season and in Seattle would be a fine time to prove our full potential," said Evans.

Susan Cantwell, Stephanie Jones and Debbie Law will be making their final performances as Minutewomen at nationals. Cantwell is a veteran of three national competitions and Evans feels she may have her strongest performance this season. "Cantwell has performed as strongly this season as her three previous seasons and it would be terrific to see her finish off her gymnastics career on a strong note," said Evans.

Jones competed for the Minutewomen at nationals for the first time last year. She finished eighth all-around last year to qualify for the World University Games. This season, however, Jones has been bothered by a hip injury, but Evans feels confident she will be strong enough to be a solid contributor to the UMass lineup.

Debbie Law sat out last year due to her demanding nursing major. Law returned to the gym this fall and earned a position on the team's bars squad. Specializing gymnasts have always provided UMass with additional depth which has given the Minutewomen the edge in many competitions.

Cheryl Morrier will be the fourth all-around competitor for the Minutewomen. Morrier has been in and out of the lineup throughout the season but has been regaining her strength in recent weeks.

Freshmen Karen Clemente, Coleen Thorton, Kim Whitelaw and Debbie Smith, sophomore Laurie Knapp and junior Diane Laurenson will be filling out the Minutewomen lineup. Clemente and Thorton are expected to move in and fill the all-around slots vacated by Cantwell and Jones next season. Clemente has been working all four events on and off throughout the season for the ailing Morrier. Thorton has been sidelined with a back injury but appears to be recovering late in the season.

Whitelaw and Smith have been specializing on the bars, vaulting and floor exercise this year. Knapp and Laurenson have been turning in strong peformances on the beam and are expected to add extra depth to the beam at nationals.

Spirit and enthusiasm have been strong points for the Minutewomen all season. Teamwork and assistance are often reasons the gymnasts give as the key to their success. "I really like the attitude in the gym right now," commented Susan Cantwell. "We're all helping each other and that makes coming in every day that much easier."

At nationals, any extra psychological lift can make the difference between first fourth and first. After Saturday's competition and another long season is behind them, there will be plenty of time to joke around, but not until then.

The UMass lacrosse team, more appropriately known as Garber's Gorillas, will begin its season Saturday when it travels to Cornell University, sans Kevin Patterson (33), the team's second all-time leading scorer, who has graduated. Yesterday's game was postponed until today, but was cancelled due to poor field conditions. The Collegian neglected to print a postponement notice in yesterday's paper. Sorry

Is Leaman leaving?

It is the off-season and though the pressure of a 25 game campaign is over, the stress of the job remains. There's the recruiting, the preparation for another season, and the doubts.

He is entering that middle age phase of life when the questions about fulfillment of goals, doubts about his career and second thoughts about his job, play on his mind.

He's been around Amherst since 1961 and maybe it's time for a change, he wonders.

Commentary

Maybe it's time for another stimulus, a change of scenery where there's an opportunity to grow and attack another challenge.

Then there are the rumors.

In the past few years the rumors have flourished during the months of March, April and May. Four years ago he was on his way to Piscataway, N.J. for the job at Rutgers. Last year he was supposedly a leading candidate for the position at Boston College. This year the rumors that flow through the coaching fraternity, the ones that are subtly dropped to local newspapermen anxious for the "inside" word, have him on Commonwealth Ave. in Boston, or in Florida, Pennsylvania, New York......

The fact that rumors persist, that there is interest in his coaching talent, says something about the man who has been the most successful basketball coach in the school's history. In 11 seasons as head basketball coach Jack Leaman has tallied a nothing-to-be-scoffed-at record of 212 wins and 103 losses.

His talent is recognized nationwide, and when the Roy Sigler's, John Bach's and John Cinicola's expire to the Purgatory of the coaching profession, invariably his name is mentioned.

"Im not looking for another job," Leaman said this week in answer to rumors that he may be leaving UMass. "But if the right opportunity comes around... I'd be foolish to say no, I'm never going to leave. People are always talking to you about opportunities. My job here is good enough, though, that it's going to take an outstanding offer for me to leave Massachusetts."

Just such an offer came from Rutgers a few seasons past before Tom Young grabbed the position and thrust the Scarlet Knights into national prominence. Leaman had the job, all he had to do was sign on the dotted line. But he declined because life isn't as simple as it once was for the street-tough kid from Cambridge.

It would be easier if it was just Jack Leaman that he had to think about, but with a wife and daughter any change must be considered a family decision. "If I were single or younger, moving would be easier," he said.

This spring has been no exception. Rumors continue and when BU fired Roy Sigler, Leaman seemed the obvious successor. BU is his alma mater. He had captained the school's basketball team his senior year when the team reached the Eastern Regional finals. He had grown up in nearby Cambridge. If he was going to leave, BU seemed the obvious choice. Yet, he declined.

"I would have felt hurt if they hadn't talked to me, he said. "I just didn't know if I had the patience or energy to rebuild another program."

And what about the latest gossip that had had him sitting under the palm trees in Florida at Jacksonville University?

"It came about through Red Auerbach. He recommended me. I was semi-interested. But, you know, it's more flattering than anything else. I talked to he Jacksonville people and thought about the warm weather and all, but I just felt it wasn't a move in my best interest."

What's kept Leaman at UMass the past couple of seasons was the school's entry into

Can batmen still fly?

It was the beginning of spring vacation so I elected to bid farewell to my beard for the summer and hit the sunny climate of Florida.

On the way back from Key West my roommate and I thought we'd stop at Coral Gables, the home of the University of Miami, to take a gander at the UMass baseball team. The Minutemen were participating in UMiami's annual Hurricane Tournament, always the opening gun for Coach Dick Berguist's squad.

But it was a tough week for the Minutemen. The team limped home with a dismal 2-8 record, three semi-injured catchers, a top-ranked pitcher who had been unable to find the plate, and last year's best hitter — who hadn't acted that way during the spring campaign.

Now, in the big leagues, the baseball played in Florida is called spring training, and the baseball fan does not get upset because of a bad spring won-less record. (Nor should he get very optimistic because of a very good won-loss record. Afterall, the Montreal Expos are known for playing 700. ball in the spring.)

The Minutemen, however, were supposed to win and they did not. Should we be worried? Is the UMass baseball team headed for a long, dreary season?

No, according to Berquist.

"I know I sound like the typical optimistic baseball coach," said Berquist, "but I think the team can be expected to make a lot of noise in New England this season. No, I wasn't at all satisfied with the Florida trip, but we just have to turn things around, that's all."

As far as the catching was concerned, senior Charley Ciccone turned up with a sore arm, Dave Oleksak was injured under the chin on a sliding play at the plate, and MIke Walsh was struck by a pitch thrown in the dirt that took a bad hop off the artificial turf.

The Berquist report: "Don't worry about our catching. The three of them are fine now and we will not have any catching problems."

The biggest concern may be the condition of hurler Tom Nigro, though. Nigro was the team's top-pitcher last season and going into the 1978 campaign he had pro scouts awaiting an even better season.

The Hurricane Tourney saw a disappointed Nigro fail to impress anyone, most notably rival batters, in three outings.

"He's not a big, overpowering pitcher but he's a hard thrower with a good breaking pitch," explained Berquist. "But he has to get his breaking pitches over to be effective and that was his basic problem last week."

The coach has said that the senior co-captain has been working hard all week and expects marked improvement.

The team's other co-captain, junior Ed Skribiski, was considered the top hitter on the squad last season but suffred through a tough slump in Florida. The word "slump" should be emphasized, for the book on the Sunderland shortstop is that he is a respected offensive player. And respected offensive players do not dry up and blow away over night...

But fear not. The news out of Miami is not all bad.

For one thing, outfielder Mike McEvilly, who also plays on the footbaal team, was one of the top hitters in the tourney with a 414 average and was the only Minuteman named to the all-tournament team.

The top UMass hurler turned out to be Doug Welenc, a sophomore who no-hit Bowling Green for six innings and held Miami to two hits in another stint.

The Minutemen's reputations will be on the line this weekend as they engage in a tournament at Southeastern Massachusetts University. UMass has won the tourney two years in a row, and a win this time around may put the team back in the right direction.

On the pro side

Roger Craig, recently named manager of the San Diego Padres after the dismall of Alvin Dark, has an interesting niche in baseball history. As an aging pitcher for the expansion New York Mets in 1961, Craig reared back to fire a fastball during a spring training game with a runner on third. Unfortunately, Craig dropped the ball and thus the very first run ever given up by the Mets was through a balk...

Well, it was the New York Mets.

Israel attacks

Nuclear explosion shocks Mideast

[Compiled from wires] — Israel last night annihilated the Lebanese port city of Tyre by a nuclear blast, according to the Israeli military command with an estimated 150,000 people killed.

Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin said he ordered the use of a nuclear bomb in order to "show the implaccable foe arrayed against us that we will not hesitate to use any and all means available to defend our homeland."

Palestinian leader Yassir Arafat called for "the immediate destruction if Israel by the combined forces of all Arab nations."

The 15 kiloton blast, smaller than the 20 kiloton Hiroshima blast, leveled the city which had been a major Palestinian base for operations against Israel. According to Israeli intelligence sources, the port facilities had been used to bring arms into Lebanon and to launch the PLO raid in which 35 Israelis were killed two weeks ago.

United States President Jimmy Carter condemned Israel for using the bomb and announced the US would begin sending medical aid to Lebanon as soon as possible. He ordered ships of the US Sixth Fleet into the area to assist in evacuating victims of the blast.

Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev also condemned Israel.

Israeli Defense Minister Eber Weizman refused to confirm reports that material for the bomb that come from the Israeli nuclear reactor at Dimona. US weapons experts said that plutonium, a by-product of the reactor, could be used to make a bomb the size used at Tyre.

One survivor said she had gone to the market to get some food when the bomb hit. "When I came back, there was nothing left: no house, no family, nothing," said the unidentified woman as she stood sobbing beside a pile of rubble.

A Palestinian guerrilla said he had been patrolling the dock area when the bomb hit. "I saw only one Israeli plane. It was very high and it dropped a parachute. All of a sudden there was nothing but light. I was knocked into the water," said the guerrilla who refused to be identified.

An Israeli military spokesman said the bomb was dropped by parachute so as to minimize the fallout from the blast.

UN peacekeeping forces which had been stationed about 30 miles to the south of Tyre immediately rushed to aid the stricken city. Syrian forces in Lebanon as part of the Arab League peacekeeping force also rushed aid to the area. They were hampered by a lack of facilities and supplies. "We have almost no medical equipment, food, or shelter for the survivors," said one French officer who is a member of the UN forces.

Aid began reaching the area from Europe and the US. Two hospital ships from the US Sixth Fleet have been sent to take on injured. US Air Force planes from bases in Europe began airlifting in food and medical supplies. Teams of radiation experts were en route to the site from the US, France, and Great Britain.

There were no reports of heavy fighting although there were scattered clashes between Palestinian guerrillas and Israeli forces in southern Lebanon. Syrian President Hafez Assad said his "first priority was to aid our stricken Arab brothers."

Carter called on all parties in the Mid-East to "let this be the final act of violence. This must never happen again."

Carter called on all parties in the Mid-East to "use this not as a cause of further violence but as a reminder of the dangers we face in this nuclear age. We have seen 30 years of war, let us see no more."

US Secretary of State Cyrus Vance said last night he will fly to Geneva today to meet with British, French, and Russian leaders to try and arrange a joint peace mission. "We have reached the ultimate insanity in the mid-East. We must make sure that it will go no further and will never be repeated," said Vance.

Israeli Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan said Israel's purpose to "demonstrate to the Arabs the full extent of our abilitiies and our determination. The choice of what comes next, war or peace, is up to them."

Begin said he is prepared to meet with the leaders of the Arab nations. "I will go to Cairo or Geneva or wherever they wish. We have laid all our cards on the table," said Begin.

Egyptian President Anwar Sadat said the nuclear attack on Lebanon has "dashed any hopes of resuming the peace initiative I began last October. Prime Minister Begin has shown the world his true colors by this unforgivable act."

Saudi Arabian King Khalid threatened a repeat of the 1973 Arab oil embargo against Western nations unless "immediate steps are taken to insure that Israel is not allowed the opportunity to repeat this atrocity."

The current crisis in Lebanon began two weeks ago with a PLO raid on an Israeli tourist bus. Thirty-five Israelis and nine guerrillas were killed in the raid. Three days later, Israeli troops struck into Lebanon in a move described by Begin as "a legitimate act of national self-defense."

The Israeli assault pushed Palestinian guerrilla forces out of their bases in southern Lebanon and north of the Litani River.

On Monday of this week, UN peacekeeping forces began taking up positions along the Litani and in southern Lebanon as Israeli forces began withdrawing.

TYRE, LEBANON — Digging with their bare hands, a Lebanese couple search for their possessions in what remains of the port city a PLO stronghold after the blast. Said one man, "There was nothing left. Absolutely nothing. Everything was destroyed. I went back to look for a lucky charm I had that had given me strength and I stopped looking after a minute. There was nothing left......

Part of bomb made here

By SAM CUMMINGS
Collegian Staff

UMass electrical and computer engineering professor David French announced early this morning that the fire control system of the Israeli A-bomb were built here at UMass. "We were asked to develop a lightweight, pre-programmable, automatic fire control system which would cost less than previously available svstems," said French.

UMass was chosen to construct the bomb's fire control system because of (place name here)'s experience in designing and building this type of system. "I worked on the first American H-bomb and on the Minuteman and Polaris missles," said French.

Better known universities such as MIT or Cal Tech were considered but rejected because of their locations, according to the scientist. "They are located in big cities where you have a lot of people snooping around. UMass is located in a nice quiet, little out of the way town," said French.

The biggest problem, according to French was to keep the weight down. "The bomb had to be light enough to be carried by an F4 Phantom II jet. A lot of the weight was taken up by the casing among other things."

"We solved both the weight and size problems by the use of advanced microprocessor units similar to the IBM 570."

The professor said that the bomb could be detonated by any one of several ways. "The bomb could be set to explode after a predetermined length of time, when it reached a preset altitude, or by a coded radio signal."

Three altitude sensing systems provided information to the bomb's main fire control system: a radar altimeter, an optical laser altimiter, and a conventional barometric altimeter.

All three systems constantly monitor the bomb's altitude once it had been released from the aircraft. The detonation altitude was preprogramed into the computer by the pilot of the aircraft. At least two of the three systems had to signal that the bomb was at the correct altitude before it would detonate. "This meant that if one system malfunctioned, the other two would override it and the bomb would still function as planned," said French.

Once the bomb computer had received the signal to detonate, it triggered a TNT charge. The TNT was placed around a hollow sphere of Plutonium 238. By using a device known as an explosive lens, (pnh) was able to insure that the sphere would be compressed equally from all directions. Compressing the sphere raised the density of the plutonium to the critical level needed to start a chain reaction.

French said he received a grant of $100,000 for building the systems, but he refused to say who gave him the money. "No, it wasn't the CIA or Tongsun Park. Let's just say they threw in all the chicken soup I could eat as a bonus," said the scientist.

"Who says American products aren't any good? We may not make good small cars or color TVs but we sure make excellent weapons of mass destruction," said French.

Amy's puberty foreshortens trip

WASHINGTON [PTA] — President Carter will cut short his seven-day tour of South American and African countries to fly back to Washington today because of a "family crisis," according to White House press secretary Jody Powell.

Sources close to the Carter family said Amy Carter, 10, has reached puberty and is emotionally upset after presidential aide Hamilton Jordan made a pass at her during a trip to a Bethesda, Md. zoo.

Jordan, reached last night at Washington's Blue Moose Cafe, told reporters, "Amy is hornier than the reindeer she got for Christmas. It's really wild."

Jimmy and Rosalynn Carter are scheduled to leave Brazil in Air Force One today at 9:30 a.m. EST. Brazilian President Ernesto Giesel bid the Carter's farewell from the space-age capital Brasillia, and said, "Of course you have every human right to leave," and to show no hard feelings, fired a 21-gun salute, right into dissenting cardinals Dom Paulo Evariso Arns, and Eugenio Salles.

Powell said in Washington Carter will continue his two-continent tour, "as soon as the Carter family gets over this difficult period."

Asked to comment on rumors that Amy is the reason for Carter's abrupt change in plans, Powell refused comment except to say, "I wouldn't be too hard on Ham. To know Amy is to love Amy."

A pair of lecherous, old Brazilian men leer at Amy Carter, suffering through the throes of puberty. Amy, pretending not to notice, said later that, "I really thought that guy in the beret was cute, though I wish he didn't pinch so hard." Amy's nanny also had a good time in Brazil (right). The hand belongs to an unidentified mule skinner, who was quoted as saying, Quohiri mowiha sibitsu," roughly meaning, "Wanna cookie?" (PU)

DeLima suffocates; killed by leaflets

Alleged smotherer Jon A. Hite, shown here after being drugged at Northampton State Hospital.

Student Senate Speaker Brian DeLima was smothered to death yesterday when SGA President Jon Hite covered him with leftover campaign leaflets after first tying DeLima up with a telephone extension cord.

Hite, who was taken to Northampton State Hospital for 20 days observation, was quoted as mumbling incoherently "We've got you by the calls, DeLima!" as he was being put in the wagon. He yelled "Alohah!" as he waved goodbye.

Hite told Collegian reporters he came upon DeLima making a telephone call in the Student Senate office and became so enraged he attacked his known adversary.

Library drops brick; kills worker

George Norton, director of the UMass physical plant was killed yesterday by a brick from the library as he was inspecting the fences around the building.

The fences are intended to keep people away from the library's outside because of the danger of falling bricks, a physical plant worker said.

Norton had been summoned to the library by library workers who said they saw things falling by the windows.

Wood's body found in melting snowpile

The body of former UMass President Robert C. Wood was discovered late yesterday under a melting 20 foot mound of snow at the UMass-Boston campus on Columbia Point.

Wood, who had been missing for six weeks, apparently slipped on a discarded bannana peel just five feet from his car.

Patrick O'Hara, a resident of south Boston, saw a corner of Wood's briefcase under the snow. When he looked closer O'Hara said he saw a hand clutching what appears to be "worry beads".

Wood's wife said her husband always carried worry beads with him.

Wood's frozen body was removed from the snow bank but officials say they were unable to pry the beads loose from Wood's hand.

Funeral arrangements have not been made.

Russ Swan dies; hangs self from tree

UMass Yippie leader Russ Swan died yesterday by hanging himself from a tree near the Whitmore administration building with red yarn, tape and rope.

Swan's friends said he had been depressed for several days following the death of his duck last Friday. According to a friend of Swan's, the duck ate 30 pounds of marijuana and subsequently died from over-intoxication.

Swan, who had tried to organize several "smoke-ins" to legalize marijuana had also been an SGA presidential candidate. While campaigning he covered the Whitmore building with red tape, yarn and rope.

One of Swan's closest friends theorized that Swan killed himself over the loss of his pot, and not his duck.

Lost woman dies in campus garage

A UMass freshman was found dead in the Campus Center parking garage late last night after being lost in the garage for three and a half weeks. The 19-year-old woman was barely alive when police first discovered her lying in a red and white Pinto which had run out of gas.

The woman died in the ambulance on the way to a hospital. Her name was not disclosed to reporters until next of kin could be notified.

UMass security director Saul L. Chafin said he had never heard of anyone being lost in the garage for that length of time. "But", he said "there have been cases parents and students who have been lost for two weeks in that place — I even got lost there."

Pyramid of men crushes Floorenda

The 73-year-old Floorenda died last Friday in Puerto Rico under mysterious circumstances, apparently crushed to death by a seven-man pyramid in a room at the San Juan Hilton, where he was planning a major comeback.

A long-time professional associate and close acquaintence summed up the feelings of mourners, calling the old Croat "a man whose time had come."

Dining Common releases emergency procedures

Food Services Manager Richard A. Flynn said today the dining commons are listing procedures to be followed by all students in the event of an emergency. The Collegian is reprinting the list as a service to the UMass community:

IN THE EVENT THE DINING COMMONS SERVES ANY MEAL THREE OR MORE CONSECUTIVE NIGHTS:

1. Close all Doors to Food Area.
2. Pull Building Food Alarm.
3. Call 5-3111 to Report the injustice.
4. Evacuate and Stay Clear of Building and Rescue Apparatus.
5. Request the nutrition experts to Respond, even if the leftovers have been discarded.

EVACUATION FROM FOOD AREA

A. Feel D.C. tray from top to bottom — if it is hot, do not proceed, go back.

B. If tray is cool, crouch low and open door slowly. Close door quickly if leftovers are present so you don't inhale them.

C. If it is clear, exit via stairwells. Stay low if food is still present.

D. Leave doors unlocked so the nutrition experts can enter.

E. Always feel with the back of your spoon to avoid possible electrocution.

F. If you encounter a cafeteria lady in a stairwell, go back and go out another set of stairs.

G. If trapped in the D.C. do the following:

1. Jam a freshman or SGA member under door jamb to keep leftovers out.
2. Open windows and yell to nutrition experts.
3. If possible, dial 5-3111 and report your situation and location.
4. Keep a soaked towel over your head.
5. Stay low, breathe fresh air near window.

Gorilla a candidate for UMass presidency

A. Scott Clipboard

By AUBERLAE ARBERSHARBER
Collegian Staff

There are now only two "serious and semi-serious candidates" contending for the UMass presidency according to sources close to the Special Trustees' Search Committee.

Unconfirmed reports state that former covert intelligence agent, A. Scott Clipboard, and Maurice the Garrulous Gorilla, star of a budget balancing act from the West Coast, are vying to fill the shoes of former UMass president Robert C. Wood, void since Jan. 1.

Search Committee Chairman Stephen G. Breyer would not confirm the reports today.

Interviewed on his tuna trawler, the Out to Lunch, his sea side home, Clipboard confessed last night, "I know the monkey's got a lot going for him, but uhmm, uhh ... uhh."

The chimp, acting vice-chancellor for primate affairs at nearby Hampster College, was unavailable for comment and based on that evidence has the job "in the bag" according to sources.

"The Search Committee has mixed emotions about these two," our sources told the Collegin last night, "and will probably schedule a live debate between the two contenders."

According to sources the chimp would fill a number of affirmative action requirements while Clipboard would only account for a few minor handicapped personnel positions.

Jordan seeks drink; finds Mondale missing

By HAUTAUPH DIWIRE

WASHINGTON [API] — Vice President of the United States Walter Mondale was reported missing yesterday by Presidential aide Hamilton Jordon, who was looking for someone to buy him a drink, sources close to the White House said yesterday.

The sources, who are so close to the White House that the president has tripped over them repeatedly, said an attempt was made to swear-in House Speaker Tip "Albert" O'Neill as the new Vice President.

O'Neill was not in Washington yesterday, however. His was reported to be in Virginia at an orgy with some South Korean friends.

"He was here yesterday, I think," said President Jimmy Carter. "Maybe it was last week...Come to think of it, I haven't seen whatsizname — Walter, isn't it? — since last January, I guess."

Carter also said, "Off the record — don't print this, this is just between you and me — who the hell needs him? He's dull. He hasn't even got family members that can be held up to public ridicule."

The FBI, the CIA, the Washington police, the Secret Service and several White House janitors were mobilized yesterday to find Mondale. A spokesman for the FBI said, "Don't expect too much. It took us three years to find Patty Hearst. And we never did find Jimmy Hoffa."

"We've looked everywhere," said director Clarence M. Kelly. "I even looked under my bed. That's where I usually lose things, you know. Once I couldn't find my wife for two weeks, and there she was, under the bed."

Director of the CIA Stansfield Turner said that he was extremely worried about Mondale. "I hope this isn't an act of senseless terrorism," he said. "If it's terrorism, it better make sense. I think we can find him with no problem. We'll tap some phones, follow some people around, open some people's mail. What fun."

The search has already covered most of Washington and some of Virginia, but there has still been no sign of Mondale. When last seen, Mondale wasn't seen at all.

National Security advisor Zbiginev Brezinski was widely believed to be the last person to see Mondale. Brezinski was signing a document, however, and will not be available for comment until next week.

The search grew in intensity last night, when many people were seen in the Washington area looking under rocks, behind lamp-posts and in doorways, calling "Wally! Wally!"

Hamilton Jordan was seen in the Blue Moose Bar. "I'll bet Mondale's here," he said, after he had emptied his mouth of his amaretto and cream.

By 10 p.m., floodlights were crossing Washington, sirens were wailing, and the Mondale seekers were at every nook and cranny of the capitol.

Carter called an emergency press conference at midnight. "Wait! We found him," he said. "He was at his desk the whole time."

Index debuts yesterday; printed on xerox machine

By RIP VAN WINKLE
Still Waiting Staff

The Index, the University of Massachusetts decadebook, will appear on campus yesterday, according to an un-named Index editor.

"Yep, we'll have it out yesterday," the editor said. "You mean you missed it."

Students will be expected to bring their little computer card that says "Index," if it hasn't rotted to dust yet, and one dollar. The dollar should be one minted before 1935, in keeping with the spirit of Index publication.

When asked what delayed the book for so long, the editor said, "Lots of things. You wouldn't understand. Get outta here and leave me along. Jesus, you reporters bother me."

The Collegian special investigative team of Woodhead and Burnspleen has uncovered some interesting details about the tardiness of the Index.

Last June 6, the date the book was supposed to go to the publisher, came and went, and the publisher did not receive the galleys of the book. All they received was a note that read "Hang on. Two more minutes. I'm almost done here."

The publisher, D.K. "Eggs" Benedict, of Delerious, Ohio, said, "Boy, I had my mimeograph machine all ready to run off the Index. I even had someone to staple the pages."

The Index is now expected to be printed on the Xerox machines in the University Library. This will require a lot of nickels, however. When asked where the nickels were going to come from, the Index editor said, "Man, I told you to get the hell out of here. Don't you clowns understand English?"

The Collegian asked BOG co-chair Boss Herb W. Tyson what he planned to do about the tardiness of the Index. Tyson replied, "I don't know anything. I'll have to ask Henry Doyle."

The Collegian polled several students on campus, randomly choosing names from a student directory. The directory was from 1923, however, and most of the students were awfully old.

Health officials identify cause of freak epidemic

By LARRY MAMMORY
Collegian Staff

University Health Center officials, with the aid of the anthropology department, believe they have identified the cause of a recent freak epidemic.

Since Monday 20 male residents of Pierpont House have reported to the infirmary complaining of painful chest injuries. Physicians examining the men noted similar symptoms in all cases — severe contusions of the upper frontal thoracic area.

The patients all claimed the bruising was the result of "Tasmanian teat-twisters," which were described by one of the men involved as "grabbing onto a guy's tit and yankin' on it."

Professor L. Sydney Tweak of the Department of Anthropology confirmed the students' contentions, saying that twisting the vestigial male teat is an ancient ritual of greeting between men on the island of Tasmania, which lies off the southern coast of Australia.

"It seems to have something to do with affirming one's manhood," said Tweak, who has visited Tasmania and had his teats twisted several times.

"The swelling can last for weeks," he added.

One health center physician, Dr. James. N. Elrodd, reported that two of the patients were still in serious condition as of last night.

"They apparently were involved in some sort of Tasmanian teat-twister tournament," said Elrodd. "When they grabbed at the same time, the pain caused their muscles to lock and they couldn't release their grips."

Specialists have been called in to help separate the two men, who as yet refuse to identify themselves.

"Tasmanian teat-twister tournaments have initiated a terrible trend among troglodytes and twits," said T. Thomas "Ted" Tillson, spokesperson for UMass security's teat-twister taskforce.

Professor Tweak, however, took time to pay tribute to the tradition, telling the 20 twisters to "tug a tit today."

Audit finds Campus Center topsy-turvy

By MARK A. LECESSPOOL
Collegian Staff

A construction and engineering audit recently obtained by the Collegian indicates that the Campus Center was built upside-down.

The report was completed last spring by the Boston engineering firm of Fuller Fuller, and Emmtier, and compared several campus structures with the original plans for their construction. The report was issued to Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery in June, labelled "confidential."

"No wonder the damn thing leaks so bad," said Cora T. Emmtier, co-author of the report, in a telephone interview last night. "The roof is at the bottom of the building instead of the top."

According to the report, the mistake was first discovered by a plumbing contractor, who was called in to investigate incredible flooding problems in the hotel rooms. He found all the toilets and other fixtures were hanging from the ceiling. The report quoted him as saying, "I'd hate to take a crap in this place."

The plumbing was reversed soon after the problem was discovered.

When contacted last night, Bromery would only say the administration was looking into the feasibility of turning the whole building back over. "While there are obviously some drawbacks to flipping it, we could save the money we would have spent patching the roof," he said.

The Campus Center Board of Governors last night passed a resolution "abhoring the administration's incompetence and inverted priorities during the whole affair." Board of Governors member Boss Herb Tyson said he asked Henry Doyle what to do and was advised to stand on his head "until the situation is rectified."

The construction report also implies that the university library was originally designed to be placed on its side, until the construction crew discovered there was not enough room between the campus pond and South College. The original blueprints have all been destroyed, however, said Emmtier.

Nixon kidnapped by terrorists

SAN CLEMENTE — In a daring daylight raid former president Richard M. Nixon was kidnapped yesterday afternoon from the kitchen of his San Clemente home.

Four kidnappers reportedly gained entry to the heavily-guarded estate by hijacking a "Homes of the Stars" tour bus full of conventioning Elks Club members, threatening to barricade themselves in the bus rest room facility if they did not receive full cooperation from all passengers.

While two of the unidentified terrorists forced the bus to a screeching halt on the patio of the Nixon home, two others, reportedly dressed in mauve boxer shorts, white dinner jackets, and what one witness described as "ill-fitting red wigs," leaped from a left rear window of the comandeered Greyhound and, brandishing late-model army sub-machine guns, mowed down Milton Schrub, the Nixon's loyal landscaper of twenty-seven years, as well as an unspecified number of unidentified secret service men and house-guest Morris the cat, noted television personality and close family friend of the Nixons.

"They said they were telephone repairmen," sobbed Mario Renaldo, head butler of the Nixon household, as he explained how the kidnappers gained entry to the heavily fortified Nixon residence.

Once inside, the pseudo red-headed pair seized the former president and his lunch, a plate of cottage cheese and ketchup which Nixon's wife Pat had just prepared for him, and fled to the waiting bus. "I suppose this means I will have to hire a new landscaper," said the obviously-distraught former first lady.

The terrorists, feigning a craving for crab and onion Syrian subs, left the ill-fated bus load of Elks double parked outside "Wookie's", a prominent Burbank fast food establishment, hustled Nixon and lunch into a waiting car, and sped off.

Authorities are baffled as to both the motives and identities of the kidnappers, and have few leads. "Our main problem right now," said FBI director Clarence Kelly, "is deciphering the ransom note, but I can unequivocably state that if and when we do discover what the demands of these reprehensible miscreants are, we will by no means be willing to meet them. Who needs that decrepit old crook anyway."

Certain syntactical irregularities in the half dozen lines of incomprehensible gibberish which comprise what is believed to be the ranson note are believed, by some experts, to be indicative of an obscure and untranslatable Eastern European dialect. Says prominent Harvard University linguist Qu2%&—z $%q¶¶, "We appear to be dealing with an indigent group of Serbo-Croatian nationalists."

When questioned, FBI Director Kelly characterized the report as "unsubstantiated", however, he did admit that the agency had made a damn raid on the headquarters of radical Serbo-Croation nationalists in the rest rooms of a Burger King establishment on Route 47, about three miles outside of Sausalito, California.

Kelly declined to comment on the results of the raid, although an anonymous source close to the investigation reported that "large quantities" of un-used toilet paper "and a lot of crud" were found. "It looked pretty kinky to me," the source stated. "Anybody who would want Nixon would have to be pretty sick anyway."

Ruth Carter Stapleton, President Carter's sister, will reportedly appear on national television at 7 p.m. EST to offer herself as a hostage in exchange for Mr. Nixon. "I feel it is my Christian duty to give those poor misguided souls whatever they want, whoever they are," said Miss Stapleton. "Besides, things have been kind of slow lately with Larry (Flynt) out of commission."

Similar offers have come from such notables as singer Anna Maria Alberghetti, a longtime friend of the Nixons, boxer Leon Spinks, and even a posthumus offer from millionnaire Howard Hughes.

As of press time, however, authorities are completely mystified as to the fate of former President Nixon. Says Director Kelly, "I have absolutely no idea what is going on with this situation, and frankly I don't care. We have things totally under control here."

Dead aerialist suspended in mid-air

SARASOTA, Fla. [UPI] — Karl Floorenda, the world-renowned high-wire artist once described as "a grotty-minded old sot who can barely keep his balance," will be 'buried' tomorrow as he lived — high above the earth. New York Circuit Court Judge Arthur Paff yesterday cleared the way for Floorenda to be stuffed and suspended by a cable between the twin 1,000 ft. - plus towers of the World Trade Center in New York City.

Family members were unavailable for comment, but a spokesman said the family just wanted to honor the terms of the Wafloorenda will and "let the publicity die a natural death." Arthur Paff, spokesman for the famed troop of aerialists, founded by Floorenda as a tax shelter when his village was raped by Cossacks in the old country, said the body would be prepared and shipped to New York for installation tomorrow.

Blue Wall convention reelects Hite as pres

There were two electoral conventions held Wednesday night to elect a student president, and one of them reached a decision.

While the original convention, mystified by its own procedures, could never get off the ground, drove off disgusted, bored and frustrated candidates wandered into the Blue Wall, reconvened, and elected Jon Hite to a second term.

The Blue Wall delegates thought that all of the candidates were unqualified and decided to elect Hite after he promised to provide free fruit sce at all senate meetings.

The delegates were also impressed that Hite didn't try to make any backroom deals. "Jon is an honest man," one delegate said. "He makes his offers of dope and pot right out in the open."

Boss Herb W. Tyson, however, was furious because he expected to be elected rather easily. However Boss Tyson refused to comment other than to say, "I don't know anything. I'll have to ask Henry Doyle.

The SGA rules committee believes Hite's election is illegal because he is the presiding officer of the original convention, thereby creating a conflict of interest. Hite, however, prefers to regard the situation as an interesting conflict. It is widely believed that to resolve the conflict, many backroom deals will have to be made.

Boss Tyson believes that he will win it there, proclaiming, "no one can outsleaze the Doyle machine." He brushed off fears that Hite, as presiding officer, would try to steer the convention away from him, saying, "If Hite tries anything, we'll stuff him like a ballot box."

The team of Birmingham and Barenburg, although they came in last on the first ballot, still think they can win it.

Birmingham apparently is willing to do anything to win, saying, "We will fight in the dormitories, we will fight in the classrooms, we will fight in the backrooms. We will never surrender."

Boss Tyson, this time receiving permission from Henry Doyle to talk with the press, said that Birmingham was a bad influence on students, with all her talk of fighting. Students shouldn't fight their Big Boss Herby, Tyson said, but should "Ask not what your Boss can do for you. Ask what you can do for Boss."

To expedite the second and perhaps successive ballots when the convention reconvenes, the SGA has budgeted funds for prizes. The area government that behaves at behaves the best will receive a bust of Big Boss Herb Tyson. The individual who asks the fewest questions will be given a no-show job by Henry Doyle, the godfather of student government. And for the individual who votes the fastest, the senate will donate, in the winners' name, 1,000 to the RSO group of his or her choice.

These elaborate preparations are being taken to make student government efficient and make student government efficient and restore the confidence of the students. Boss Tyson, however thinks all this unnecessary. "To restore confidence," Boss Tyson said, "just elect some confidence men. Like me and my boys."

Smegma spreads slowly to UMass community

By Buster Hymen
Collegian Staph Expert

The administration today declared the infirmary in a state of "smegmatic emergency" from the devestating results of a smegma epedemic which began here early yesterday morning.

All contact has been lost with university health officials after their last garbled and horrifying transmission received from the infirmary just a few short hours ago. The message said:

"It's, It's incredible! We're up to our neck's in cheese! Help! We need help!....-Mayday....mayday...."

According to an earlier report from Dr. Clyde Clapper, swarms of students began filing into the infirmary yesterday "smeared, smothered and smelling of smegma".

"Apparently the smegma spread to the Valley area via windblown cumulous clouds from Revere," claimed Clapper cleverly.

Special lab technicians flown in from Washington D.C. analyzed the sebacious secretion and called the smegma "a highly contagious strand of cheez-Victoria, consisting chiefly of desquimated epithelial cells which of course collect under the foreskin of the penis or around the clitoris."

According to UMass Security Director Saul Chafing, the National Guard has been notified and is sending a unit of frogmen to assist in rescue operations.

Tenured Dean of Student, Lefty Field informed the Collegian Governor Micheal Doeskakas will direct emergency procedures from the campaign helicoper unveiled during the states last emergency.

The Governor, according to Field, "takes a hardline against smegma".

Meanwhile, relatives of those trapped inside the smegmaflooded infirmary anxiously await news of the fate of their loved ones.

I TOO AM A DEAN OF BEER.

Or, There's a Very Little Siglinda Steinfuller in my pinkie finger.

Constipated Persons,

Have you ever thought of becoming a Dean of Beer like me, Siggy Schvantzschticker? Well, forget it, clod. You don't have a chance, I'm unique. I am the only person who can correctly answer the following questions:

1. What is the velocity of the average stool?
2. Is more or less water displaced by an attack of the "drizzlin's"?

If you answered "YES" to either of these questions, you obviously don't understand them.

Now, to further your education, inject directly into your colon 36cc of ammonia. Which we Deans know can only be found in Schitz. Which can only be found in the best rest rooms in town.

But then, where else would we Deans hang out?

Fellow Beer Persons,

Have you ever thought of becoming a Dean of Beer like me, Siglinda Steinfüller? It may be easier than you think. Just answer these two easy questions:

1. Have you found that if you don't have pizza once a week, you lose your appreciation for Italian art?
2. If you don't have time to party, does studying clog your brain?

If you answered "YES" to either of these questions, you have the makings of a great Dean of Beer.

Now, to further your education, take one average beer mug and add the great taste of Gusto. Which we Deans know can only be found in Schlitz.

Which can only be found at the best pubs in town.

Collegian—bomb the office

If the past is any indication, most of you will pick up this Collegian and read it. This is a mistake. This Collegian is too much of an insult to your intelligence for you to just apatheticly pick it up and read it, and not loudly voice your opinion about the sorry condition of this rag.

To cite a few examples: The Collegian has been in existence for 107 years, has spent untold millions, and has not printed a word of newsworthy material. The Board of Editors is so inefficient and mismanaged that an incompetent like like the Editor in Chief has control over the other incompetent editors. And the news editors sooner or later become patsies for the journalism department or simply keep their mouths shut about the way news is ignored in the Collegian. In short, we at the Collegian are churlish, stupid and insulting, and more concerned with getting jobs with the Boston Globe and protecting our own vested interests.

Reading this paper only allows us to continue with our unethical waste of student money and our backhanded patronage and simony. It also allows us to think you actually read the Collegian.

You might ask why you should go on reading this drivel when you could be reading the Boston Globe. Indeed why even read this editorial? There is an alternative though; you can come down and bomb the Collegian. Bombing the Collegian office would, in effect, be an indication of your disenchantedness. It is different from just reading the Boston Globe in that it registers a clear snetiment. Bombing the office will show that you want change, and this will occur, specially if most of us are down here when you do it. However, it should not be thought that bombing the office will effect an immediate change in the paper, as the survivors will probably gather up the remains and put out more drivel for a while.

Not bombing the office will accomplish nothing, and will allow us to continue to accomplish nothing. Bombing the office, an act of no confidence will be the light the fuse of change, and be the first step toward creating a newspaper that will be responsive to your real needs, not just those of an incompent group of nimcompoops.

Preserve, persecute oddballs

Dr. Bill Sandstorm

In has often been argued that, in order to preserve rights for people like Richard Nixon to protest what they feel are wrong-doings, the rights of other oddballs must also be preserved. I have argued this. I have also argued the other side. And the middle. None very convincingly. After all, it's all existential.

Georg Hegel once wrote, "Man's reflection is not a perfect state of Being, but rather of Beeeeeing, and in order for the dialactic to make phone calls during the low rate period, it must be understood that the nation-state be overseen by a world historical individual." I don't understand a word of it, but Hegel was a very great philospher. And I can argue both sides of Hegel.

The typical "liberal" (yucck! I am not a "liberal"! I am a Hegelian naturalist who has read a couple chapters of Marx, and seen all their films. Where was I? Oh, yeah,) the typical "liberal" idea that only one side of a question can be argued is bankrupt, which just proves my point, since "bankrupt" is such a disgustingly capatlistic term that it brings me sickness unto death. (that's a book title by another famous philopher with a foreign sounding name. I'll bet you never read it.)

But "bankrupt" isn't a capatalistic term. Can a word be capatalistic? Is Exxon any more a capatalistic term, than, say, persimmon? Bankrupt is not a capatilistic term.

> Georg Hegel once wrote "Man's reflection is not a perfect state of being, but rather beeeeeeing, and in order for the dialectic to make phone calls during the low rate period, it must be understood that...

Now that I've got that off my chest — both my chests — I'd like to move on to something else. No, I think I'll keep talking about what I was talking about.

People who only argue one side of a question are narrowminded, and usually don't have beards. They make a "choice" to "argue" one side of a "question."

As long as I'm having a good time pressing the "key of my typewriter, I'd like to quote Hegel again: "People who cannot see the dichotomy of everyday questions cannot understand why people in bookstores pass the philosophy sections and go directly to the sections on sex books. Did you see The Joy of Sex? Ho Boy! To hell with this rationalist and empricist stuff. Check out page 46."

This raises an interesting question that actually has more than just two sides. I could write all day. Was Hegel an empiricist, a rationalist, or a closet romantic, or what? It seems pretty obvious to me that he is all of these, and none of them. It would take me days to argue just one side of that perplexing question, and most of you wouldn't understand, anyway. Why waste my time. But I continue to.

Sing along with the SGA

By ADAM HADEM

If music hath charms to sooth the savage breast, then maybe these songs will calm down some of the more rabid SGA politicians. At any rate, these songs are dedicated to the SGA.

POWER PLAYS

[to the tune of "My Bonnie Lies Over the Ocean"]
Two candidates ran as dictators,
The others are all second raters
And most students don't give a fuck.
CHORUS: Power plays, power plays,
the SGA power is playing with you
Power plays, power plays,
Why don't they go find someone new?
We've heard there is lots of corruption
We've heard there are wheels within wheels
We're not going to vote for deception
Or rubberstamp their backroom deals.
[CHORUS]
Well, Birmingham's paid by the project
And Tyson by the BOG
So why would we vote for the prospect
Of more BOG-SOP.

[CHORUS]
The candidates at the convention
Say they'll fix SGA, never fear
The first place to put their attention
Are the places they've worked the past year.

[CHORUS]
They say they are new and fresh faces
But that doesn't square with the facts
It's just the same SGA races

[CHORUS]

WONDERFUL WORLD

[This one should be sung by the candidates, to the tune of "What a Wonderful World it Would Be"]
Don't know much about democracy
Just know how to raise the student fee
Don't know much about leadership
And I'm kind of on a power trip
But I want to vote for me
And if I get a majority
What a wonderful world it would be.
Don't know how to "Stop Amherst Towing"
Just know how to keep your fees on growing
Don't know much about the students out there
I don't know, and I don't care
But I know how to pick up my check
And if you'll only make me Chief Exec
What a wonderful world it would be.
And if you won't vote for me
I'll just go back to the BOG
I'll just go back to the SOP
There's no way you can get rid of me
So you might as well vote for me now
You'll be stuck with me anyhow
O what a wonderful world it will be.

Clip and save for Monday's convention.

Touchy feelie—O.K.?

Bob Feelia

"Me Tarzan, you Jane."

This kind of language just serves to demonstrate how oppressive male role-models can be.

I mean, I'm one of the guys, you know? Just last weekend I was watching the Kentucky-Arkansas basketball game on TV. I mean, really watching it — and suddenly I realized that TV is not healthy for children and other living things — I mean, it isn't nurturant, you know?

Reaching into the refrigerator for a cold frosty brought to mind my role-awareness training workshops. I mean, I really do want to be nurturant, I really do. Deep inside we all have needs, needs that are needed and needs that aren't needed — I like needs too, I really do, but you know, needs are so response-orientated and almost never effective.

To me the slam-dunk in basketball represents an inner task-goal struggle. Chances are you don't know what I mean by "inner task-goal struggle," but I do. HA HA.

Men must overcome these struggles by becoming more man-oriented through consciousness raising, or risk getting stuck in their role-models like so many helpless flies in the honey with wheat germ trap of oppression. Men need positive reinforcement, counter-assertiveness training, behavior modification training, and doormat training.

Boss Herby W. Tyson needs doormat training. But don't we all need it? Don't we all need to prove our faith in group dynamics taskforce seminars? Aren't we all struggling toward the goal of a society based on reflexivism and devoid of institutionalized classism? More questions that dribble, dribble, dribble in my mind like a basketball hurtling down the court of societal discriminatory oppression. And the drivel, drivel, drivel of those who have never had their sensitivity heightened at psychobabble seminars ...

And suddenly the rage and aggression just eats out your insides, like African driver ants pressing onward, onward through your body — nibbling at your spleen, munching on your liver, masticating your goonads. And finally your self-confidence just looks like a cross-section of Boss Herb's brain, almost hollow but with a tiny bit of dust rattling around to remind you of what might have been.

And you explode. You say, "It's a crazy world, it's a world masticating my goonads." You get up from your chair, and scream, "Fuck you, Curt Gowdy!! It is you who is masticating my goonads." And you shut off the TV and sign up for a crisis-awareness task session in your dorm.

Perhaps you don't know what a "crisis awareness task session" is. But I do. HA HA ...

470 die in Pierpont collapse

By DEE ZASTER
Collegian Stiff

At least 470 students died last night when Pierpont dorm crumbled to the ground. Disaster workers, from the office of Residential Remorse Management, are still clearing the rubble away, finding more bodies by the hour. It is the worst dorm accident in the history of the United States, the Guiness Book of World Records confirmed this morning, and it could get worse.

Director of the newly created disaster team from RRM, Robert Campbellow, stated they had been waiting for such a disaster, and because of their prepartion were able to provide enough stretchers, zip-up body bags, and coffee and doughnuts for the unfortunate victims.

Asked about the cause of the disaster and tremendous carnage, Campbellow cited poor building upkeep. "Every college in the country has a problem with deferred maintenance," Campbellow said.

Reaction to the diaster was widespread, with most people expressing shock that it did not happen sooner. Governor Dukakis could not be reached, but sources close to the Governor expressed relief the drug situation on campus will be alleviated.

The Student Organizing project this morning released a letter sent to the administration asking for rebates for the families of the disaster victims. Susan Birmingham, former SGA presidential candidate, said she thought it was only fair that parents should get their money back.

"Since they're not going to be matriculating any more, somebody should get the money," she said. Asked what he thought about the rebate scheme, Boss Herb W. Tyson said, "I don't know anything, I have to ask Henry Doyle."

Now that spring is here, the earth is full of living things. This is the first bee of the semester. He was found pollinating a consenting adult. (Staff photo by Charles Darwin)

'Fever' sequel leaves disco disease

By FRANK POPSADORE
Collegian Stiff

Columbia Studios today announced production has begun on the sequel to the smash-hit, Saturday Night Fever. The name of the new Columbia release is, The Disco Denomination. Tony Manero, now played by Happy Days' Ronnie Howard because of various contractual disagreements between Columbia and John Travolta, alledgedly receives the calling of the Lord, and decides to become a member of the clergy, picking up where his brother left off.

He creates his own cult of dancing cathedrals with bright lights and loud music. Manero becomes known worldwide as a new prophet among the people, but goes unnoticed by the officials of the church and is scoffed by the Pope himself, played by Fred MacMurray.

Manero's parish in the movis is a sight to be seen. The Easter Sunday extravaganza is truely a religious spectacle, a phenomenal display portrayed with such visual beauty and fluid movement by director Clint Eastwood, that it easily challenges movies in the ranks of The Ten Commandments and Ben Hur. Thousands of extras were lavishly costumed and assembled for filming at St. Peter's Basilica in Rome for this tumultuous event in motion picture history. These extras, led by Manero, proceeded in perfect fashion, to perform the Tango Hustle, then smoothly switching to the Downtown Hustle, to the Uptown, then a quick step of the Sons of Italy Hustle, back to the Peoria Hustle, a Polka Hustle, a Pete Rose Hustle, then winding it all up with the ancient Mesopotamian Hustle, usually seen only in mountainous regions o Burma, yet incredibly illustrated with tremendous precision on the wide screen.

The Bee Gee's do it again, this time with the accompaniment of the Mormon Tabernackle Choir. Some of the songs are, Saint Alive, More than a Reverend Mother, and a recently released hit single, climbing its way to the top of the charts, "How Deep is Your Collection Basket?"

While all of this was happening, Stephanie, still played by Katherine Lynn Gorney, is trying to lure Tony back to the life he once led as the provocative king of the 2001 disco. Tony weakens some, but realizing his responsibility to the church, he shoots her, and throws her off the Brooklyn Bridge. But he is spotted by a taxicab driver, played by Dr. Henry Kissinger in his first major motion picture role.

Your Birthday

FRIDAY, MARCH 31
Born today, you are young. Very, very young. In fact, you're too young to be able to read this horoscope. Why, then, so I write this tripe? I'll tell you why. Money. I love the stuff. I worship money...I caress money...I fondle money...I molest money. Why, just this past week I had a date with a Virgo ten dollar bill, and let me tell you, everything they say about Virgos is absolutely true. Beautiful, vivacious, alluring. It even let me look up its serial number.

During your first few years you will tend to sleep a great deal. You will also become a chronic bedwetter, a problem that will plague you until your 34th birthday, when your bed will disolve, leaving you a chronic floorwetter.

You will be born blind, without teeth, and totally bald. In short, you will be a basket case.

Also born on this date: Buddy Rich, drummer; Donald Sagretti, Plumber; Bob Dylan, strummer; Meldrim Thomson, a real bummer.

To see what ~~is in~~ store for you tomorrow, find your birthday, tell your friends, and they'll send you presents. See what you've been missing?

Veteran Smith hits jump shot for IM record

By STEVE BUCKEYS
Collegian Staff

Famed UMass hoop star and collegian sports columnist Russ Smith made history last night as he became the first intramural basketball player in the history of the school to surpass the magic 20,000 point barrier.

Smith scored 18 points in last night's tilt at Boyden against Phi Mu Delta as the Brown Bombers rolled to a 71-60 victory. The 20,000th point came on a jump shot early in the second half.

"I'm gald to get it over with," said an excited Smith after the game. "I was getting closer and closer and now that its over I think I'll be better able to concentrate on my game."

Smith, a 17-year intramural veteran, entered UMass in 1961 after an impressive eight year intramural career at Rockland High School.

He had his best seasons from 1165 and 1968 when he teamed up with former UMass football star Greg landry to form one of the best intramural backcourts in the school's history.

"Greg was a better football player than a basketball player," Smith once recalled of the current Detroit Lions signal caller. "He was a great teammate, though."

Another former teammate, Jose' Ferreirra, lauded Smith.

"I'm reaaly proud of Smitty," said Ferreirra. "I don't think that the fans are really aware of just how good he is. Sure, they know that he scored the 20,000, but not many fans know that he scored a lot more than that by playing for otter intramural teams under false names."

Smith continues to avoid reporters' quesions as to when the 43-year-old player might retire.

"All I can say," Smith has told the press, "is that I'll play until I graduate."

Smith currently has 63 credits.

Boyden intramural officials plan on placing the basketball Smith used to score his 20,000th point in the UMass Intramural Hall of Fame, located in the mens' room at Poor Richards.

Also a noted journalist, Smith joined the Collegian sports staff in 1968. Smith has won many awards for his column, more notably his "Why Dr. J. Will Never Make It" piece, written in 1971.

Smith has also been honored for his columns on why Maine should be dropped from the UMass basketball schedule because they are not good competition, his piece entitled "McKay will Build a Winner in Tampa Bay", and his famous 1974 expose' which revealed that a UMass football player was the illegitimate son of Yogi Berra, a New York Yankees coach.

The immortal Russ Smith goes up for the "shot heard round Boyden," sinking his 20,000 career points on the intramural circuit. Smith also set a record for number of games played, number of minutes played, number of desperation shots heaved from half-court and number of hot dogs regurgitated. (Staff photo by Julius Erving)

Goldfarb decisions Schwartz

LAS VEGAS [API] — Attorneys for World Boxing Association heavyweight champion Leon Spinks and World Boxing Commission heavyweight champion Ken Norton squared off in a scheduled twelve juror trial at Ceasar's Palace last night. Both barristers, Murray Schwartz for Spinks and Saul Goldfarb for Norton, came out slinging, but it was Goldfarb's final flurry at the bell of the final juror that gained Norton the 5-4-3 split decision that makes him undisputed heavyweight champion of the world.

JUROR 1 — Both attorneys circle around the court, lining up the judge. Schwartz delivers a straight right de facto appeal asserting Spink's claim to the title was won through direct pugilistic endeavor. Goldfarb counters with a series of jabs at Spink's courage, calling the WBA champ a "scaredy cat" for failing to engage Norton, the number-one challenger, in the ring of battle. The attorneys clinch. Schwartz proposes to show film of fifteenth round of Ali-Spinks fight. SCHWARTZ'S JUROR.

JUROR 2 — Schwartz delivers a series of short rhetorical inquiries concerning the identity of the last fighter to beat Norton and Goldfarb falls heavily to the bench. The judge administers the eight-count and motions Schwartz to a neutral table. Goldfarb is groggy, but manages to avoid further punishment by pleading the fifth amendment. SCHWARTZ'S JUROR.

JUROR 3 — Goldfarb runs to the middle of the court and throws a wild left rumor purporting corrupt dealings in the handling of Spinks finances, which connects. Schwartz backs off. Goldfarb lands a quick accusation of Spinks prior knowledge concerning the above accusation. Schwartz asks for a short recess. GOLDFARB'S JUROR.

JUROR 4 — Goldfarb lets fly an insidious indecision on Spinks' amateur status at the time of the 1976 Olympic Games which Schwartz easily [illegible]. Schwartz calls Norton a pretender who never won a title bout in his life. Goldfarb backs off, but throws in a reminder that Norton once broke Muhammed Ali's jaw. JUROR EVEN.

JUROR 5 — Attorney's clinch. A Goldfarb hook catches Schwartz unawares and Spinks' mouthpiece goes flying out of the courtroom when his knowledge of boxing is questioned. The judge overrules the query holding that, "It is not pertinent to know that Floyd Patterson defeated Ingemar Johannsen to regain his title." JUROR EVEN.

JUROR 6 — Goldfarb sends Schwartz reeling upon contending that Norton is a better actor than Spinks. After Schwartz's showing of the first reel of "Mandingo," Goldfarb withdraws his contention. Schwartz peppers Goldfarb with a series of loaded questions and innuendos relating to Norton's manhood in the second reel. SCHWARTZ'S JUROR

JUROR 7 — Schwartz falls back into his table for a short conversation with his client and decides to play rope-a-dope, accusing Norton of possession of "over an ounce" of marijuana. Goldfarb has Norton empty his pockets, revealing a pocket-sized bible autographed by George Foreman. Schwartz is given a standing eight-count. GOLDFARB'S JUROR.

JUROR 8 — Schwartz appears to be tiring. He lands a fact that the Young-Norton fight was very close that has no steam behind it. Goldfarb scores well with a jab at Spinks inexperience and a combination of breach of contract and misrepresentation. GOLDFARB'S ROUND.

JUROR 9 — Goldfarb delivers a series of body punches, calling Spinks both toothless and ugly. Schwartz objects and the judge decides the accusations are low blows. Schwartz approaches the bench and asks the Goldfarb be disqualified. The judge declines and Goldfarb punishes Schwartz another crack about Spinks' fear of fighting. A cut has developed over Schwartz's left eye. JUROR EVEN.

JUROR 10 — Schwartz surprises Goldfarb with a short dissertation on the need for a single champion to be decided within the sport. He snaps back Goldfarb's head by asserting that the title be awarded to the man supported by the WBA — the larger of the two governing bodies. Goldfarb reaches back and delivers a sharp reminder of the Frazier-Ellis fight, before which Frazier was the champ of the smaller rulemakers. SCHWARTZ'S JUROR.

JUROR 11 — Goldfarb is victimized by a solid left uppercut of pleas by Schwartz not to rule against an ex-Marine. Goldfarb tries to dance, but his legs are rubbery. Schwartz moves in and demands to know why a great ex-champion like Ali shouldn't get a chance to win back his crown. Goldfarb lands a stunning roundhouse irony by asking Spinks to answer the question in his own words. GOLDFARB'S ROUND.

JUROR 12 — Schwartz loops a strong plea for fairness, reiterating his apprisal of Ali's New York unanimous decision over Norton, but Goldfarb projects a CBS videotape of the final two rounds of that fight and pounds away at the fact that fairness never had anything to do with boxing. The cut over Schwartz's eye has been reopened and it is bleeding profusely.

The trial is stopped so that the stenographer can have a look at the eye. The trial is allowed to continue. Goldfarb rocks Schwartz at the bell, demanding Spinks "put up or shut up." GOLDFARB'S ROUND.

Violence mars wrestling debut

By JORMA GLITTER
Virulent Staff

Squeals of delight by professional wrestling fans at Curry Hicks Cage turned to cries of horror last night after Cleavon "American Express" Jones suffered an apparent attack of starch deprivation and castrated his opponent with repeated blows from a timekeeper's hammer.

Jones' opponent, Mishubu "Wankel" Rotary, was listed in critical condition at the University Health Center last night.

Following the brief but vicious assault a sellout crowd of nearly 6,000 college students watched in amazement, as A.E. Jones was corralled by officers from the Department of Public Safety and led from the bloodpstained ring, a hideous smile frozen on his face.

Ironically, the Wenkel blood-letting was hinted at moments before when two wrestlers in the previous contest engaged in a Roman Spectacle (see photo this page).

The contestants, Tony "The Logical Positivist" Sperduto" and "Brother Power," had wrestled through eight minutes of a ten-minute-limit match when Power stopped grappling, stomped on Sperduto's head, killing him instantly. The match soon degenerated into a wild free-for-all in which 16 University students had to be treated for multiple mat-burns. Power then stomped on Sperduto's lifeless body with repeated smashes from his boots and stalked out of the ring. No winner was declared.

Speaking on the emasculation after the Rotary-Jones bout, Dr. Bundini Washington, Jones' trainer and spiritual adviser, said Jones' "pecadillo" was probably triggered by an acute attack of melonapilia, a hereditary disease that causes an uncontrollable craving for starch in some individuals.

"S'not his fault," Washington said, "Disease here is the kind of thing that funk up your genes and shit."

Eyewitnesses said Jones had suffered a tremendous thrashing in the opening minutes of the "Granby Steel Cage Death Match" when he leaped from the ring, wrestled the bronze hammer from referee Lou Supa and jumped back onto the mat.

Jones then allegedly snapped the waistband from Wankel's Red and White Everlast Trunks, and with a cry of "Mofo, mofo, mofo! Where the Argo at?" proceeded to slam the 12 ounce hammer into his opponent's pelvic area several dozen times.

Jones will be arraigned in Hampshire County Superior Court before Judge Alvertus Morass today.

College student David Rogers, a photographer from the student newspaper The Massachusetts Gaily Legion said he was "appalled by the tackiness" of the incident.

"I thimply ... er ... simply could not believe the savage fury with which this deed was committeed. Oh, yuck! And the worst part of it was the little blood trickles clashed so with Wanger's (sic) orange shorts. Why, it was the most repulsive thing I've ever seen in my life," Rogers said.

The event was the third match in a 12 bout card, and represented the first time in the history of the university that professional wrestling had been permitted in campus. Campus officials say the sport probably will not be allowed back on campus until "sometime after repairs are completed in the Campus Center Roof."

Mishubu "Wankel" Rotary clutches forlornly at his badly fractured groin and longs for the happy, carefree days when he didn't have to worry about suffering internal bleeding. After the match, Rotary was quoted as saying of his opponent, Cleavon "American Express" Jones, "Umbghbl." (Staff photo by Jock Strappe)

A's moving to Amherst

By BOWIE KUHN
Collegian Staff

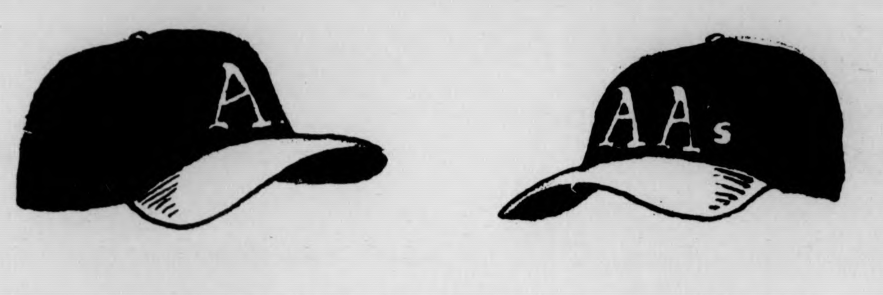
The controversial owner of the Oakland A's, Charles O. Finley, announced yesterday that he was moving his ballclub to Amherst for the 1978 baseball season.

In a surprising press conference held on the water-logged Southwest fields, Finley gave his reasons for the move. "Amherst will be major league someday," he said. "Oakland was nothing before I moved the A's there. What I did for Oakland, I'll do for Amherst." Finley denied reports that his original A's-to Denver plan fell through because some players were afraid of possible nosebleeds.

The Amherst A's are scheduled to open their season in Anaheim on April 7. They make their home debut on April 10th against the Seattle Mariners.

The Boston Red Sox will play the A's at Amherst June 5 and 6. "It's great," Finley said, "Amherst and Boston are natural rivals."

It was also announced by A's public relations persons that the team will play in Earl Lorden Field. When told that Lorden Field does not have the capacity of a major league park, Finley unveiled his plan for massive renovation of the ballpark. The construction firm of McKee-Burger-Mansuedo is to begin working on transforming Lorden Field into a multi-million dollar super-sports arena. An official at MBM said that they hoped to have work completed by April, 2078.



"Of course the Field will have to be renamed," Finley said. Charlie O did not disclose the new name, but high sources in the A's confirmed that it was "Bowie Kuhn Memorial Stadium." It was also confirmed that Finley himself decided upon that name when he learned that the ballpark was downwind of the barns and the Physical Plant.

Player reaction was generally favorable to the move. Catcher Manny Sanguillen commented, through an interpreter: "I like, ees good; I like, ees very good." Shortstop Rob Picciollo was a bit more reserved: "I'm optimistic, but realistic. I think I'll definitely be improved, but if I hit like I did last year, I can always deliver hot Bell's pizza for a living."

Manager Bobby Winkles observed, "The opportunities here are infinite. I mean, there must be at least twenty choice spots in and around Amherst where we can beg for money on our days off."

Former A's players also had interesting reactions. Millionaire Reggie Jackson asked, "Do they sell Reggie Bars in Amherst?" Recently traded pitcher Vida Blue said, "I'm glad I got traded before Finley moved the franchise. I wouldn't like Amherst. You see, I like to drink. San Francisco is the town for me. Not enough bars in Amherst." However, Joe Rudi, the outfielder who helped the A's to three consecutive championships noted, "I'd like to play in Amherst, sure. Maybe it's not well known, but I have this thing about college girls. There's just not enough action in Anaheim."

Local reaction was also enthusiastic. UMass baseball coach Dick Berquist has already indicated his willingness to come out of retirement to serve as designated hitter for the A's. Frank McInerny, the Grand Duke of Athletics at UMass is considered a candidate for manager of the A's minor league club in Hadley.

The Amherst A's will have a UMass player on their roster on Opening Day. Collegian sports columnist Russ Smith and his A's hat will start in right field.

Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery also gave his view of the move: "As you know I was very disappointed when Marvin (Davis – Oil Trillionaire) failed to obtain the franchise. We International Oil Barons stick by each other." Other Administration chiefs, such as Boss Herb W. Tyson, could not be reached for comment.

A large stumbling block preventing Finley from moving to Amherst years earlier was his three hundred year, iron-clad, contract with the Oakland Coliseum. When asked how he got out of the contract, Finley had no comment, but three men identified only as Luigi, Vito, and Jon could be heard to say, "Eeeeeyyyyy ... "

In a related item, campus police noted the disappearance of the head of one of the horses in the nearby barn.

The A's will play number of exhibition games at Kuhn Stadium between now and opening day. Today at 3 p.m. the Amherst team meets Barsolotti's, and on Sunday they play a doubleheader against St. Louis, Pittsburgh and Detroit. Admission is $1, or $1.50 with a UMass ID.

Charlie O, the man who brought such innovations as pet mules, green uniforms, and former Red Sox' with fake sore shoulders doesn't intend to stop now. "We plan 'Murder Day', possibly to coincide with finals at UMass. It's especially designed to pander to the bloodthirsty instincts of psycopathic maniacs, which most students become during finals. Also, we plan a "Redneck Day", in which all persons from south of Southwest are admitted free. We'll have Billy Carter, Dixie Beer, and lots of other things done in bad taste."

There is a rumor that Commissioner of Baseball Bowie Kuhn may veto the whole deal. He has urged the then Oakland Club to work out a trade between Amherst and Oakland that "would not upset the competitive balance of baseball." Town officials are considering the possibility of sending the Drake and a seedy bar to be named later to Oakland as compensation.

Hoop trio comes to UM as dream turns real

By I.M. DREAMEN
Collegian Staff

It all seems like a dream...

"Starting at forward for UMass, from Philadelphia, Pa., Eugene Banks, also at forward out of New York City, Albert King and at guard from East Lansing, Mich., Earvin Johnson."

It may seem like a dream, but it's real. Just when it appeared that the loss of Alex Eldridge, Mike Pyatt, Derrick Claiborne, and Chuck Steveskey had left the Minutemen in a never-ending state of doom, the man high above worked a miracle on the UMass hoopmen.

Yes, it's real. Albert King, Eugene Banks, and Earvin Johnson are transferring to the University of Massachusetts.

Why on earth would these collegiate greats make tracks for the rural setting of UM?

"If you played for Lefty Driesell you'd know why I wanted to leave," said King. "The man's got a worse disposition than my brother Bernard. Should have listened to him in the first place and gone to Tennessee; but at least I'm headed to a place with a good coach, Jack Leaman."

Eugene Banks had other reasons for coming here.

"Broads. I hear you got some fine women up at your school. All the girls down here look like they should be doing Alpo commercials."

Earvin Johnson:

"I felt that I had to escape from the pressure placed on me because I was a local high school star. UMass offered me a means of escape — a new Corvette."

There were differing opinions by some of the present Minutemen.

Jay Stewart: "I'm looking forward to playing with these guys. Winning will be a cinch."

Guard Tom Witkos was nought as excited as Stewart. Since the news of Johnson's arrival, Witkos has been heard singing, "And now the end is near and so I face the final curtain. With Earvin Johnson coming, I'll ride the bench, of that I'm certain..."

UMass athletic director Frank McInerney was ecstatic about the news of the three players transferring here.

"I think it's great. This will give me a good excuse for charging students to come to see the games. In turn, this will give me the money to start a very noteworthy project. The Frank McInerney Retirement Fund."

I can hardly wait for the day when Minuteman basketball returns.

Lately Clafrin

Doyle, Allen impress

Covering the spring training beat, I have found that the 20 major league camps are now in the process of bringing their rosters down to size and some big names will soon be changing uniforms.

My sources tell me that the Oakland-Denver A's will be making a number of cuts in a day or two, but veteran slugger Dick Allen will have no problem making the team. Allen, off to a fantastic spring batting surge is expected to be the A's DH this season.

Don't look for any big names to come under the axe in Winter Haven as the Red Sox are prepared to make another run at the Yankees with generally the same lineup you saw in '77. Trade rumors abounded concerning the second base situation, but it is apparent to me that the Bosox are prepared to stick with clutch performer Denny Doyle.

Yes, baseball is becoming a business, as I'm afraid that those rumors surrounding a possible move of the Brooklyn Dodgers to Los Angeles may be true. I've also heard that Willie Mays and the New York Giants may be headed to San Francisco, but I haven't seen Horace Stoneham around to question him...

The Giants, incidentally, had been toying with the idea of putting Mays at first this season but rookie Willie McCovey has impressed with his bat.

Meanwhile, down at Lakeland, Tigers manager Mayo Smith is pleased with the comeback of Mark Fidrych and expects him to be his opening-day hurler. Boy, that rotation of Fidrych, McLain, and Lolich could be the best in baseball this season ...Now if Ray Culp and Gary Peters could only come around for the Sox.

I've heard stories of strike in the different camps, which may hurt the game. Wouldn't it be something if the players did strike and the opening of the season had to be delayed a few weeks?

Incidentally, Fenway Park is still under snow, but GM Dick O'Connell promises that the park will be in tip-top condition when Governor Sargent throws out the first ball.

Let's hope that Russ Gibson doesn't drop it...

Well, baseball isn't the only sport in town as the Celtics are currently preparing for the upcoming NBA playoffs. Pray for just one more good playoff season by Bill Russell and Sam Jones.

The Bruins may be headed for the playoffs next year, but this year is doubtful. That Lou Angotti to Chicago trade is more than just hot air, friends. The Blackhawks may be dangling Phil Esposito...

Espo in a Boston uniform? Well, he may not be capable of scoring a lot of goals, his forte being his ability to feed the puck to high scorers such as Bobby Hull, but his arrival in Boston would at least be a step in the right direction.

Will this be Gordie Howe's last season? The scoop I have has it that the 43-year-old winger may be calling it quits at season's end. In my opinion, the man deserves a rest. He should be taking it easy, spending time with his wife and two young children, Mark and Marty.

Space Polka

The Next Big Thing?

By Bro Schvest

As we all know, American music is nothing more than the historical hybridization of various forms and styles within the commercial market of culture. As we also know, space music has been around for a long time but only recently has shown its capabilities of merging with other, more ethnic styles, notably polka music. This interview was conducted with Pierogi Brzezinski, virtuoso accordianist and leader of the Polskie Polkanauts, a New Britain, Connecticut based "space-polka" band in an attempt to find out the answer to the question: Is space-polka the next big thing?

Stink: Why did you choose the accordian?

Pierogi: I was made to play it because as a youth I had polio and wasn't of much good to the folks around the village.

Stink: Do you like to play it?

Pierogi: Play what?

Stink: The accordian ...

Pierogi: Sure.

Stink: Why?

Pierogi: Because it's just about the only thing I know how to do.

Stink: What do the rest of the guys in the band play?

Reed Lead Rod Erode: Rude Road Rotten Ride

By Allan Divan

This was supposed to be an in-depth review of the new Lou Reed LP. However, I must've misplaced the album because right now I have absolutely no idea just where it could be. I've searched high (whew, was I high!), I've searched low, but still no sign of it.

Maybe I loaned it out to Cindy last night — I recollect her saying that she wanted something of mine in the worst way. Maybe I rolled a few too many joints over it and flipped it into the washing machine. Maybe I spilled too much Mad Dog on it and hurled it into the dryer to dry off. I honestly can't remember what went on here last night. Did we play moonlight frisbee with it? Mayhaps. Who knows? Who cares? I'll look for it again tomorrow, or whenever it is that my head stops pounding.

Anyhow, if you think like I do (and you certainly should, or else you're one sick puppy), then you're sure to agree that Lou Reed really knows how to make music that's something to sing about! He was the original punk rocker, and if you don't believe me don't believe me when I say it, just ask my best friend, Charlie. Yup, that's him over there in the corner, nodding his head in total agreement.

I remember back a few summers ago when Mary Beth and I (we've since broken up) literally bumped into Lou down at CBGB's. I'll never forget that evening. We had ventured there to catch New York City's hottest underground act, The Worms (we dug 'em). Well, believe it or not, Lou seemed just like a real person. He even let us buy him a Black Russian. What a man! Not that I intend to imply that Lou Reed is the biggest thing since the dinosaur, but Lou Reed has just got to be the biggest thing since the dinosaur. So how could he possibly make an album which isn't great? I don't have to waste my time listening to it in order to tell you that it's got to be a winner. Jump on it now before it jumps on you.

Incidental Plug: Be sure to tune in Charlie's Show, "The Vinyl Punkie," over radio station WIMP. He's on during prime drive time — 2-6 a.m. Monday morning. The theme of this week's show will be "barfing," and Charlie has promised to spin such classics as "My Barf Is Worse Than My Bite," "To Know Him Is To Barf With Him," "I Wanna Hold Your Barf Bag" and "I'm Gonna Barf Until The Cows Come Home." Definitely a must for all true punks.

And, last but certainly not least, this week's "Pin-up" award goes out to good pal and lead guitarist in my excellent band, the Six Pestols, Glueboy McBelch. Appearing on stage last Saturday night with thirty freckled safety pins firmly embedded in the fret-board of his nine-dollar Les Paul, ol' Glueboy actually played our entire seven-minute set (complete with three encores) with his axe in the aforementioned state of altered consciousness. It was absolutely the event of the week when he tore into his original composition, "God Save The Bean." I hope you all enjoyed it as much as I did.

So that's about it for now. Keep them cards and letters ...

Radical Literature Consumers Unite

Consumers of the various and sundry radical newspapers available in the valley have announced the formation of a consumers union to deal with the increasingly low quality of revolutionary and radical literature being sold today and have announced a benefit pamphlet-newspaper sale to kick off their spring organizational drive. It is hoped by the organizers of the R.L.C.U. that enough readers of the Workers Vanguard, The Militant, The Guardian, Challenge-Desafio, The Worker, and Revolutionary Communist Youth can be contacted to make the drive a success. Those interested are encouraged to contact Comrade Pavel Korchagin, c-o Red Star Romance, Allover, Mass. Protest poor literature quality nowski! oops ...

Boston: America's Underpants

Lots of candid photographs and lots of egocentric writing combine to produce a logbook of Bob Dylan's winter '75 New England tour which is no more than mediocre. Traveling along with Dylan and the Rolling Thunder Review through such places as Falmouth, Plymouth, Lowell, Springfield, Providence, New Haven, Danbury, Foxboro, Boston and Bangor, Sam Shepard (yes, the same Sam Shepard who has written quite a few plays) is at all times heavy in his bombastic put-downs of New England — he even goes so far as to call Boston "the underpants of the nation." He yearns for the sun and fun of his beloved Southern California, but what did he honestly expect to find in New England during mid-winter?

Shepard's behind the scenes reporting of what went on at various times throughout the tour is rather interesting in spots. However, too much of it is in the "So then Bobby turned 'round to me and said, 'How 'bout lightin' another joint, Sammy' " vein to be really effective. Honestly, who cares? What we'd really appreciate is some down-to-earth literature on Dylan, Baez, McGuinn, Ronson and the rest, not this patchwork of prose which would probably be best appreciated by his old lady back in Malibu. It's nice to see these performers as real human beings with real human emotions, but Shepard spends too much time delving into tinane occurrences appreciated only by those who were there. Well, at least the book features some decent pics.

For this one, Sam Shepard was only writin' in the wind. He earns an "I guess you had to be there" C-.

Veteran Editor Founds Rag

Ricardo Comoemde, noted valley journalist (Avocado, Fresh Stink) has announced plans to start a new alternative weekly in the Pioneer Valley tentatively called, the Valley Advertising Vocation, a Freshly Inked Weekly Paper-digest. Scheduled to begin publication sometime next March, Comoemde hopes to run the first issue off as an insert in the March 31, 1979 issue of The Massachusetts Daily Collegian and then expand from there. Commenting on the appearance of the johnny-come-fortnightly paper, Comoemde stated flat-out that advertising space was for free. "Contributors, however, will have to pay. After all, they're selling themselves too, you know, don't you?" concluded the veteran editor and consultant.

All-Male Cast Delights Men's Center

An all-male cast delighted the Slidevan Men's Center last night in what appears to be the center's most successful recruitment campaign ever. Four strapping young healthy males were recruited to work on their sexism and learn to better re-define their sexuality. "No children for us, bub!" asserted Gyp LaMulyacca, coordinator of the events, "We're too far gone for that!"

Keeping in line with the center's anti-sexism stand, men were allowed to act like women and compare lives and other things from new and sometimes startling perspectives. "It has nothing to do with aggression," says Otto Stormgrupper, the club's fuhrer and ideological mastermind, "only the political manipulation of the social bonding of nice, tender young males."

Boss To Spew

Valley Avocado Publisher Edward J. Maybe will deliver a speech on "Ethics and Journalism" this week in Thompson Hall Auditorium at UMass. The public is invited to attend, and a stimulating question and answer period will follow.

Maybe's accomplishments are numerous, and other valley publications literally struggle to keep up with the standards of Maybe's Valley Avocado. The publication is widely acknowledged as a pinnacle of journalistic integrity, unmatched by any other newspaper in the area.

Maybe began his illustrious career at the Springfield Daily

Snooze, but left that paper to "start a quasi-alternative paper, and make lots of money," he tells us. Other valley editors have long regarded Mr. Maybe with feelings of envy. "Wish I was sleazy enough to rake in two million bucks by misleading the public," says Amherst editor Michael DeSniveling.

Maybe will discuss his tactful use of full page self promotional ads, his smear campaigns against the competition's "Back to School" efforts, and will explain why his payroll and freelancer checks often bounce and were at one time unacceptable at local banking establishments.

The Seventies Have Revived

By A. C. Dipstick

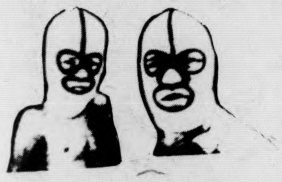
I know you think you've heard it all, you snotty little so-called media children. Awright, so you've been reversely enlightened to the depths of the Pork Pistols, Cuntcocks and Defo... well, this new rave crapola was only the tip of the popsicle.

The truest and newest extension of rock's devine purpose is the music of the sons of Syphilis. Besides being the ultimate musical answer to this decade's doldrums, they deserve your vote because they don't play any of those jiveass rockstar games.

While everybody from Elton Jagger to the Pork Pistols strives to handjob their signatures onto major label contracts (the Porks even leap-frogged from several major companies), the Sons prefer not to share their potential with any Nabobs, Prexys or NARM-stockholders.



They detest making the civilians pay for their records. For this reason they don't release any. Instead, their Larry Flynt-designed pic sleeves come empty. Naturally their loyal fans don't mind because the music of the people is in the air anyway; the record shops don't mind because there is never a re-ordering problem and of course no defects to send back. Everybody is happy. Gee.

All except those leisure-suited record execs who have reportedly posited contract bids as high as $3,000,000 per album (in Saudi currency).

But back in their A-framed '66 Ford Econoline, the Syphillis brothers (Joey, Jock & Judy) scratch the most relevant tunes of the post-suicide generation. Their most popular song to date is 'Rock & Roll Sorryshit', a track from their disc-less Rodeo Constantinople EP, which is a violent vein-ripping plea that our musical future be a bit less pretentious.

SIX PeSTOLS
Capital

On stage (oh, how they hate that term) they shun both glittered suits and torn Levis, preferring instead to perform raw. They feel they give more of themselves to the audience this way. Joey Syphillis, the singer, doesn't let his old bladder problem put the damper on any of their concerts. At the end of their grueling, detuned 45-hour shows, they lie down.

The Sons of Syphillis know what real music is all about. They recognize the difference between flattery and hype; I could write a far longer review but I'd lose their friendship forever if I did so. Because it's true. Rock is art and together they are the future, lodged rather delicately behind the crevice of desire. Keep your fuckin' dollars.

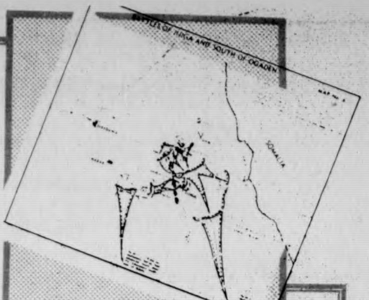
A Guide to Letters and Criticism: Mouthfart Belches



By Roger Mouthfart

In the past few weeks, I have been trying to educate my readers (if there are any left) and acquaint them with the current modes of thought in the wonderful world of film theory. Rather than reviewing films in my own personal approach and style, I have been applying various popular film theories to new films and analyzing them as the original theorist would have. Unfortunately, I have been receiving some rather nasty letters from many readers. I don't understand and still can't. Don't you people understand that I am a chic, young film critic on the rise? I have to demonstrate my intellectual ability by writing these long-winded theoretical articles, because I'd love to be a full time critic for Sight and Sound some day and they won't hire any one who doesn't understand the likes of Andrew Sarris, Christian Metz, Sergei Eisenstein, Andre Bazin or Rudolf Arnheim. Besides, I get paid by the column inch. So now that you know my predicament from a uralist structuralist perspective' please, no more of these nasty letters, they are rude, read them yourself.

Roger,

I don't know how I can write in the same paper with such a pompous wimp who has his head stuck up his ass 23 hours out of the day. Somebody ought to cold conk you with a lead pipe and put you out of your misery.

love,
Tom Givem

Dear Mr. Mouthfart,

Eat shit, I couldn't understand a goddam word you were saying in that article abou Structuralism.

John Berge

Roger,

I would have loved to have read you article applying Eisenstein's theory montage to Deep Throat, but I couldn understand it. Why, in your quest f authenticity, did you have to write it Russian? Could you please print a tran lation for us peasants.

Confuse
Lip Dimekin

Roger dear,

Where did I go wrong? You should hav worked for Sears and Roebuck like you father. Come home, Mable wants to see yo again. She's such a nice clean girl.

disenchanted, but I still love yo
Mumse

There's the sample of the 84 letters I hav received to date. I would have publishe more but the others were in too poor of tast I am humbled by the magnitude of mail an pledge to reach a wider readership in m next article entitled "A Guide to Mental an Physical Masturbation and Film". Oh on more thing, Thank you to the sender of th box of apples. I appreciated this kin gesture; my girlfriend ate the one with th razor blades.

POLKA

Pierogi: Well, you know, we got a bass, drums, a little piano. Got a couple of horns too, you know. Expensive. Most of the guys like to play cards though ...

Stink: When did you come to this country?

Pierogi: Oh, I'd say about 50 years ago.

Stink: Why did you come to this country?

Pierogi: Mainly to play Radio City Music Hall in New York City. You know, it was getting kind of boring sitting around all day playing simple peasants' tunes while all the real people were off working hard in the fields. I wanted respect and to become famous so real people could respect me and say, "Say, there goes Piggy; he's a regular guy!" I just got tired of taking that kind of shit from those fucking sons of bitches.

Stink: Where did you get the idea for the name of your band?

Pierogi: What, the Polskie Polkanauts?

Stink: Yes ...

Pierogi: Well, ever since the war, the Germans have had a monopoly on ethnic space privilege and orientation. You know, Werner von Braun, Willie Ley, and all that jazz. You know, "der deutschen obermensch mit der rokket" in space. Well, my mission is to take polka to the stars. We now have a powerful lobby in Washington and by 1982 we should have an accordian player in orbit playing all the world beautiful, beautiful polka music from our wonderful Skylab in orbit!

Stink: That would also do a lot to destroy the myth that Polish people couldn't travel in space, wouldn't it?

Pierogi: Exactly. What else is that it would finally make all Polish jokes obsolete. Meaningless from now on. Polish would be in, like "Star Wars." No more jokes. Respect at last. Who could make fun of Polish in space?

Stink: On your last album, "Accordian Music From Around the World," you demonstrate not only your market potentiality with "Disco Polka, Part 1 and Part 2," but your knowledge of other cultures in "Bouzoukee Pork Butt Barrel Polka," and the eastern-flavored "Pranayamic Polka House Party." My favorite is "The Pancho Villa Polka." Where do you get your inspiration and ideas for such exciting music?

Pierogi: From watching late night TV.

Stink: Really?

Pierogi: Sure. You wouldn't believe the ideas that you could get from just topping off an old movie or two with an hour of Tom Snyder every night. Really, it's miraculous. You know, ever since I gave up beer three years ago, I've become an insomniac and now I can't do anything else but stay up late and watch TV and play my accordian.

Stink: If you had it to do all over again, would you do it any differently?

Pierogi: Sure. Wouldn't you? After all, this is a pretty shitty life, you know, staying up late every night watching TV and playing my accordian. What do you think I am, an idiot? If I could do it over again, I'd probably open up a sawmill and make lumber or something useful, like sawdust for butchers' floors.

Stink: Well, I guess I should have used my head. What are the prospects for the next generation of polka players? Can you give us an idea?

Pierogi: Well, aside from all the rumblings of the urban "punk-polka" crowd, it looks pretty good. As I said, Bogden Nozewski will probably bring his accordian with him into orbit in a few years and just today, a major motion picture studio has asked me to do a cameo in "The Frankie Yankovic Story," a film about the greatest polka party leader of all time. It looks pretty good to me. and, of course, Polish fashions and lifestyles are starting to catch on now with students. In fact, it is even hard now to distinguish between imitation American and authentic Polish styles because of the assimilation and commercialization that takes place.

Stink: Thank you very much, "pan." One last question: Do you miss your homeland?

Pierogi: Do you miss your mama?

Popcorn makes cinema substantial

by LIP DIMEKING

Everytime I go to the movies, particularly Hollywood movies, I almost always hate the film. Garbage, rotgut, decadent, studip, silly, trite, I can't begin to explain how awful the Hollywood dream machine is. There's only one reason why I go to the movies anymore; I love hot buttered popcorn.

There's actually a difference in popcorn quality as one goes from theater to theater and, you'd better believe it, movie to movie. Being an expert of impeccable and untouchable opinion when it comes to judging both popcorn and the cinema, I'd have to say that the movie industry is doing a better job at making popcorn than films. The butter pop fare has been great lately, and at times, I've been so blissed out on the theatres fabulous food feast, even I have been fooled into liking a current movie or two. Take Semi-Tough for instance. Some of the best popcorn that I've ever had. I was in such munch-out heaven that I forgc to watch the film, but when it came time t write the review my taste buds wer screaming, "you had a great time, it wa great". Popcorn makes the movies valuable cultural experience, maybe if mor people turn on to it we could become mor caring, say, peanut butter, oregano chocolate, or bubble gum flavored popcorn. Eat up.

So now you know how I form opinions about films, given the corrupt unimaginative industry which is a slave to profits, I have to rely on the quality of popcorn to make my movie going enjoyable. Let's face it the movies wallow in and perpetuate the sick, non-thinking society which you are part of and surrounds me. It's not easy being a righteous martyr who knows more than all of you ignoramouses. You know, sometimes I think I should be king.

Blowe The Salt takes its name from the ridiculous way in which the Herlihy clan of Moose Junction, Canada would confer upon itself the blessings of the land. Sprinkling rock salt in their trousers, they would let the wind blow it out during the day's hunt, hence they waited for the wind to "blowe the salt."

In an age where such wind often comes from mouths, the staff of this paper expects the talk it generates to blow the salt right out of oue proverbial shorts.

Space Polka
The Next Big Thing?

By Bro Schvest

As we all know, American music is nothing more than the historical hybridization of various forms and styles within the commercial m-rket of culture. As we also know, space music has been around for a long time but only recently has shown its capabilities of merging with other, more ethnic styles, notably polka music. This interview was conducted with Pierogi Brzezinski, virtuoso accordianist and leader of the Polskie Polkanauts, a New Britain, Connecticut based "space-polka" band in an attempt to find out the answer to the question: Is space-polka the next big thing?

Stink: Why did you choose the accordian?

Pierogi: I was made to play it because as a youth I had polio and wasn't of much good to the folks around the village.

Stink: Do you like to play it?

Pierogi: Play what?

Stink: The accordian ...

Pierogi: Sure.

Stink: Why?

Pierogi: Because it's just about the only thing I know how to do.

Stink: What do the rest of the guys in the band play?

Reed Lead Rod Erode: Rude Road Rotten Ride

By Allan Divan

This was supposed to be an in-depth review of the new Lou Reed LP. However, I must've misplaced the album because right now I have absolutely no idea just where it could be. I've searched high (whew, was I high!). I've searched low, but still no sign of it.

Maybe I loaned it out to Cindy last night. I recollect her saying that she wanted something of mine in the worst way. Maybe I rolled a few too many joints over it and flipped it into the washing machine. Maybe I spilled too much Mad Dog on it and hurled it into the dryer to dry off. I honestly can't remember what went on here last night. Did we play moonlight frisbee with it? Mayhaps. Who knows? Who cares? I'll look for it again tomorrow, or whenever it is that my head stops pounding.

Anyhow, if you think like I do (and you certainly should, or else you're one sick puppy), then you're sure to agree that Lou Reed really knows how to make music that's something to sing about! He was the original punk rocker, and if you don't believe me

Phony newspapers like this appear on campus once every year. Against the objection of Edgar Colon, they continue year after year.

by S. KEVIN PAYNE

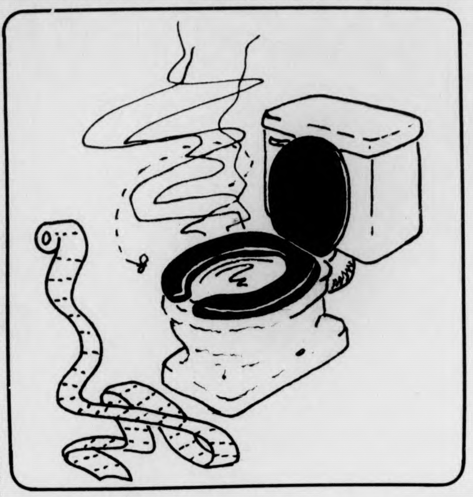
A rash of phony newspapers glibly titled "Fresh Stink" are being circulated on this campus today in what appears to be the latest attempt to further confuse, disgust, and stupify the student population of UMass. Inserted mysteriously within the pages of The Colligian and circulated through the various Collegian dump-off zones, the phony paper, complete with unlikely listings, lewd letters, and misleading reviews, previews, and interviews has thus far been connected with much confusion and discussion among many on campus including the faculty and battling student senators and their proxies.

Spokesmen and women of the Collegian claim not to have known about the paper and claim that if they did, they would know about it. Most insiders agree that if they knew about it, they would remember and in all liklihood, be able to say whether or not they knew anything about it or not. In fact, sources within the Collegian itself have revealed that if anyone connected with the paper had had anything at all to do with the phony paper, someone would know about it. Since no one knows anything about it, it either never happened or no one at the Collegian knows about it. Most students around campus as well are puzzled by "Fresh Stink's" appearance and don't know where it came from. Neither do the student senators and their proxies.



Students are warned to be on the lookout for the insidious newspaper imitation and are cautioned not to believe anything they may read in it or anything else they may read ever again. These type stunts are usually carried out to ascertain students' tolerance for ambiguity which is necessary for institutional controllers in times of great change. Usually apathetic unless carted off to a war or something, students, when confronted with vague and meaningless information, be it through a newspaper, a movie or a record album, react by violently waging a hasty retreat further into apathy. Such is the power of bullshit.

Forever on the brink and as early as tomorrow, or maybe sometime late next week, someone will write more than just letters about rock and roll this or that or who's going to be at this or that spring concert this week or that and get down to the business of writing up everybody else's business which is none of my own. To the Collegian that is. That is, if they want to.

I only hope to see the day when we can all criticize each other in peace, friendship and solidarity as we save the world from perpetrated lies and falsehoods. We say "no" to "Fresh Stink" and urge all students to vociferously express their resounding disapproval of the fraud and phony paper.

We here at the Collegian know a fraud when we see one. After all, it takes one to know one, doesn't it?

Bromery memo of resignation not yet released

Randolph W. Bromery

By GAYLE YOUNG
Collegian Staff

A letter of resignation sent by UMass Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery to the chairman of the UMass Board of Trustees has still not been released to the public although its existence and contents were leaked to the press last week.

The letter states Bromery's intention to resign June 1979. He sent the letter the first week of March to Board chairman Joseph P. Healey who ordered it distributed to the rest of the trustees. Bromery said a staff worker in the office of the president, where the letter was xeroxed and sent out, leaked the contents to the Boston Globe.

Bromery said he knew which staff person is responsible for the leak but would not disclose the name. Others have speculated that someone in the office of the president released the letter to the Globe.

The letter had been marked confidential because it contained matters relating to personnel, according to Bromery. Healey yesterday said he had planned to discuss the letter at this Wednesday's board of trustees meeting.

Bromery said he did not want the letter released in fear of speculation concerning his motives for resigning. Bromery is being considered by the UMass Presidential Selection Committee as a candidate for the office of president.

Bromery said he was "upset" that confidential matter could not be passed through the administration safely. "Once you mimeograph more than one copy of something there is a chance it will leak out," said Bromery. He said Healey should have called the trustees about the matter instead of distributing copies of the letter.

Neither Bromery nor Healey have authorized the release of the letter, each claiming it is the other one's decision. No trustee contacted this weekend would release a copy of the letter without permission from either Bromery or Healey.

The trustees contacted said they had been expecting Bromery to announce his resignation. Bromery is the only one of the 25-30 remaining candidates being considered for president who is presently employed by the University.

Bromery said yesterday "the board would think the proper thing would be for me to resign before the next president was chosen." Bromery said he announced his intentions to resign because as an internal candidate he wants to be "looked at as seriously as the other candidates."

Bromery also said announcing his intentions now would prevent a "sour grapes" situation if he resigned after another candidate was chosen as president. Bromery said he thinks he has "solved all the problems" by announcing his intentions at this time.

Bromery said he had marked his letter confidential so his intentions would not come out "crooked and distorted". He cited several newspaper stories which speculated he was giving the board an "all or nothing" ultimatum. "That is simply not true," said Bromery.

Those trustees contacted over the weekend said they did not see Bromery's intentions as a threat. "The chancellor serves at the pleasure of the board," said UMass senior Paul Cronin, a member of the Presidential Search Committee. In that situation "you would be crazy if you process an ultimatum."

Bromery, who has been actively seeking the presidency since December, said he would consider staying at the University if he was asked by the presidential candidate chosen.

Bromery said he was not positive about his future plans. "I never said I would accept the position of president if it were offered," said Bromery. "There have to be conditions and problems worked out. I would want to know what kind of president the board wants and want them to know what kind of president I would be." Bromery said he favors decentralized higher education.

Carter on Rhodesia: A request for peace

LAGOS, Nigeria [AP] — President Carter said yesterday the United States and Great Britain are calling all sides in Rhodesia's guerrilla war together with representatives of the United Nations in a new effort to bring peace and black majority rule to the strife-torn nation.

The president made the announcement at the conclusion of talks with Nigerian chief of state Olusegun Obasanjo. Carter said the meeting on Rhodesia will be held as soon as possible.

He said invitations to the new talks will go to white Rhodesian Prime Minister Ian Smith, moderate black leaders in Rhodesia and guerrilla chieftains fighting from bases in neighboring countries for political control of the breakaway British colony.

Representatives of the five neighboring "front-line" states also will be invited, Carter said.

The president met with Obasanjo for more than an hour after the two leaders attended church at a Baptist mission founded here in 1853. Both men are Baptists.

Following the talks, the American president and his wife toured a new $325 million port facility on Tin Can Island, once a garbage dump in Lagos harbor. The Carters boarded an American freighter tied up at the island and shook hands with its captain and crew.

from our perspective

Sometimes the people who run newspapers forget that the view from "inside" the paper is considerably different from the one "outside." It's all too easy for us to lapse into the misconception that we operate in a vacuum, when in fact our major purpose is to serve real people outside the office. Seldom has this problem been made more evident that it was last Friday, when our annual April Fools issue spurred a tremendous negative reaction from a large number of people.

The major source of controversy was, of course, the fake front page article about Israel attacking the Lebanese port city of Tyre with nuclear bombs. Because the situation in the Middle East is presently so tense, and because the front page gave very little indication that the story was bogus, many people, at least for a few minutes, believed that war had actually broken out.

While the intent behind our front page was only to shock people for a moment, we irresponsibly failed to consider that such a shock could become a cruel joke to people

Fire services need shift

By DAVID GRIP
Collegian Staff

SOUTH HADLEY — The lack of a permanent full-time staff at the fire station servicing the Mt. Holyoke College area could cause an unnecessary delay in responding to a fire at the college, according to 2nd District Fire Chief John Cleary.

"It's a proven fact," Cleary said, "that the first five minues of a fire are the most important. If a fire breaks out in the college, someone has to call the college operator. The operator then calls us, and then we have to call the men in. This wastes time."

The station presently employs 28 firefighters on a call basis. Cleary is also on call, but works in the same building as a superintendent in the Water Dept.

Last Dec. 10, a fire in the Mt. Holyoke College boiler room heavily damaged three main boilers, leaving the college without heat for 13 hours. The Mt. Holyoke student newspaper, The Choragos, reported firefighting crews from 1st District and 2nd District, as well as crews from Amherst, Holyoke and Granby responded to the call in approximately 30 minutes.

The 1st District fire station here covers most of the town. The station has a permanent staff of 14 firefighters who are salaried, and a backup crew of 15 firefighters on call. The firefighters on call at the 1st district station are paid $3.50 for each hour on call.

A permanent staff at the 2nd District station "is long overdue," according to Cleary.

"One permanent man is worth four men on call," Cleary said, "Our equipment maintenance is not up to par and we've got enough work to keep two men busy for 16 hours apiece."

Cleary said the permanent men could also be used for fire inspection in Mt. Holyoke College's dormitories. Currently, each dormitory has a "fire captain," who is a resident of the dormitory who inpects each room twice a year for fire hazards.

Cleary feels the college's fire inspection program could be more efficient.

"They should have a stricter fire inspection program," he said. "Inspections should be done by the fire dept. I don't think they (fire captains) would snitch on their roommates."

Wayne Gass, director of physical facilities at Mt. Holyoke, disagrees with Cleary over the fire inspection system.

"I don't share Jack's feelings," said Gass. "I think the fire captains do a terrific job. They do report things. I don't think there is any need for the department to do the inspections. Our system works better and is more accessable to the students."

Aside from the inspections by the fire captains each week, Gass said the dorms are inspected for fire hazards by housekeeping workers during the summer break, and fire drills are conducted five times a year.

Cleary also said the college should tie their sprinkler system into the 2nd District station, "so if a sprinkler went off, we would get a call immediately."

There is no centrally reported alarm system at Mt. Holyoke. Most buildings are equipped with automatic sprinklers, while the newer buildigns are made of fire-resistant steel and concrete.

Gass said he would like to install alarms in every buildings, but cannot because of financial limitations. He said he is satisfied with the present system, "and feels there is not a significant delay before the fire department is alerted."

Gass also said there is no need for a permanent fire department staff. "I don't see any disadvantages to an unmanned staff," he said, "the present department is a very good one."

According to Cleary, a change to a permanent staff at the 2nd District station would have to be approved by the Prudential Committee, a three-person elected body that oversees the fire department. Cleary said he has been pushing for a permanent staff at the station since 1971, but has been overruled by the committee.

Amherst Selectmen

Editors Note: This is the first part of a two-part series of interviews with candidates for the Amherst Board of Selectmen. Tomorrow interviews with Diana Romer and Chauncy T. Simmons, Jr. will appear.

Jaque

By SEAN HORGAN
Collegian Staff

When Selectman Roger C. Jacque at last week's Board of Selectmen's meeting made a point of his sterling attendance record at the meetings, one knew there was an election coming up.

And so there is.

Tomorrow is election day in Amherst, when Jacque joins three other candidates in a bid to capture one of the two open seats on the Board of Selectmen.

Jacque, 31, is seeking his first elected term to the board. He was appointed to the board last year after Robert Garvey resigned. Before becoming a selectman, Jacque was a member of the Planning Board, and he has been a Town Meeting representative for three years.

Any discussion with Jacque, or a look at his voting record, immediately makes one thing clear — he is a conservative.

"I would call myself a conservative," he said, "And I certainly vote that way. I think that comes from living in Amherst all of my life."

Asked if he thought being a conservative is a disadvantage in a college town with liberal tendencies such as Amherst, Jacque answered, "Well, look at the whole thing in perspective. I think I represent a large enough portion of Amherst residents who will go out to the polls Tuesday and vote for me."

In other words, it is no good being a liberal if the liberals do not get to the polls to vote for you. Jacque said he is expecting a light turnout at the polls Tuesday, which he thinks will help his conservative cause.

"I think a heavy turnout would help the more liberal candidates like Romer and Moreau," he said. "No matter the turnout, in order to win you have to take the Amherst Perimeter, and take it large."

The Amherst Perimeter he referred to is made up of the 1st, 2nd, 7th and 8th precincts. He also said he believes the winning selectmen will have to tally about 2,000 votes each.

Moreau

By SEAN HORGAN
Collegian Staff

After months of campaigning for the Amherst Board of Selectmen, Bernard R. Moreau finds out tomorrow if it has been worth all the time and effort.

Moreau is one of four candidates who will be going to the poll in Tuesday's town elections with the hope of gaining one of the two seats open on the Board of Selectmen.

A self-professed liberal who has lived in Amherst for the last 17 years, the sixty-year-old Moreau will be pitted against incumbents Diana Romer and Roger C. Jacque, and another challenger, Chauncy T. Simmons, Jr. for a place on the board. Four candidates hardly fits evenly into two spaces, but Moreau said he is not worried.

"I'm pretty confident that I can win in this election. I've had a great organization, and I think that my views appeal to a wide cross-section of the people in Amherst, from the academics to the townies."

Moreau's stances on the issues facing Amherst voters in this year's elections never stray too far from his admitted liberalism.

Moreau says he recognizes that Amherst must bring in outside revenues to the town through industry, but he also says the type of industry should be compatible with the type of town Amherst is.

"I wouldn't care to see any really heavy industry come into town, instead I think it would be more feasible to create industries which could use the area's college brainpower, something like a research or consultant industry."In terms of the town water supply issue, Moreau says his first choice would be to continue negotiating with Hadley, but if that fails to solve the problem, his next option would be the tapping of the Laurence Swamp in South Amherst.

Moreau also said that he cannot foresee the cutting of town-offered services.

"I don't advocate any cut in services, but I don't think we can increase the services the town offers without raising the tax rate. The only increase in spending should come to match rises in inflation.

Electric heater seen as cause of blaze

Amherst fire officials over the weekend listed the probable cause of last Wednesday's Hampshire College fire as "ignition of bedding materials by electric heater."

Firefighters estimated the total cost of the fire at $125,000 — $90,000 in damages to the Prescott House building and $35,000 worth of contents lost.

The fire, which started in the bedroom of Hampshire student Elizabeth Ross, gutted that apartment and burned through the ceiling of neighboring apartment 89.

Seventy-five students were evacuated from the ski-lodge-style building shortly after 3:30 a.m., including the eight residents and three guests in apartment 90 where the fire began.

Students to picket

Students on the UMass J.P. Stevens Boycott Committee are planning to picket the company's annual campus recruitment Thursday because of its alleged unfair labor practices, according to committee member Robert Maloney.

The committee last Friday arranged with campus administrators to set up a booth next to Stevens company recruitment booth in Godell Hall. The students' booth will provide information on the company's alleged violation of the law, according to Maloney.

The J.P. Stevens Company manufactures sheets, towels, blankets and rugs. The company approached the University to recruit students, according to placement officer Clark Edwards, and is interested in psychology and sociology majors.

Berrigan criticizes abortion

By JOHN M. MORAN
Collegian Staff

Peace activist the Rev. Daniel Berrigan in a speech this weekend likened abortion and war saying both "violate the deepest sense of who we are and what we might become together."

Berrigan made his remarks Saturday to a group of nearly 400 persons gathered for the Catholic Peace Fellowship in the Newman Center.

Berrigan and his brother the Rev. Philip Berrigan, known as peace activists in the 1960's, went to jail for destruction of draft records which they burned in protest of the Vietnam War in 1968.

"War is also an abortion," Berrigan said, "and abortion is also a war ... Abortion is silent violence against which there is no cry, a crime comparable to the nuclear proposed crime."

Berrigan's talk was entitled "The Christian Community's Responsibility for Human Life: A Critique," was the main speech of the conference whose theme was "Nuclear Disarmament and the Right to Life." Ten workshops related to the theme were held following Berrigan's address.

Berrigan said abortion is a dreadful human problem somewhat analagous to the problem of Vietnam. "There are no non-combatants," he said. "The poor woman who is carrying an unwanted pregnancy is like the Harlem soldier sent first to war. His fate is our own.

"There will be no solution to war until there is a societal structure that says we don't need war to make it." The same is true for abortion, Berrigan said, and he proposed a more "supportive society" to ease the problem of abortion.

"We shouldn't try to persuade a poor woman with child not to have an abortion without considering her needs," he said.

Abortion supporters also attended Berrigan's speech and later participated in the discussion which followed. Many were carrying posters expressing their support for abortion.

"You talk of a supportive society," one woman told Berrigan, "but what about the women in the meantime? The Right to Life movement would certainly outlaw abortions before the supportive community exists."

Another woman called the facilities of Birthright, an organization which seeks to encourage women considering abortions to carry the child to birth, "inadequate" and said that while the abortion clinic she went to was not "great either," it is was more supportive than Birthright.

Father Daniel Berrigan, renowned anti-war activist, was the keynote speaker at a right to life-nuclear disarmament conference held at the Newman Center this Saturday.

60 protest conference on abortion

By JONI-SUE BLINDERMAN
Collegian Staff

Sixty people Saturday protested a conference which combined the issues of nuclear disarmament and the right to life at the Newman Center.

The conference was sponsored by the New England Catholic Peace Fellowship.

Two of the slogans on picketers' signs were "Ban The Bomb Not Abortion" and "Lest We Forget...," written beneath drawings of coat hangers.

Mary Wentworth, one of the organizers of the protest and a member of the Clamshell Alliance, expressed concern about the combination of issues of nuclear disarmament and abortion in the conference. Wentworth said, "We are in favor of nuclear disarmament but not in favor of the anti-abortion stance at this conference."

Wentworth and co-worker Pat Wieland said the protest was "of utmost importance" as the Amherst Medical Associates' abortion clinic has already been subject to anti-abortion demonstrations. The most recent took place on Good Friday, March 24. Protesters said they felt that continued harrassment by Right-To-Life forces is eminent in the Amherst area.

At 12:30, while the conference participants were having lunch, the protesters walked through the Newman Center into the cafeteria chanting "women must control their fate not the church and not the state."

Once the protesters were in the cafeteria, they separated into small groups and attempted to initiate discussion with conference participants. There was a general agreement among the participants that the protest had been tasteful and discussion was welcome.

Protester Tom McCrory, who said he believes in free choice regarding abortion, discussed the need for pro-choice groups to bond together as they did prior to the 1973 Supreme Court decision to legalize abortion.

"Without the participation of pro-choice groups, the Right-To-Life Movement will gain the power to incite repeal of pro-choice legislation at both the state and federal level," McCrory said. The strength of the Right-To-Life movement has become evident in the current controversy surrounding the issue of Medicaid funding of abortions, he said.

McCrory said, "Right-To-Life groups have succumbed to using violence as a tactic for closing abortion clinics. These tactics include bombings and sit-ins at clinics around the country. Law enforcement agencies have taken little if any action to combat this kind of vilence."

At 2:30 the Right-To-Life group invited the protesters to participate in a formal dialogue concerning nuclear disarmament and the Right-To-Life. The anti-abortion and pro-choice groups tried to come to a basic understanding of each others' beliefs. Some disagreement stemmed from the issue of the rights of the fetus versus the rights of the woman.

Members of the Right To Life groups, relating to a theme by Daniel Barrigan in his speech, analogized the Pentagon and the Vietnam War to abortion clinics and abortion.

The pro-choice group expressed dissatisfaction with this analogy. One pro-choice picketer said, "If all the people in this room put their energy into making contraceptive aparati 100 percent effective, 100 percent safe and easily attainable, maybe abortion wouldn't even be an issue."

Fac Sen proposed more power

By MEGAN O'REILLY
Collegian Staff

The Faculty Senate last Thursday began the first of a three-part discussion on a controversial proposal to rank academic programs, which would considerably strengthen the senate's governorance powers.

The senate also sent back a proposal to rescind Graduate Faculty membership qualifications back to the Graduate Council ad hoc committee for further deliberation and heard an angry address by members of the administration at its bi-weekly meeting.

The ad hoc Council on Academic Priorities, which is currently being sculptured by the rules committee, would replace the ad hoc committee on Academic Program Review and allow the senate to not only advise the administration but serve as an on-going consulting body in recommendation and application of programs for growth, stabilization or reduction.

Chairman of the Rules Committee David Yaukey said the council would set a precedent in faculty input in governance matters and is one possible solution to administation-faculty rivalry over governance decisions.

In the past year faculty members have bitterly attacked the administration arguing that the administration alone cannot make representative decisions regarding the priority of academic programs.

"The administration has responded positively to the proposal so far," said Yaukey, "we haven't received any negative repercussions."

The proposed composition of the council includes faculty representatives from the Academic Matters Council, the Program and Budget Council, the Graduate Council and the Rules Committee; one member each from every School, College, Faculty and the Office of Special Programs and an additional members to insure sufficient representation of each; the Provost , or his designee, serving without vote; and two students; one undergraduate and one graduate level.

A number of senators expressed concern that senate council members serving on the council might over represent certain departments giving them more clout and raising conflicts of interest.

Yaukey replied that conflicts of interest cannot possibly be avoided 100 per cent of the time and are best checked by the democratic model after which the Council is shaped.

A second concern of the senate focused on appeal procedures for departments which are phased out by the council. Yaukey replied that at present, there are none and welcomed suggestions on possible appeal procedure structure.

The motion will appear twice more on the senate agenda for further discussion and voting in accordance with senate constitution rules regarding the establishment of councils.

Graduate Council Chairwoman Harlan Stura said the proposal to rescind graduate faculty membership qualifications sponsored by Senator Robert McGarrah raised a personal issue on McGarrah's behalf and was being investigated by the Graduate Council's own sub-committee.

McGarrah, who published three articles in the Christian Science Monitor which were subsequently rejected by the Graduate Faculty chairmanship eligibility committee, said he was not against the purpose of establishing publication evaluations but rather the enlisting procedures of evaluation.

According to McGarrah the policy of chairmanship eligibilities is based on numbers of recent publishings of scholarly material which seriously limit faculty's academic freedom and establishes first, second, and third class citizens among faculty members.

Vice-chancellor of Student Affairs Robert L. Woodbury attacked press coverage of dormitory safety hazards calling it inaccurate and exaggerated. "The dormitories are not falling apart," Woodbury said, "however, we do have very serious deferred maintenance problems on campus."

Woodbury cited a report by the chronicle of Higher Education which said maintenance hazards are the number one problem facing college campuses today.

Woodbury said that a regular renovation system must be set up, dorms must be made accessible to handicapped students by way of elevators and ramps and fire safety and life support systems must be upgraded. "It's going to require much time and it's going to be costly," Woodbury said.

"The problem is we must keep rents down to make dormitories accessible to middle class and lower income students and yet upgrade the buildings at the same time," Woodbury said.

The Student Government Association assembled in ELECTORAL CONVENTION the 29th of March 1978
DELEGATE

"However much I booze" may seem like a Who song to most people, but it was the theme of the electoral convention held last Friday in the Campus Center. Herb Tyson and Shelly Gordon were unable to gain a majority senate vote despite their victory in the popular vote March 15th. The convention continues tonight.

Convention reconvenes

By JON KLEIN
Collegian Staff

The Student Government Association's electoral convention meets tonight at 7 in the Student Union Ballroom in its second try to elect a president.

Tonight's ballot includes the Shelly Gordon - Herb Tyson ticket and the Donald Bishop - Bob Dion candidacy who got the ballot in a write-in effort at the first session of the convention last Wednesday.

David Barenberg and Susan Birmingham who were on the first ballot will not appear on the tonight's ballot since Bishop-Dion got more votes than the Barenberg-Birmingham ticket. Only two candidates can appear on a convention ballot plus any write-ins. Barenberg-Birmingham plan a write-in effort according to Barenberg.

Both Gordon-Tyson and Bishop-Dion spent the weekend campaigning. Barenberg and Birmingham did not campaign this weekend.

The first order of business tonight is to check for a quorum. After the quorum call any crediential challenges will be made. Once the delegate situation is resolved, candidates will make their presentations to the convention.

After the speeches are made there is a question and answer period. Following this the convention's second ballot vote is taken.

Student politicians have different opinions on the amount of ballots it will take before a candidacy gets the majority needed to win. Barenberg does not expect their winner to be picked on the second ballot. Gordon says she hopes the winner is chosen on the second ballot because some of the delegates are reluctant to attend another long session.

David Barenberg says the Senate Speaker election held last Wednesday night had an "incredible" affect on the presidential election. Barenberg says that since Bob Dion lost the Speaker election he was freed to run for president.

In another event at the convention on Wednesday night, members of the student senate stole orange juice and milk from the Hatch snack bar. Senators had gone to the back of the Hatch for a quorum call, and many members of the Senate helped themselves to refreshments at the snack bar.

News analysis

Like an infant learning to walk or perhaps more like an old man about to die, the Student Government Association is struggling simply to take the next step. Student government officials are wading through a long and clumsy process to elect their next president.

The presidential campaign was somewhat bizarre and confused. Candidates wanted to run with plastic ducks. Another candidate endorsed none of the above including himself. Even the number of candidates (16) added to te general state of confusion. On election day there were frantic efforts to find people willing to work at ballot boxes. Last week saw long, sometimes heated nights spent writing rules for the convention.

This organization, on paper, is made up of all 18,000 undergraduates at UMass. Yet many of the student government's problems stem from a membership which seems uninterested and uninvolved.

Politically, this boils down to a democratically-structured body which is functioning with no power base. Its actions are made with no political support from students. Thus, it has no force to back up its efforts.

On campus, the lack of student participation removes one of the checks of a democratic structure. Most senate candidates don't need to fear a tough election, nor do they need to worry themselves with the concerns of their constituents. The quality of senate candidates may diminish since few even run.

In short, with no power base student government is left to do what it wants, but has no power to do it.

Despite the lack of a political base, student government does have a financial base to work with. The $1.1 million Student Activities Trust Fund, which undergraduates contribute to, provides the student government with money power. This fund helps keep student government alive.

The lack of student unity does not exclude student officials. Some senators, for example, refused to work at ballot boxes on election days despite a serious manpower shortage. Even on issues where all students' interests would be served, such as in opposition to a bus fee, there is difficulty in bringing students together on an issue.

However, several individuals to try to serve students through working in the student government. Some leave soon after coming in, frustrated with the structure. Others stay on.

The campaign reflected the confused state of UMass student government. The voters may also have been confused by it all, or perhaps disgusted. Only one sixth turned out to vote.

Despite its problems the Student Government Association carries on. Tonight the student government electoral convention reconvenes to choose the next president.

Non-alcoholic party spurred by campus-wide policy

By CAROL MORRIER
Collegian Staff

Representatives from Northeast Area Government voted last night to allot $35 for dance contest prizes at a non-alcohol party in Worchester Dining Commons this Friday night at 8:30.

The campus-wide alcoholic policy, whose final revision are going to be made this Friday, was also discussed at the meeting. "We're trying to get away from the idea that people just use alcoholic functions as a way to make money," said Ellen Plausky, Northeast representative in the Alcoholic Policy Task Force.

In financial news, Northeast voted unanimously to alloting $100 to the International Fair in the Campus Center April 14 and 15.

A vote on a loan for SUN-DAY, a miniature Towards Tomorrow Fair at the Campus Pond, was tabled until next weeks meeting. Lewis dormitory residents requested a $155 loan for a comedy Festival April 28; no decision was made.

Northeast Treasure, Jeff Shapiro said Earth Day needs support from area governments because the Undergraduate Student Senate, which usually funds it, is having financial difficulty. Steve Wilkinson, Thatcher Dormitory representative, said dorm residents would like to see remaining area funds go toward allocations.

OHAG has elections; few candidates running

Elections for officers of Orchard Hill Area Government will be held on Wednesday and Thursday, although there are no candidates for vice-president, treasurer or secretary.

Acting president Mark Hergenrother and Gary Marshall are presidential candidates.

Hergenrother last night said the Orchard Hill-Central Spring Concert has been set for April 30. Two bands which have been signed for the concert are the Chris Rhodes Band and Pyrrhana.

The Orchard Hill Women's Center will hold a workshop on women and alcohol Wednesday at 7:30 p.m. in Field House.

The Third World Cultural Center in Dickinson will sponsor an arts and carfts exhibit April 5-12 from 7-11 p.m.

Jon Finn of the Arts Council said there will be a poetry reading tomorrow night by John Clayton and Fred Robinson of the UMass English Department in the Van Meter classroom at 8:30. He also told members the Orchard Hill-Central Spring Fair will be April 29 in the Orchard Hill bowl. Finn said the Arts Council is now looking for craftspeople and volunteers to assist in managing the fair.

New law requires schools to pay for aired music

WASHINGTON [AP] — College students, already facing ever-increasing education costs, will soon have to pay roughly 13 cents each in royalty fees for much of the music they hear.

A new law requires colleges and universities to pay royalties for copyrighted music aired on campus at concerts, the college radio stations, piped-in over loudspeakers, and possibly even bands' halftime shows at football games.

In the past, the colleges were exempt from paying royalty fees to composers' licensing organizations on grounds that the music was "not for profit." But a sweeping revision of the copyright laws has wiped out that exemption.

Several higher education groups have just reached model agreements with the major performing rights organizations, which are sending licensing contracts to the nation's 3,000 colleges. Although the law took effect Jan. 1, the groups are observing a moratorium on royalty fees for now.

The changes in the copyright provisions were part of the congressional overhaul of U.S. copyright laws in 1976. It was the first time the laws were revised since 1909.

The two major licensing organizations, the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers and Broadcast Music Inc., are each charging 5 to 6 cents per student plus $50 to $60 per school. In addition, they are levying fees ranging from $15 to $330 per concert where the performer is paid $1,000 or more.

A third, smaller group, the Society of European Stage, Authors and Composers, is charging a flat fee that ranges from $50 to $440 per college, and is equivalent to about 2 cents per student.

Concerts are big business on many campuses, with both rock stars and violin virtuosos making the rounds. College paid performers "in excess of $70 million" for concerts last year, according to Sheldon E. Steinbach, attorney for the American Council on Education.

Sadat says negotiations hampered

[AP] — President Anwar Sadat said yesterday that Israeli Defense Minister Ezer Weizman would return to Egypt this week for further exploratory talks, but the Egyptian leader ruled out a resumption of full-scale negotiations "unless there is a clear change in the Israeli position."

Syria, meanwhile, accused Israel of sending "terrorist" infiltrators to mine a key highway linking Syria and Jordan and said 12 Syrians, including nine soldiers, were killed in an attempt to defuse the mines.

An Israeli military command spokesman in Tel Aviv denied knowledge of the incident.

Sadat, in an interview published in Cairo's October Magazine, said the search for common ground between Egypt and Israel "should continue because we are parties to the Mideast problem."

He said, however, that "severe differences" remain between the two countries on how to achieve peace.

Weizman, who met with Sadat in Egypt last week in a bid to restart the stalled peace negotiations, will return this week to continue those efforts, Sadat said.

Parallel political and military negotiations begun after Sadat's peace journey to Jerusalem last November were suspended in January because of disputes over a homeland for the Palestinians and Israeli withdrawal from captured Arab territory.

"It is impossible to resume the meetings of the military and political committees unless there is a clear change in the Israeli position," Sadat was quoted as saying in the interview.

Egyptian officials said Weizman last week brought no new peace proposals.

Sadat was quoted as saying Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin had antiquated ideas and was unable to overcome the psychological barrier between Egypt and Israel.

Weizman reviewed his Cairo talks at the weekly meeting of the Israeli cabinet in Jerusalem yesterday.

Israeli war veterans rally for peace

TEL AVIV, Israel [AP] — A band of Israeli war veterans rallying under the slogan "Peace now is not a dream" has mounted a striking challenge to Prime Minister Menachem Begin's Mideast policies.

The veterans, joined by a group of citizens calling themselves "Peace Now," drew a weekend crowd estimated at 30,000 by police to a Tel Aviv city square to protest the slow pace of Mideast negotiations. They put most of the blame on Begin.

No one can gauge yet how representative they are of the Israeli mood. But 30,000 is a huge crowd by Israeli standards, and it has attracted attention in top government circles.

"It would be foolish to ignore them," says Geula Cohen, a hawkish member of Begin's ruling Likud bloc and a member of parliament. "Their number makes them extraordinary and also dangerous."

Dangerous, says Mrs. Cohen, because they are hindering Begin at a critical juncture in the peace process, and because "The halo of war veteran is demagogic in our country, where most men are war veterans."

The way the young Israeli ex-soldiers tell it, their movement was born around a coffee table a few weeks ago when, in the words of organizer Omri Padan, "we felt we had a chance for peace following Egyptian President Anwar Sadat's visit here, and the chance was being lost."

They gathered 300 signatures of fellow veterans on a letter to Begin urging him to relinquish more captured Arab land and halt Jewish settlement in the occupied territories.

The letter reached the news media and stirred a controversy, primarily because many of the signatures were combat officers, the cream of Israeli youth.

Then they started a petition and claimed to have gathered 10,000 names. They also mounted a "Peacewatch" outside Begin's Jerusalem headquarters.

JDL, PLO protest Academy Awards

HOLLYWOOD [AP] — Controversy again surrounds the Motion Picture Academy as Jewish and Arab activists plan to demonstrate at the 50th annual awards tonight over the appearance of nominee Vanessa Redgrave.

An estimated 500 Los Angeles policemen and sheriff's deputies, as well the academy's own security staff, will be on duty outside the downtown Music Center, with others stationed inside.

The Jewish Defense League says 400 persons will participate in a "peaceful but innovative" demonstration at the ceremony.

The actress is nominated for supporting actress for her role of underground fighter against the Nazis in "Julia". The league is protesting the British actress' financing and narration of a documentary, "The Palestinians."

Supporters of the Palestine Liberation Organization, whose leader Yasser Arafat appears in the documentary, plans to counter with its own demonstration, with 200 people expected.

Redgrave's film has clouded her candidacy for the Oscar. The JDL is demanding that 20th Century-Fox, producer of "Julia", promise never to hire the actress again and repudiate her alleged anti-Israel statements. Picketing of theaters playing "Julia" was threatened if the demands aren't met.

But the film company refused to accede, stating it would not sponsor a return of a movie blacklist. Hollywood craft guilds supported the studio's stand.

A Fox official spoke to Redgrave in London last week, suggesting that she come here as an artist and not a propagandist. She reportedly gave assurance that she would appear as an artist.

Controversy is nothing new to the Academy Awards. In recent years the event has been picketed by Vietnam War protesters, as well as blacks and Mexican-Americans seeking better representation in the film industry. In 1973 Marlon Brando used the awards to protest treatment of American Indians in films, sending a part-Indian actress to refuse his Oscar for "The Godfather".

Two years ago, producer Bert Schneider accepted a documentary award with praise for the Viet Cong. His comments riled Bob Hope, who wrote a disclaimer for Frank Sinatra to deliver later in the show.

Whatever happens outside the Music Center, the awards telecast will begin at 7 p.m. PST over the ABC network and is scheduled to conclude at 10 p.m. However the largest assemblage ever of Oscar winners is promised for the 50th anniversary show and the telecast could run long — well into the wee hours for East Coast viewers.

Radar may emit radiation

LEXINGTON [AP] — With the Air Force planning to start testing its PAVE PAWS radar screen today at Otis Air Force Base, Cape Cod residents fear they still are not getting the straight story about how much radiation the system will emit.

But they have no plans to protest the start of testing or add further legal action to a suit filed March 3 in U.S. District Court, Ann Vohl, attorney for critics of the installation, said yesterday.

"We are in favor of maximizing testing," said attorney Vohl of Lexington. "More testing and more research."

She said Cape Cod residents are still uncertain about the amount of test level radiation and an Air Force report allegedly contending the system's radiation is not hazardous.

She said the Air Force has assured Sens. Edward W. Brooke, R-Mass. and Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass. and Cape Cod Rep. Gerald Studds, D-Mass. that radiation levels during the tests would not exceed on microwatt at the source.

However, an Air Force spokesman, Major John Correll of Hanscom Air Force Base, Bedford, said the radiation would not exceed one micro-watt within 3,500 feet of the station, a distance that roughly corresponded to the confines of the base.

Ms. Vohl said Correll's statement indicates radiation power at the source would exceed one microwatt since she assumed it weakened in power further away.

She said she planned to check the differences to determine if they are significant.

Ms. Vohl also noted that Studds' press aide. Peter Fleishcher, told her the report provided to the legislators Friday by the Air Force was stamped as being not officially approved by the Air Force.

Fleischer also said it was based on previously published scientific documents rather than research on the Cape Cod facility, the lawyer said.

Ms. Vohl said the test start had no affect on a suit filed last month asking for an independent study of the environmental impact of the radar station.

Murder trial opens today

BOSTON [AP] — State officials meet today with the designers of Cape Cod Community College, which suffered an estimated $1.2 million in damage due to building flaws, in a last ditch attempt to solve some of those problems before the case is turnnd over to the attorney general.

David Flynn, deputy commissioner of administration and finance, said a report on the school's five buildings estimated damage at $881,000. However, water damage caused by those defects will bring the actual repair costs to $1.2 million to $1.5 million, Flynn said.

The report, commissioned last September by the state, was completed a week ago by Design Engineers, Inc. of Cambridge.

Wayne may face surgery

BOSTON [AP] — Doctors at Massachusetts General Hospital sifted this weekend through results of tests on actor John Wayne, who is rumored to be preparing for open heart surgery there.

A hospital spokesman, Martin S. Bander, said no information was available on the results but claimed "the next 48 hours should be something new."

Michael Wayne, the 70-year-old box office favorite's son, said, "We're going to be talking to the doctors. So far, we haven't any idea of what is going to happen."

Wayne, durable star for 50 years in more than 200 action movies, flew across country in his private plane and checked into the hospital Wednesday.

Pols to query building flaws

WORCESTER [AP] — The trial of a Virginia man accused of murdering his mother, his sister and an elderly boarder in their Easthampton home last year is set to begin today in Superior Court.

Lawyers for Herman L. Harris succeeded in getting the trial moved to Worcester because of allegedly prejudicial pre-trial publicity on the incident in Hampshire County.

The 50-year-old Navy petty officer from Virginia Beach is charged with shooting his mother, Velma P. Kulis, 69; his sister, Mozelle Evans, 47; and George Healey, 77, a boarder who lived with the family.

He also is accused of trying to kill his niece, Deborah Evans, the lone survivor of the March 19, 1977, attack. She was shot in the head and lay seriously wounded for more than 30 hours before she was found.

Harris was arrested last April in Virginia Beach, where his lawyers say police improperly gathered evidence against him.

104th time proves lucky

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. [AP] — A 75-year-old woman who flunked a written driver's test 103 times in a row can now legally drive an auto she bought six years ago.

"Some people might have given up, but somehow or other I just wanted to learn how to drive," Fannie Turner said after gaining her learner's permit recently.

The veteran pedestrian started taking the tests after she bought a used car in 1972.

"I should have learned how to drive and then bought the car, that's what I should have done," she said.

When she failed the test, troopers at the state testing office gave her a driver's handbook and told her to study up and try again.

Two years ago, Turner began a weekly routine of strolling 10 blocks to the testing office. Troopers came to expect the Wednesday visits by "Miss Fannie."

Sgt. Jerry Reinhold of the Arkansas State Police said that two years ago "she'd miss all 35 questions."

A machine decides which test an applicant takes, and the device seldom dishes out the same 35 multiple choice questions, he said.

Test scorers started noticing a definite improvement in Mrs. Turner's scores a few months ago. "Miss Fannie" was only missing 10 or 12 questions each time, Reinhold said.

Finally, she answered 28 questions correctly. The score was high enough to merit a learner's permit, which means she can legally drive as long as she is accompanied by a licensed driver.

Turner, who has just turned 75, says she considers the learner's permit a birthday gift to herself.

She said she dog-eared four driver's handbooks studying for the tests. But through all 103 failures, Turner said she never felt like giving up.

Computer designs drug

HOUSTON [AP] — With the help of a computer, scientists have designed and produced what they call the most potent anti-cancer drug ever made — an agent so lethal it kills hundreds of millions of cancer cells in laboratory mice with a single dose.

Researchers from the University of California at San Francisco say the drug azetomicin is one of a new class designed to stick to cancer cells longer than other drugs in order to intensify its effects.

Dr. Martin A. Apple, head of the team that developed the new drug, cautioned that there is no assurance azetomicin would have the same effect on human cancer as it did in mice. No human tests have been made.

However, Apple said, "It is probably better than many drugs used clinically now, at least according to our computer projections." And the computer model he uses "almost never misses" in judging whether a new drug will work in people, he added.

Speaking at a weekend session of the American Cancer Society's annual science writers' seminar, Apple said the secret of the new drug's potency is the time it stays bound to the cancer cells. Individual cells have molecules on their surface called receptors that have a highly selective attraction for certain other molecules.

"The length of time the drug stays bound to a receptor creates the intensity of the drug effect," Apple said. A common cancer drug such as adriamycin binds for about one second, but azetomicin stays stuck for 1,500 to 1,700 seconds, he said.

Apple said the chemical structure was designed with the aid of computer modeling. Most of the drugs developed in this century have come about through trial and error, a time-consuming method that produces relatively few useful agents that do exactly what doctors want, Apple said.

The California researchers drew information from PROPHET, a nationwide computer network of chemical and biological data sponsored by the National Institutes of Health.

Losses soar in mail orders

WASHINGTON [AP] — Americans lost about $1 billion through mail-order schemes last year, the Postal Service says. That was nearly double the $14 million loss the previous year.

In many of the cases, the advertised products were never furnished. In the rest, the products were worthless, postal authorities say. And in some cases consumers suffered harm because they believed the advertising claims.

Mrs. Arlynd MacDonald of Rosemont, Colo., sent away for a pill that was advertised as preventing pregnancy for at least six months with no side effects. Today, Mrs. MacDonald is pregnant.

The ad Mrs. MacDonald responded to said the "She-Link Herbal Pill No. 9" originated in the Ming Dynasty of China four centuries ago and was now being offered in the United States. It cited medical authorities as testifying to the effectiveness of the pill and testimonials from purported users.

"They had a lot of facts. It looked impressive," Mrs. MacDonald said. She added in a telephone interview that "it was a shock" when she learned she was pregnant. "We already had three children and we had decided not to have any more," she said.

The Postal Service's judicial officer last month ordered mail to the operation cut off after finding that the ads for the pill were false.

This order requires the return to senders of all mail responding to the ads. In addition, a criminal indictment is pending.

The Postal Service says most of the $60-billion-a-year mail order business is reputable but that consumers should watch out for promises that seem too good to be true.

To drive home the point, the agency has scheduled a "Postal Consumer Protection Week" for April 10-15 and postmasters expected to issue warnings in localities across the nation.

'April Fools' edition condemned

To the Editor:

The Arab Student Union and the UMass Zionist Alliance strongly condemn the front page article of the "April Fools" edition of the Collegian. This article, headlined Israel Attacks: Nuclear Explosion Shocks Mideast was a poor excuse for humor and in vulgar taste.

In this day of nuclear proliferation the possibility of a nuclear war is all too real, especially in the potentially explosive Middle East, to be considered funny. Too many people took this seriously due to this fact and particularly those of us with emotional ties to this region.

Both the serious style of this article, that had no satirical elements what-so-ever, and the lack of any type of warning notice to the effect that this edition would be an April Fool's Day issue led to much emotional trauma. This trauma further deepened in those of us who didn't know of the April Fool's tradition and-or the Collegian's publication of an April Fool's issue.

The Collegian should have realized the gravity of the situation and repercussions within the Jewish, Arab and general community of UMass. This non-recognition shows a profound lack of journalistic sensitivity and community responsibility.

At a time when the Arab and Jewish communities are struggling to build a peace in the Mid-East this type of journalistic ineptitude only serves to reinforce the public's misconception of our true hopes and efforts for peace.

Front page in 'bad taste'

To the Editor:

We, the members of the International Students Association, feel that the front page article of the Friday, March 31 issue of the Collegian was in extremely bad taste. As an association representing almost 600 foreign students, including students from Israel and Lebanon, we feel that the article was unsympathetic and extremely offensive. We can only presume that the article was meant to be a joke, however, we find it totally lacking in humor. It is completely beyond our comprehension how anyone could stoop so low as to try to draw humor from a situation which is so tragic: it may have escaped your notice, but people are actually dying in Lebanon and Israel, and have returned home to find houses and families destroyed. Are we now to look forward to "funny" articles on the Vietnam war or the current situations in Northern Ireland, South Africa, or Ethiopia?

An apology is due to students from Lebanon and Israel, and to all sensitive and aware members of this community.

Reader expresses 'profound shock'

To the Editor:

It was with profound shock that I read the Friday, March 31, 1978 issue of the Collegian. Never in my years at the University have I ever observed anything as disgusting, revolting and vile as the issue that appeared on Friday. I cannot even justify or excuse the issue as an April Fool's college prank.

The article and headline that appeared on the front page ranks as the poorest journalism possible. This is the product of individuals that care little for peace, the end of human oppression or quality education.

The article in question offends the sensibilities of not only Israelis and Arabs, but of Jews, Moslems and Christians all over the world. At this time of crisis and heightened tensions, it would have behooved the Collegian to publish something to encourage a peaceful end to hostilities, not a prediction of hostilities that are all too possible.

The information contained in the article is all too real and not at all funny. It is beyond my comprehension how the dropping of a bomb and the destruction of human beings can in anyway be thought of as comical.

The Collegian in the not so distant past has condemned and editorialized against such things as the bombing of Cambodia, fighting in Rhodesia and the Vietnam War. The Collegian has been the champion of human rights. But that is all over now.

The publishing of this one article, even in jest, makes a mockery of everything the Collegian stands for. Never again will I be able to place my faith in the Editorial or Reporting Staffs of the Collegian. When a newspaper loses the respect of its readers, it might as well cease publication. A newspaper's sole job is to serve its readers with the most accurate report of the facts, not a fabrication of lies.

This issue was a travesty. It is in bad taste. It is poor journalism and there is no possible excuse for it. The Collegian with its highly educated and sophisticated staff must be able to invent something funnier than the bombing and killing of human beings.

'Far beyond sick'

To the Editor:

Your so-called "April Fools" issue report of an Israeli attack on Tyre went far beyond being "sick", and far beyond being irresponsible.

That article was read outside as well as within the UMass campus — by those uninformed about this yearly "tradition". I have received several calls today from sources outside UMass expressing concern, fear, confusion — and their partial, if not total, belief in your ... "joke". To publish such an article — [even in "jest"] — at a time when the Middle East situation is so extremely tense, especially in Lebanon, is a cruel manipulation of people's sensibilities.

Although it may not have been the Collegian's intent to make a strong anti-Israeli editorial statement with this article, it is very difficult not interpret a front page article of this kind in any other way.

Barbara Alpert

'Insensitive, senseless and sick'

To the Editor:

Your parents were killed in a car accident. April Fools ha, ha, ha.

Does that sound like an insensitive, senseless and sick April Fools joke? If you believed it for even a fraction of a second with all the pain and sorrow that comes with that news flooding your mind, you would think so.

By the same token was the pre-April Fools Collegian of last Friday insensitive, senseless and sick. As a freshman, unaware of the April First tradition, I picked up my daily paper and glanced at the headline. I nearly became physically sick as I read on to the story [compiled by wires as the byline said] that told of a grave and monumental event in the Mid-east, namely the dropping of a nuclear bomb.

I could not sit through my classes and for an hour and a half I wandered around, distressed to learn of 150,000 deaths, with surely millions more to follow. I read words that Begin, Sadat and Arafat were quoted as saying. I couldn't believe it. Why wasn't the campus in an uproar? Don't people know the phantasmical repercussions this event would incur? Where could an international incident of these proportions end? I could not imagine for it was too draining both emotionally and physically.

As I had to know more I returned to the Student Union for an off campus paper. Groups of students were standing in disbelief. Someone assured us that it was all a joke. Those 150,000 people come back to life and a nuclear catastrophe became just a nightmare.

Slowly relief came over me, but much more quickly did I become enraged at the Collegian editors. Didn't they realize that April Fools wasn't March 31st? Didn't they realize that there are foreign students, including Israelis and Arabs on this campus, who may not understand the full nature and find the humor in this prank? Didn't they realize that the Massachusetts Music All State festival was on campus and people from all over the state were reading the paper? Didn't they realize that there is enough war to write about without creating more? Didn't they realize that this or any other internationally explosive issue is not a joking matter and that it involves real people [imagine that, real human beings very much like you and me?]. Obviously they did not for had they realized all this, in view of their responsibility to so many diverse people they could not in good conscience have printed such a horrifying tale.

I hope that people have learned something from this inconceivable folly, but more than that I hope that we shall never read of an incident like this, anywhere on the globe.

Imagine Richard Nixon returning to the presidency of the United States. Frightening thought. To people in the Student Government Association the local equivalent of this horrendous scenario occured this past Wednesday: the return of Mr. Brian DeLima.

Brian was speaker of the senate from the fall of1976 until the fall of 1977, and on Wednesday he returned to that position.

The analogy to Nixon is at least two-fold in its application. First of all everyone knows the famous Nixon statement: "I am not a crook." On several occasions our Mr. DeLima has also had to make similar statements. As speaker, several questions arose over his morals and political ethics on many occasions. Presently the Student Attorney General's office has DeLima under investigation for two separate complaints of major significance. The first allegation concerns Brian's action of removing a letter (about himself and to the editor), from the desk of a professional staff member. Involved in an ensuing argument, Brian allegedly threatened the professional staff person, who subsequently charged him with stealing personal property and of harassment as outlined in the student code of conduct.

The bad blood between Brian and the professional staff is far greater than any one individual incident. The Legal Services Office addressed the problems of working with DeLima in a memo to outgoing speaker Pat Whelan. Among other things that the memo mentioned was the request for any one but DeLima to serve as a liason to their office, because of his highly offensive manner.

DeLima is also accused in the other court case of making over $300.00 worth of phone calls on the Senate lines to his home turf, Hawaii. Brian agrees that he made the calls and after a period of time paid for them by not accepting his weekly salary as speaker. This payback scheme is questionable because no one seems to know when checks were not accepted and if in fact DeLima performed work that he didn't get paid for.

One who readily abuses his position for self gain and who by paying back the system claims to have done no wrong is showing his true colors of deceit and dishonesty.

If Brian is such a destructive force and a negative influence how could he have won re-election to the speaker's position? Like the new Nixon of the 1968 presidential campaign

Boycott Stevens

To the Editor:

A representative from the J.P. Stevens Company will be recruiting on the Amherst campus of the University of Massachusetts Thursday, April 6. The community should be aware of a few facts about the company. There is a national consumer boycott going on of J.P. Stevens products because of its record of labor law violations.

J.P. Stevens is the second largest textile manufacturing company in the United States. It operates 85 plants with 45,000 workers mostly in North and South Carolina. As attested by its record with the National Labor Relations Board, Stevens is the number one labor law violator in the country. It has harassed, threatened, and fired workers who have shown interest in unions. It has refused to negotiate with workers in plants in which unions have been voted in. The Stevens Company is in violation of the occupational Safety and Health regulations; cotton dust levels in the mills are three times higher than government standards allow. Cotton dust causes brown lung disease, which disables thousands of textile workers each year.

Stevens has discriminated against women and minority group members in its employment practices. The J. P. Stevens Company is presently under a nationwide court injunction, due to their record of labor law abuse, which will bring fines of up to $100,000 for each violation and $5000 each day the violation continues.

We urge all concerned working people and students in the area to participate in a demonstration to protest the unethical business practices and the suppressing of human rights. The 45,000 people working in J.P. Stevens plants need your support!

'Straw Dogs' vicious pornography

To the Editor:

Since I have already injected myself into this peculiar mode of campus discourse once, I feel it necessary to mention the showing of another film which is important to consider in any discussion of pornography. Sam Peckinpaw's vicious macho fantasy STRAW DOGS was exhibited for the community's edification last Saturday night. It concerns a meek milk-mannered mathematician on sabbatical with his wife; when he offends a group of locals in the small village in Wales in which he is staying, they retaliate by "damaging his property" — raping his wife.

This affront to his male image afforts a miraculous transformation: he becomes a savage, brutal, murderous beast. At the end of the carnage men lie dead through a grand guignol of sadistic maneuvers. And the worst thing about the film is that it explicitly applauds this action, indeed offers it as the only solution. It is also worth mentioning that his wife, after struggling with her assailant, is portrayed as truly enjoying the experience, underlining the virulent myth that all women secretly enjoy being raped.

I saw STRAW DOGS when it first was released and I was appalled — first at the ugliness of the fantasy with Peckinpaw, famous now for this, was unravelling, and second at the audience which responded with hoots, hollers of encouragement, and growls, as Hoffman systematically disposes of his enemies. If there was a porno film showing on campus last week, this was it. And it's only rated "R".

eLima debacle

Bian packaged himself and his platform as smething new and better. He pledged to can up the payroll explosion of previous aministrations, but if one looks at the psonalities he is criticizing they will be lking at DeLima and his political cronies. Sce DeLima's first reign payroll expenses hve more than doubled. If one examines wo comprise a large chunk of these increases you can see a lot of Brian's friends ad allies on the payroll sheets. The seaker's staff, especially for Intersession ad Summersession periods laid heavier and hvier burdens on the Student Activities Tx budget.

> One who readily abuses his position for self gain and who by paying back the system claims to have done no wrong is showing his true colors of deceit and dishonesty.

The true parallel to Nixon's 1968 campaign a the secret plans to end the respective wrs. Nixon ran on a plan to end the Vietnam w; a plan that only needed small tinkering a a strong leader to implement it. DeLima h a plan too. In his speech running for saker last Wednesday he repeated several ties, "I have a plan," and waved a bunch of per to the Senate. His plan was developed by a handful of loyal aides. DeLIma promises that in the third week of his new administration he will reorganize Student Government into a vital force. Brian claims he has learned from his past mistakes and that this time, "things will be different." Anyone who thinks that they and a few other people can present a workable plan, produced in a vacuum, is only engaging in a demogogic form of intellectual masturbation.

Brian is the personification of many of the inherent problems of the S.G.A. The last time he ran for election to the senate was in 1976, more than two years ago. Originally he was appointed as the Commuter Collective representative for one night to get elected speaker, although at the time he was a resident and co-senator of J.Q.A. dormitory and really was not representative of the commuter constituency. This time around he was a senator due to a clause in the constitution that gives a seat to past speakers. Is this representative of any constituency other than the good ole' boys of the 4th floor of the Student Union? Brian believes that his centralized control and plans are the best thing possible for Student Government. What about giving elected representatives (especially area governments) and students in general a significant part in any reorganization planning or in the significant decisions affecting their lives?

If anyone cared enough to read the staff box on the editorial page of the April Fool's edition and the several other references to DeLima and company in that issue of the Collegian, one could see a Shakespearean addage come to life: "What is most often said in jest, is most often true."

Voice needed

Today in the State House hearings are being held on a bill that calls for student representation on Massachusetts State College and University Building Authorities. This bill would allow students a powerful voice in something which directly affects our lives and needs the support of the UMass community.

As recent Collegian reports have pointed out, the state of our residence halls and the campus center is a sorry one. In addition, the administration is involved in funding practices that appear illegal, thus jeopardizing the whole university building system. A large reason for this problem is that the buildings at UMass were not as much built for the benefit of the students as for the benefit of the bond holders and the banks which underwrite the system. To cite just one example, the students at UMass pay for the dormitories through bonds which their rents pay off. But after we are done paying off the bond holders the building then revert back to the state. Not only do we have no control over the residence halls while they are being planned and while we are occupying them, but when we are done paying for them we hand them over to the state. This isn't right, it isn't logical, and its typical of the way the students at this campus are being made to pay through the nose because we had no say in the way this university is run.

This bill, with its provision for real voting membership for students, is by no means a new idea; SMU has such a plan at this moment. Judging from the anti-educational bias of the governor and the legislator though, it will probably be a fight to get it passed. It is in all of our interests to make our voices heard, so please write your representatives in the state house in support of House Bill 2721.

★ Apology

deeply concerned about the Middle East situation, especially the many who are working to bring a lasting peace to the area, and those who actually have relatives living in that part of the world. The story was simply too convincing, and for that we must apologize.

Taking the blame and apologizing for our mistakes obviously cannot make the mistakes go away. But we hope that from this incident will come a positive learning experience, both within the Collegian office and in the community as a whole. Certainly the response we have gotten has us thinking about our sense of journalistic ethics. And the fact that the outrage over the issue came from people of both pro- and anti-Israeli political perspectives suggests that the activists involved are less interested in antagonizing one another than they are in arriving at a resolution to the problem.

At this point, we can only say we're sorry, and thank those of you who took the time to remind us of the "view from outside."

That's entertainment

By ELLEN PLAUSKY

"Overture, curtain, lights, this is it, the night of nights, and oh, what hites we'll hit, on with the show, this is it!!!" When I heard that as a member of Northeast Area Government, I'd have to attend the Student Senate Electoral Convention last Wednesday, I almost started humming the above Bugs Bunny theme song to myself.

I had always heard rumors of any Senate meeting being a circus, and felt grateful at having this long been able to avoid them. But since I was obligated to go to the convention, I thought I'd write about what it was really like.

With I.D. in hand, to prove that I was a delegate, (everything is done legally in the Senate, you know) I and 14 other members of NEAG gained admittance to the Hatch, or as it was that night; Convention Hall.

A circus atmosphere was obvious with paper streamers and balloons all over the place. All the convention officials were wearing their "BENB" tee-shirts. And the faction (isn't that a nice political term?) from Southwest tried to make the place appear more convention-like as they proudly held a placard with "Southwest" on it. The night was young.

Out-going (but not if these conventions continue) SGA co-president John Hite presided over the convention by first, wrongly identifying where the different factions were seated. It looked like it would be a long night.

Although the night was long, with a lot of voting on rules that we would later vote with, debates, and questions to the candidates, the night had a few instances probably designed to keep us awake between games of hangman.

Susan Birmingham, a co-candidate for SGA president tried to get support for a motion to have another popular election with only two candidates on the ballot for about half an hour, before Hite pointed out that the motion was unconstitutional. I suggest that if Birmingham and her co-candidate Barenburg ever win the election, that she finds a copy of the SGA constitution and reads it, at least once.

Although the Hatch bar was closed for the night, it just meant that alcohol couldn't be bought there. It was a BYOB party, excuse me, convention.

Almost constant roll calls were taken to determine exactly how many delegates had gotten fed up with the convention and left. I must point out here that all 15 members of the NEAG faction, dedicated, and chained to their chairs, remained the whole night.

Finally at about 1:45 a.m. the first and only vote of the night was taken. Although no one received the necessary electoral votes to win, at least something happened. The write-in candidacy of Bishop and Bob Dion joined Herb Tyson and Shelly Gordon on the next ballot by getting more votes than Barenburg and Birmingham.

With it now 2:30, it was general consensus, of those of us still awake, to adjourn until tonight. And so, all of us dedicated Area Government members and Student Senators will once again inhabit the Hatch in an effort to choose your presidents. Wish us luck and Lambrusco; we're going to need it.

AHEAD THERE ARE MOUNTAINS THAT MUST BE CROSSED TO REACH BAKATUR'S CASTLE: THE DEMON CRAG.
DENNIS AND THE OTHERS REALIZE THEY MUST BE PRISONERS OF BAKATUR
FOR THEY ARE BEING TAKEN DIRECTLY TOWARD THE CASTLE, WHICH IS STILL MANY MILES AWAY.
KRUSTIL WHISPERS TO DENNIS
THESE GOBLINS SHOULD BE MORE QUIET, BUT WHY?
BECAUSE THERE ARE STORM GIANTS IN THE AREA, AND THEY DON'T LIKE TRESPASSERS!
WHAT HAPPENS IF THEY GET MAD?
NOTHING MUCH THEY THROW ROCKS
AS IF ON CUE....
A BOULDER IS THROWN, AND ONE GOBLIN FALLS TO HIS DEATH!
THE GOBLINS BREAK INTO A RUN, PULLING DENNIS AND THE OTHERS BEHIND THEM...
AS MORE BOULDERS ARE THROWN.

Your Birthday

MONDAY, APRIL 3

Born today, you are precise, methodical, and tidy, inclined to be more disturbed by appearances than by inner qualities. You will have to be careful not to be taken in by the exterior; try to see what's beneath. Those close to you may annoy you with their attempts to guard you against your shortcomings; it is the price you pay for being appealing and seemingly innocent.

You are a loyal and loving friend. You may do yourself a disservice through clinging to a friendship that the other person has already decided is over. You should develop enough independence to deal with such disappointments; until then your loyalty may cause you much grief.

You may not be a commander of men, but you are the kind of follower on whom the success of an operation depends. You anticipate needs, take authority on yourself when no one else will, and provide the backup power that gets the job done.

Also born on this date: Washington Irving, American writer; Bernard Parent, hockey ace; Donny Anderson, football star.

To see what is in store for you tomorrow, find your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

TUESDAY, APRIL 4

ARIES(March 21-April 19) — Fondness for company may hinder introspection. Self-knowledge is essential.

TAURUS(April 20-May 20) — Difficulties at home distract you from using your authority at work.

GEMINI(May 21-June 20) — Examine your conscience before making demands on others about their behavior.

CANCER(June 21-July 22) — You may have trouble settling financial obligations. Help and security arrive later.

LEO(July 23-Aug.22) — Flattery must not turn your head. Continue the direction and degree of work.

VIRGO(Aug.23-Sept.22) — Money-making prospects appear this morning; examine the possibility of loss, too.

LIBRA(Sept.23-Oct.22) — A partial apology is better than none. Don't be a stickler for ceremony.

SCORPIO(Oct.23-Nov.21) — Care in choosing companions early today will be unexpectedly rewarded later.

SAGITTARIUS(Nov.22-Dec.21) — Business success may necessitate a change in plans. Make it quickly.

CAPRICORN(Dec.22-Jan.19) — You are drawn toward the luxurious today. Don't overspend in PM.

AQUARIUS(Jan.20-Feb.18) — Very little ability will be demanded of you today. Use spare time wisely.

PISCES(Feb.19-March 20) — A need to accomplish more than usual brings new activities early today. Don't overdo later.

Trackmen place second in weekend meet at BU

By KEVIN MCCAFFREY
Collegian Staff

BOSTON — The UMass track team which appeared to lay dormant in the winter season, wasted no time to blossom in, the spring as the Minutemen finished second in a five team field at Boston Univeristy Saturday. Reigning New England track king Northeastern won the contest with 110 points, followed by UMass with 64, BU with 62, Fitchburg in fourth with 32, and Brandeis fifth with 16.

The UMass victory over BU avenges two indoor season defeats at the hands of the Terriers. Most notable is the Yankee Conference meet where BU snared the runnerup slot away from the Minutemen.

UMass started out on the right foot with strong performances in several early program events. The javelin, long jump, triple jump and high jump combined for over third of the UMass final score.

Don Dowden and Eric Hardy from Northeastern were deadlocked after the preliminary competition in the high jump as both jumpers had cleared 6'8" and missed on all three attempts at 6'10". In the jumpoff Hardy cleared 6'9" to become the outright winner as Dowden settled for second place. Competing in his first collegiate meet, Paul Hurton of UMass earned fifth place with a leap of 6'4".

Minuteman Brady Mayer continued his trend of successful performances in the triple jump as he recorded a leap of 44'8½", good for second place behind winner Carl Brown of Northeastern. UMass Freshman Keith Alston was fourth with a hop skip and jump of 42' 10 3/ 4".

The mile run, the glamour event of the track and field program, proved its namesake as the four lap event saw the lead change as often as the New England weather. Minutemen Steve MacDougall spurted into the lead on the final turn but fell prey to the kicks of veterans Lech and Spinney of Northeastern. Lech won the event in 4:16.1, with MacDougall 20 yards back in 4:19. Peter Descamps, who held the lead after two laps, finished three seconds back in fourth.

The only double winner in the competition was Jim Farnsworth from Fitchburg. His 100 yard and 220 yard dash victories highlighted two events the Minutemen failed to score in.

Junior Paul King and Freshman Dan Kelly added 12 points to the Minutemen final tally with their performances in the hurdling competition. King napped NU's Brown in the 120 high hurdles to claim second place behind winner Tom Mahan of BU. Kelly finished fourth in that event and later more than adequately complemented his effort with a victory in the 440 intermediate hurdles. Senior captain John Richards was one second back for the runnerup position with a time of 56.2.

"Paul King, Danny Kelly and Paul Enis, who didn't make the trip today, give us good strength above and beyond expectations in the hurdles," said coach Ken O'Brien. "The highs and intermediates look to be a future strong point in our program."

O'Brien cited one performance as deserving of the word "outstanding." All sophomore Mickey Baugh of UMass did was beat everyone in the 440 but British Olympian Glen Cohen from BU. Baugh's time of 49.8 was his best ever, while losing to Cohen by only .6 seconds.

"Mickey looked so good in practice," commented O'Brien. "This is by far his best performance to date."

Baugh teamed with Fran O'Keefe (5th 880), Joe Martens (4th 880), and Rich Thompson to win the final event of the day's program, the mile relay. This time it was co-captain Martens turn to battle with BU's Cohen.

It appears inevitable that anytime the Terriers and Minutemen meet, a clash between the teams star quarter milers will ensue. In this confrontation, it was Martens given the baton and the lead on the anchorleg, with Cohen, BU's final leg, several yards behind. Martens held off Cohen's effort to register the event and meet victory over BU.

"We're showing signs of progress," said O'Brien. "By the time the UMass Relays roll around, we'll collect very solidly."

★ Batmen split four

It was during that game that the strong ocean breezes made the UMass defenders look like a bunch of circus acrobatics. Every pop-up and flyball became an adventure, with the Minutemen diving and leaping as if the ball were playing tricks. Four pop-ups fell while others produced close calls.

In respect for the Minutemen cause, they did manage to turn in some defensive gems. The number one star has to go to Mike Stockley the second basemen. With the game tied at one all against Siena he stopped a possible two run play by making a sprawling diving grab of a ball intended for the hole in right field. While on his knees he threw out the runner at first. At the time it enabled the Minutemen to go into extra innings, an opportunity they could not cash in.

Ed Skribiski showed why he is valuable even when he is in a slump, playing solidly at short with one standout play in particular. With UMass up 2-0 over SMU (their first meeting) he prevented a potential rally snaring a line drive, timing his leap perfectly and then all in one motion doubling the runner off first base.

for three games came alive with 16 hits, five for extra bases (in their other three games they had only four extra bases combined). Leading the barrage were Doug Aylward with four hits (3 runs and 1 RBI), John Gallagher with 2 doubles and 2 singles (3 runs and 4 RBI's), Dave Oleksak and Ed Skribiski with 3 RBI's apiece, and Mike McEvilly who hit UMass's lone home run of the tourney.

Unfortunately, when they needed the hitting the most, they did not have it. This caused coach Dick Bergquist some concern. "To be honest the opposing pitching wasn't as good as we made them look. Our hitting was the most discouraging factor," he said.

The coach was encouraged by much of the pitching though. Doug Welenc who went the distance for the win over SMU continued to display the impressive form he had in Florida, giving up only 5 hits while striking out 7. Tom Nigro went five good innings against Siena giving Bergquist reason to believe he will return to the style that made him the top hurler on the staff. Bergquist was also pleased with the job that Chris Collins demonstrated in the losing cause against SMU.

Sig Ep wins final

GREENFIELD — T. J. O'Brien scored two goals to lead sixth-seeded Sig Ep to a 3-1 upset over top-seeded Breen's Bruins in the finals of the UMass Hockey Club playoffs here last night.

O'Brien scored his first goal 30 seconds into the first period. His second, a third period powerplay goal, gave Sig Ep a 3-0 lead which held up until the Bruins spoiled Steve Dow's shut out bid with two and a half minutes left in the game.

Louis Uliani's second period goal was the eventual game-winner. See tomorrow's Collegian for more details on the UMass Hockey Club's playoffs.

Women's track team debuts today

By DAVE RODMAN
Collegian Staff

The UMass women's track team will make its spring debut today at 3 p.m. when the University of New Hampshire visits the Llewelyn Derby Track complex.

"Pretty much everyone's running, and everyone's healthy," said UMass Coach Charlotte Lettis. "I think it'll be a good meet — it won't be widely unbalanced.

"UNH has a good crew of sprinters and hurdlers, and they have a real good runner. Anyway, teams like UNH and UVM are getting stronger — the meets are going to start getting closer, and interest will get stronger."

The Minutewomen, meanwhile, will dress 32 athletes for the meet, including a "real strong weight group and some good javelin throwers."

"This is new for UMass," said Lettis. "The team's forte is usually its distance runners and middle-distance runners, but this year we have five javelin throwers and at least two people in all the other events."

A full program of 17 events, including four relays, five field events and eight other track events will be contested.

"People are going to be coming off the indoor season looking to run a good time," said Lettis of her group's first chance to run at Derby, one of the fastest tracks in the East. "They also have to get used to the outdoor track. I'm just worried it may be windy down there."

The UMass team will field a mixed bag of veteran performers and talented newcomers. State high school champs Cathy Harrington (high jump) and Karen Snow (javelin) add strength to those events. Oregon exchange student Diane Crawford has also impressed Lettis and Coach Ken O'Brien with her spear tossing prowess.

Newcomer Kelly Butler has impressed in the discus and shot put. The versatile Harrington will also run the 100 meter high hurdles.

The two mile relay will have four milers — Debbie Farmer, Barb Callanan, Priscilla Wilson and Tina Francario. The half mile will present the triple threat of Laurie Wolf, Cindi Martin and Captain Bonnie Bukowski; while steady soph Diana Sealy is always a scoring threat in the quarter and relays.

EXPONENTIAL, MY DEAR WATSON

If you have at least two years of graduate or undergraduate education ahead, and you keep getting clues that your money is running short, then a two-year Air Force ROTC scholarship may be the solution.

Currently we're seeking young men and women who would like to serve their nation as Air Force Officers. Consequently, if you're majoring in a selected, technical/non-technical, scientific, nursing, or premedical field, or can qualify for pilot, navigator, or missile training, then you may be eligible for a two-year Air Force ROTC scholarship. The scholarship pays your tuition, lab fees, (plus incidental fees), books, and $100 per month tax free. And even if you don't qualify for the two-year scholarship, you still receive the $100 a month while enrolled in the Air Force ROTC two-year program.

What do we ask in return? That you serve America at least four years as an Air Force officer. Your Air Force ROTC counselor has the details and qualification requirements. Check it out. It might even make your education finances seem elementary.

Gymwomen place 8th at Nationals

By LAURA BASSETT
Collegian Staff

The women's gymnastics team traveled to Seattle over the weekend to compete in the AIAW gymnastics championships. They returned home with an eighth place finishing among sixteen teams with a total of 138.70 points. Penn State University, the Eastern Regional champs won the team title with a score of 147.70.

The gymwomen were seeded twelveth in the competition based on their regional performance and five of their top regular season performances. The team competed in the first rotation on Friday and held on to upset Southern Illinois University and Michigan State University which were seeded ahead of them to gain the eighth place slot.

"I think the team worked very hard and if we had done the same job in a later rotation I think we could have finished in the top six," said Coach Virginia Evans. "We've had a difficult season with injuries, battles with the flu and had to count on a lot of freshmen to fill the slots, but I'm really proud of the team," added Evans.

Seniors Stephanie Jones, Susan Cantwell and Debby Law competed for the last time as Minutewomen at the University of Washington. Jones was the "outstanding individual performer" according to Evans. Jones was the only Minutewoman to qualify for the individual title competition by finishing in the top ten on Friday. Jones qualified on the beam and just missed qualifying on the bars as she finished eleventh. She totaled 36.20 points for four events to finish thirteenth in the all around competition.

Cantwell competed "very strongly" and turned in the highest scoring performance with a 9.15 on the floor exercise. Evans felt Cantwell was underscored on the balance beam but "overall Susan turned in a very consistent, strong performance." Cantwell finished 20th in the all-around competition with a four event total of 35.30.

Law competed in her specialty, the uneven parallel bars, for the final time. She had a very good set but had a minor problem landing her new dismount, which hurt her score. "Debbie still made a strong contribution to the team and will be missed next season," said Evans.

Karen Hemberger finished 38th in the all around division. Hemberger narrowly lost the Eastern vaulting title to Penn State's Ann Carr, but couldn't come up with as strong an effort at nationals. Hemberger received a very respectable 9.10 for her Suktahara vault but did not qualify for the individual title.

Freshman Karen Clemente was the Minutewomen's fourth all around competitor. She excelled on the floor, where she scored her highest performance of the season with an 8.85. Clemente looks like a strong contributor to future UMass gymnastics efforts.

Also competing for the gymwomen were Laurie Knapp on the beam, Cheryl Morrier on the floor exercise and vault, Colleen Thorton on vaulting and beam, and Debbie Smith on the floor.

"The team has the distinction of being the only team to beat Penn State this year," commented Coach Evans. "It is, of course, unfortunate we could not built on our early good start, but even with the ups and downs, I feel we have had a very positive season."

And for next year? "I expect more of the same strong effort," concluded Evans.

Gorillas lose opener

By RUSS SMITH
Collegian Staff

Somewhere in a book on cliches are written (1) them's the breaks, (2) that's the way the cookie crumbles, and (3) that's the way the ball bounces. For purposes of this story, we shall touch upon cliche number three, for in Saturday's encounter between the Cornell and UMass lacrosse teams, the ball bounced mostly the Big Red way, as the Ivy League squad dropped Garber's Gorillas in their season premiere, 17-7.

"The problem with the final score" said Coach Dick Garber, "is that people will look at it and say 'they blew us out.' If you look at the statistics, it was just about even. They got those four rebound goals — if you get one of those a game you're doing good — and three man-up goals (similar to a powerplay)."

Even you non-math majors out there can figure out that that adds up to seven of Cornell's total output.

Not taking anything away from Cornell, the top rated team in the country; they played well, and used their decisive speed to many times beat UMass to the ball. In fact, from the opening faceoff, Cornell's Tom Morino broke in on UMass goalie Don Goldstein who had to be awake in making the save and keeping the Red machine from an early goal at the ten-second mark.

Cornell did connect at the 4:02 mark of the first quarter when a loose ball lying just outside the UMass net was scooped up by Marino and flipped into the strings. After the Red went up by two on a Joe Taylor to Steve Page score, UMass cut the lead in half — Brooks Sweet putting the Minutemen on the board, tossing an elusive rebound (Cornell goalie John Griffin had bobbled Pit Martin's turnaround shot) across the goal line at the 7-minute mark of the quarter.

To the delight of more than 6,000 Cornell fans, their boys in red (supposedly someone had 'five fingered' their home white uniforms) combated this apparent UMass comeback by firing in five unanswered goals, including a last-second score. After one quarter Cornell led 7-1, and though UMass was not out of it (with three quarters to go) they certainly had their work cut out for them.

UMass got two second period goals (Mike Lewis from Dave Martin; Ed Murray unassisted) but Cornell countered with five, leading to the score of Cornell 12 — UMass 3.

The hard-hitting, reminiscent of past seasons, but somewhat nonexistent in the first half of this contest, returned to the repertoire of UMass' style of play in the second half. Meanwhile the team, which had every right to lie back, play dead, and ride the clock until bus departure time, fought hard to get back in the game.

With the defense sticking with Cornell's attackmen, roaming the vicinity nearby the UMass crease, the Red-men were forced into a slower style of play, resembling a version of basketball's four-corner stall, only they weave, about fifteen yards in front of the UMass goal — which wasn't doing Cornell much good.

In the third period, Murray picked up a couple more goals, both unassisted (one, in a man-up situation) before Dave Martin, with two Cornell defenseman hanging all over him, flipped one past the post. Unfortunately Cornell had two goals in the period, and headed into the last round of action with a 14-6 lead.

UMass' final tally came in the fourth when Lee Vosburgh passed off to Sweet.

Batmen in weekend split

Collegian Staff

NORTH DARTMOUTH — Siena College from New York surprised the favorites University of Massachusetts, and host Southeastern Mass. University to win the third annual SMU Invitational baseball tournament this weekend.

Siena College in their first year of division I play, entered the double elimination tourney with only a 1-5 record, yet topped the four team competition with a 3-1 mark beating SMU, UMass, and the University of Vermont all once.

The Minutemen, the two time defending champions, had to settle for a split in their weekend action, with a 2-2 record. Their inability to put together consistent hitting and pitching in the same game was their downfall.

Anyone watching the Minutemen over the four games witnessed a Jekyll and Hyde transformation that would have made Robert Louis Stevenson proud. Their first two games were characterized by good defense and fine pitching, winning 2-1 over SMU, while losing to Siena in 12 innings 3-1. Unfortunately the offense was colder than the frigid winds that continually swept off the ocean, producing only 6 hits in each contest.

Day two saw UMass completely break down defensively in their rematch to the Corsairs of SMU, a game they eventually lost in the last inning 2-1. But day two also saw the rediscovery of the art of hitting, as the Minutemen flexed their muscle, outslugging Vermont 18-10 in the consolation game.

Getting 'ahead'

Once upon a time there was a little, little boy. In fact, he was so little that no one could ever see him. But alas, he possessed some incredible magical powers that his little, little mother told him he was born with, just before she was crushed to death by a high-stepping ant. He was told that the first two wishes that he asked for during the course of his lifetime would be spontaneously granted, but after that, his powers would slowly disintergrate into nothing. So he decided to use up one of his wishes after his mother passed away. He wished that he would become something bigger, and very, very smart. So before he could say "Kareem Abdul-Jabbar", he was transformed into a head. That's right, a head. No arms, legs, or body, just your typical, average head.

So one day last week he decided to get some advice as to what he should use his second wish for. So he rolled into the Bluewall, and to his surprise some very famous sports celebrities were there. So he asked them all the same question, "If you only had one wish, what would you wish for?"

Muhammed Ali: "A very large mirror. Ah'm so pretty that I need to keep myself in good spirits by watching myself floatin', dancin', and prancin' on a continuous basis. But if I were you, little fella, I'd just wish for a pint of cocoanut oil, to polish yourself up so that you can find a job as a double for Joe Fraaazierr."

Reggie Jackson: "What a dumb question. A case of Reggie bars! What else could bring anyone (including myself) closer to me, everybody's idol? But don't feel bad if you don't get your case. There's more to life than Reggie bars. Here, take this picture of me as I watch your dream come true, you lucky dog you. Oh, excuse me, I mean you lucky head."

Al McGuire: "That's easy. A portable 1-3-1 zone defense. Hell, the guys could follow me wherever I went. Fr'instance, suppose that I wanted to "scoop" a woman at this here Bluewall. What kind of girl would turn me down if I had Rick Robey, Kyle Macy, and Jack "goose" Givens as an encore? Besides, if Dick Enberg continues to be Dick Enberg, I'm going to need some help in the broadcasting booth."

Conrad Dobler: "A half-gallon of AB negative blood. I just love the stuff. It's extraordinarily delicious! I used to be strictly a type O man, but it was bottled in cans, and my teeth kept getting stuck on the rims. This new stuff even tastes much better, and besides, I like the easy-opening tops!"

Charlie Finley: "Please kid, I wish that you looked like Bowie Kuhn, so that I could step on your face!"

Vida Blue: "Please kid, I wish you looked like Charlie Finley. Then I would pick you up and take you bowling."

Bowie Kuhn: "Listen kid, I wish Vida Blue would retire from baseball. Then I wouldn't have to waste my time vetoing all his near-trades and could get down to these funky sounds of rock n' roll. I hear some new guy Chuck Berry, is starting out with some crazy sounds that drive me wild!"

Derek Sanderson: "Broads. Plenty of broads. That, and then a pair of training skates."

The head was more confused than ever. He simply couldn't decide on what to wish for. But after he downed a few more brews, he decided on his wish; "I just wish that I was a UMass student," he exclaimed. And in the blink of an eyelash, he was. So he decided to take a walk around the campus. But as he was strolling by the southwestern portion of the campus, he was hit by a flying cubesteak ala Dining Commons that was launched from 21st floor of one of the towers. He died instantly.

The moral of the story: quit while you're ahead.

Presumptious Predictions... Dave Rodman, who is resigning as sports editor of the Collegian to accept the same status at the Amherst Record, is an even-money favorite to do a great job at his new position. Dave is a dedicated, hard-working individual and will be missed by all of us here at the Collegian office... Allen Ripley will blossom into a 15 game winner for the Bosox in his rookie season. Ripley has been selected by Don Zimmer as his fourth starter, joining El Tiante, Dennis Eckersly and Mike Torrez... Where is Bill "hanging curve" Lee going to fit in?.... Finally, best wishes for success to Moses Williams, ex-UMass footballer who is trying to make the San Diego Chargers squad on June 23. Moses is dedicating himself to making the squad, and if he keeps up his training schedule, we might see him in Foxboro, when the Chargers battle the Patriots.

The late Reverend Dr. Martin Luther King, born 1929, assassinated 1968

Martin Luther King Jr's Death: A Commentary

By TONY CRAYTON
AFRO-AM SOCIETY

This week a number of events are commemorating Martin Luther King Jr. It is demandatory that we not only reflect on how he lived but how he died. Countless number of families are without sons and daughters, fathers, and mothers because the United States government decided that they were undesirable and should be removed from society.

Fred Hampton the twenty one year old chairman of the Chicago Panthers may have made a very desirable father and husband. He can't now for he was murdered in his bed at 4:00 a.m. while he slept on December 4, 1969. One of his closest associates was an FBI infiltrator.

Malcolm X left a family of four children and wife because the U.S. government through the FBI and the cooperation of paid Black degenerates to pull the trigger, decided that he was too near to a "Messiah" role and must be eliminated. His bodyguard standing armed next to him as a paid informer for the FBI.

Both Malcolm X and Martin Luther King Jr. were victims of a "security stripping" which is a method employed by the FBI and other related agencies to expose a person to assassination. According to Wayne Chastain a veteran reporter on the King case for eight years, stated this past year in the Boston Globe that nearly all of the King security was called away at the time of his assassination.

Ed Redditt a black Memphis police detective in charge of protecting King was removed from his post across the street...a former FBI agent of 25 years who had worked with Director J. Edgar Hoover... "was also removed from his post as Director of the Memphis Police Department. Mark Lane, Redditts assistant was removed as well as a four man security force set up by a local black organization infiltrated by a degenerate paid FBI informant also was removed from their post at the time of the murder. They even made sure of the removal of the only two Black Firemen across from the Hotel where King stayed. Their transfers were ordered by the police department. The police throughout the country were ordered by the F.B.I.

The purpose as they stated in the Cointel Pro documents of 1967 was to expose, disrupt, or otherwise neutralize..

They targeted 41 cities for "Racial intelligence", from Tampa Florida to Houston Texas and Boston, Massachusetts. They were targeted to: one, prevent the coalitions of militant nationalists groups..., two "prevent the rise of a messiah "who could unify and electrify...and in this case they were referring to Malcolm X. However immediately following that they mention Martin Luther King as "less of a threat because of his age...(he) could be a very real contender for this position (messiah) should he abandon his supposed "obedience" to "white liberal doctrines" (nonviolence) and embrace black nationalism...(he) has the necessary charisma to be a real threat in this way." Their third goal was to "prevent violence on the part of Black Nationalist groups." The fourth was to prevent so-called "militant" Black Nationalist group" and leaders from gaining respectability...first, the responsible Negro community, second they must be discredited to the white community and to liberals...third these groups must be discredited in the eyes of Negro radicals...."

Across the country the police, the Army, the FBI and numerous other controlling agencies and parlamentaries are poising to target individuals and groups. If Martin Luther King nonviolent movement for peace was too extreme for them what do they think Black is about. The Philadelphia police department took one million dollars for infiltration and surveillance of just one family commune (see last weeks Nummo News) who they now at this moment have under seige. They have sealed off five blocks in an attempt to starve them out. If they invest this much time and money on one minor and unheard of group what do you suppose they are doing now.

One of the most peaceful men living, Dick Gregory, was targeted and they attempted to bring in underworld hit men to eliminate him. Are you targeted?

It is about time we started looking at why so many are dying as well as living. We need to look at ourselves to see how they can use our own against us. Get out this political stupor; your communities are overburdened; the entire existence of our organizations are at a point of extinction. For years, 4 generations of ancestors, murdered and degraded by slavery and oppression, look to you to take a stand. Take heed of the approach of eternity, MLK died because we weren't prepared to protect him. Who is next? Maybe you.

N.B.S.A. Demonstrates against South Africa in front of White House

BILAL TARIQ ABDUL-HAQQ

On Saturday, April 1, 1978, a demonstration and rally took place in Washington D.C. on the sidewalk in front of the controversial White House. This event was for the elimination of oppression and imperialism throughout the world. The demonstrators commenced with a circular walk which would grow at each passing revolution. Such illustrious and clear-cutting phrases were propelled toward all open ears. Such phrases included, "The people united will never be defeated" and also, "White man's hand off the African's land". Spectators would no longer sit and watch and were magnatized by the consciousness raising students who travelled to Washington from as far as southern Florida and to the eastern part of Boston.

Immediately afterwards, the demonstration moved across the street to an open park so that the guest speakers would be able to be heard. As the stage was being set for the explosion, as the podium was being warmed by piercing vibrations being directed by such illustrious warriors as sister poetiss Sonia Sanchez, Askia Muhammad Toure etc, the classroom on anti-oppression and anti-imperialism was about to commence.

The podium brought on John Makintini, representative for the National African Conference of South Africa. Mr. Makintini spoke on how "We are not trying to integrate or to share the same toilets, but for the seizure and elimination of the Vorster regime."

Mr. Makintini also added, "The Vorster regime is the number one enemy in the country." Immediately following was the illustrious poetess Sonia Sanchez, whose small frame and gentle voice would bring out positive messages much louder than the mighty roar of the lion. Extrapolating on the 60's and 70's, Sonia Sanchez sparked the crowd as she sang her poetry with the theme being "racism separation and apartheid."

As the listening crowd sat with poise and order, one by one, speakers with big hearts would clearly bring the people who have strayed from reality, with knowledge that would open the eyes of the blind, unplug the ears of the deaf and would give back "sound" to the dumb.

Brothers such as Oyango, coordinator of the prison system; Monzuwati, representative of South Africa; Mr. Nkrumah, an educator who introduced clear-cutting words for the advancement of justice in the land; Henry Sylver, representative of SCLC; the Pyramid Poets, doctors of metaphors and similies who demonstrated their understanding on the knowledge of the capitalist one-eyed cyclops .(America) with poetic rhymes such as "America has the double blues but it ain't discussed on the evening news." Akim Shakoor, rep. of the African People's Party, who articulately explained sayings from Malcolm (El-Hajj Malik El-Shabazz) "The oppression in South Africa is also the same oppression in America and the world over; and Akbar Muhammad, who vehemently ripped to shreds the veil of racism, death, and dispair of which is perpetuated by the American government. Mr. Muhammed meticulously brought out into the open, the psychological warfare being implemented by the Western Dr. Jeckle and Mr. Hyde.

Mr. Muhammed expounded, "psychological warfare creates pimps, men wearing high-heeled shoes, superflies, pornographic album covers; all of which is a master plan schemed by a master system to stop Black liberation."

Also added was an explanation on the life of Malcolm X, and how as Mr. Muhammad explained, "Malcolm was not a well-liked man in Arabia, that Malcolm X would have never carried the American flag, I'm telling you, Malcolm would have never carried the American flag."

As the sun was lowering its wings, the demonstration and rally was reaching its conclusion. The crowd dispersed and the omnipresent word of HARAMBE (let's pull together) was being voiced by all who attended this conscious raising event to stamp out oppression and imperialism wherever it may exist.

LNS' Interview With Native American Mother Jeanne Baum

NEW YORK [LNS] — New York State school and court officials claim "It's a simple matter of truancy," in the words of one attorney for the Suffolk County school system. But one Native American woman and her daughter think differently. Jeanne and Siba Baum have been fighting a two and a half year legal battle against racist teaching at a Long Island junior high school, and it isn't over yet.

It all began when twelve-year-old Siba Baum turned a paper in to her English class teacher about Geronimo. "Geronimo is seen as a blood thirsty savage," Siba wrote. "He and his people were trying to defend their way of life from invaders, who are pictured as heroes, settlers and explorers. When the Indian fought back, he was the villain, and it still goes on now."

Siba's teacher, Carol Duarte, read the paper and returned it with the following comment: "Indians got what they deserved." When Siba confronted the teacher she elaborated, stating "Indians are lazy," "should get off the reservations," and "should be ashamed of their atrocities."

At meetings demanded by the Baums, school officials continually refused to take any punitive or remedial action to correct the school's derogatory presentation of Native Americans. When Baum finally removed Siba from the school, school officials responded by having Baum charged in Family Court with "child neglect." Baum, who was convicted of the charge, now faces loss of custody of Siba.

In a recent interview with LNS, Baum discussed the issues in the case and its effect on her and Siba's lives.

"the issue is not that Siba was insulted," Baum explained. "The case started when the school locked up and stone-walled the incident. We're talking about institutionalized racism — not one aberrant teacher. We're taking the brown decision and the 14th amendment: all children have a right to a decent, non-racist education. If the school defaults it's the school's responsibility to change, not the parents to find another school."

"You would think, if you read white man's books, that there were a few Indians here and then they disappeared gratefully when the white settlers came. They (educators) have every reason to avoid the subject of Native Americans. It's a very sickening reality. Why call them settlers at all? They were invaders. They had 'heroic battles' and we had 'disgusting bloody battles.'"

Since the court verdict was handed down convicting Baum of child neglect, the Baums have lived on several reservations in the Midwest in order to avoid having Siba seized by police. On the reservations Jeanne and Siba were forced to move several times after law officers discovered their hiding places and started to harass them. Yet this harassment has not weakened their determination to continue their fight.

"Instead of frightening us off, it's radicalized us, made us more determined. To think — a woman in a wheel chair — a gray haired grandmother and her 12 year old daughter, could threaten them so much! The system's foundation must be very weak."

The family court's decision, and the subsequent upholding of it in New York Appeals courts, is consistent with the United States government's historical policy of separating Native American children from their families.

Today, it is estimated that 25 per ent of Native American children have been removed from their parents' custody by white welfare agencies and courts. The boarding schools many children are placed in have a high rate of runaways and suicides among Native American children.

Jeanne Baum was removed from her family at the age of three. Baum recalls how she felt about the policy:

"They did anything to break up the families. They (social workers and other government agencies) came with papers.

"No one expected anything legal. You can't even use the word 'social worker' when you're with Indians because they'll go to another room — that's what it means. Our teenagers have the highest suicide rate in the world."

A hearing on a motion to allow Siba Baum to come out of hiding was filed by attorneys for Baum recently. She will return to court on March 29.

"Compulsory education is deprivation of liberty," Baum stressed, asserting her belief that school and court officials' "ignoring racist behavior was tantamount to endorsing it."

"Without due process, if a greater good does not take place — education — then its incarceration."

I Have A Dream Speech

By MARTIN LUTHER KING, JR.

On August 28, 1963, more than two hundred and fifty thousand Americans — about sixty thousand of them white — participated in a March on Washington for Jobs and Freedom, to demand immediate passage of a civil-rights bill and immediate implementation of basic guarantees in the Declaration of Independence, and the thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth amendments. It was the largest demonstration in the history of the nation's capital. The orderly procession moved from the Washington Monument to the Lincoln Memorial, where A. Philip Randolph, Martin Luther King, Roy Wilkins, Walter Reuther and others addressed the immense gathering. Dr. King's address had a tremendous effect on the audience and has been widely published; it is reprinted here by permission of Mrs. Martin Luther King, Jr.

Five score years ago, a great American, in whose symbolic shadow we stand, signed the Emancipation Proclamation. This momentous decree came as a great beacon light of hope to million of Negro slaves who had been seared in the flames of withering injustice. It came as a joyous daybreak to end the long night of captivity.

But one hundred years later, we must face the tragic fact that the Negro is still not free. One hundred years later, the life of the Negro is still sadly crippled by the manacles of segregation and the chains of discrimination. One hundred years later, the Negro lives on a lonely island of poverty in the midst of a vast ocean of material prosperity. One hundred years later the Negro still languishes in the corners of American society and finds himself an exile in his own land. So we have come here today to dramatize an appalling condition.

In a sense we have come to our nation's capital to cash a check. When the architects of our republic wrote the magnificent words of the Constitution and the Declaration of Independence, they were signing a promissory note to which every American was to fall heir. This note was a promise that all men would be guaranteed the unalienable rights of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.

It is obvious today that America has defaulted on this promissory note insofar as her citizens of color are concerned. Instead of honoring this sacred obligation, America has given the Negro people a bad check, a check which has come back marked "insufficient funds." But we refuse to believe that the bank of justice is bankrupt. We refuse to believe that there are insufficient funds in the great vaults of opportunity of this nation. So we have come to cash this check — a check that will give us upon demand the riches of freedom and the security of justice. We have also come to this hallowed spot to remind America of the fierce urgency of now. This is no time to engage in the luxury of cooling off or to take the tranquilizing drug of gradualism. Now is the time to make real the promises of democracy. Now is the time to rise from the dark and desolate valley of segregation to the sunlit path of racial justice. Now is the time to open the doors of opportunity to all of God's children. Now is the time to lift our nation from the quicksands of racial injustice to the solid rock of brotherhood.

It would be fatal for the nation to overlook the urgency of the moment and to underestimate the determination of the Negro. This sweltering summer of the Negro's legitimate discontent will not pass until there is an invogorating autumn of freedom and equality. Nineteen sixty-three is not an end, but a beginning. Those who hope that the Negro needed to blow off steam and will now be content will have a rude awakening if the nation returns to business as usual. There will be neither rest nor tranquility in America until the Negro is granted his citizenship rights. The whirlwinds of revolt will continue to shake the foundations of our nation until the bright day of justice emerges.

But there is something that I must say to my people who stand on the warm threshold which leads into the palace of justice. In the process of gaining our rightful place we must not be guilty of wrongful deeds. Let us not seek to satisfy our thirst for freedom by drinking from the cup of bitterness and hatred. We must forever conduct our struggle on the high plane of dignity and discipline. We must not allow our creative protest to degenerate into physical violence. Again and again we must rise to the majestic heights of meeting physical force with soul force. The marvelous new militancy which has engulfed the Negro community must not lead us to a distrust of all white people, for many of our white brothers, as evidenced by their presence here today, have come to realize that their destiny is tied up with our destiny and their freedom is inextricably bound to our freedom. We cannot walk alone.

And as we walk, we must make the pledge that we shall march ahead. We cannot turn back. There are those who are asking the devotees of civil rights, "When will you be satisfied?" We can never be satisfied as long as the Negro is the victim of unspeakable horrors of police brutality. We can never be satisfied as long as our bodies, heavy with the fatigue of travel, cannot gain lodging in the motels of the highways and the hotels of the cities. We cannot be satisfied as long as the Negro's basic mobility is from a smaller ghetto to a larger one. We can never be satisfied as long as a Negro in Mississippi cannot vote and a Negro in New York believes he has nothing for which to vote. No, no, we are not satisfied, and we will not be satisfied until justice rolls down like waters and righteousness like a mighty stream.

I am not unmindful that some of you have come here out of great trials and tribulations. Some of you have come fresh from narrow jail cells. Some of you have come from areas where your quest for freedom left you battered by the storms of persecution and staggered by the winds of police brutality. You have been the veterans of creative suffering. Continue to work with the faith that unearned suffering is redemptive.

Go back to Mississippi, go back to Alabama, go back to South Carolina, go back to Georgia, go back to Louisiana, go back to the slums and ghettos of our modern cities, knowing that somehow this situation can and will be changed. Let us not wallow in the valley of despair.

I say to you today, my friends, that in spite of the difficulties and frustrations of the moment, I still have a dream. It is a dream deeply rooted in the American dream.

I have a dream that one day this nation will rise up and live out the true meaning of its creed: "We hold these truths to be self-evident; that all men are created equal."

I have a dream that one day on the red hills of Georgia the sons of former slaves and the sons of former slaveowners will be able to sit down together at the table of brotherhood.

I have a dream that one day even the state of Mississippi, a desert state sweltering with the heat of injustice and oppression, will be transformed into an oasis of freedom and justice.

I have a dream that my four little children will one day live in a nation where they will not be judged by the color of their skin but by the content of their character.

I have a dream today.

I have a dream that one day the state of Alabama, whose governor's lips are presently dripping with the words of interposition and nullification, will be transformed into a situation where little black boys and black girls will be able to join hands with little white boys and white girls and walk together as sisters and brothers.

I have a dream today.

I have a dream that one day every valley shall be exalted, very hill and mountain shall be made low, the rough places will be made plains, and the crooked places will be made straight, and the glory of the Lord shall be revealed, and all flesh shall see it together.

This is our hope. This is the faith with which I return to the South. With this faith we will be able to hew out of the mountain of despair a stone of hope. With this faith we will be able to transform the jangling discords of our nation into a beautiful symphony of brotherhood. With this faith we will be able to work together, to pray together, to struggle together, to go to jail together, to stand up for freedom together, knowing that we will be free one day.

This will be the day when all of God's children will be able to sing with new meaning, "My country 'tis of thee, sweet land of liberty, of thee I sing. Land where my fathers died, land of the pilgrim's pride, from every mountainside, let freedom ring."

And if America is to be a great nation this must become true. So let freedom ring from the prodigious hilltops of New Hampshire. Let freedom ring from the mighty mountains of New York. Let freedom ring from the heightening Alleghenies of Pennsylvania!

Let freedom ring from the snow-capped Rockies of Colorado!

Let freedom ring from the curvaceous peaks of California!

But not only that; let freedom ring from Stone Mountain of Georgia!

Let freedom ring from Lookout Mountain of Tennessee!

Let freedom ring from every hill and molehill of Mississippi. From every mountainside, let freedom ring.

When we let freedom ring, when we let it ring from every village and every hamlet, from every state and every city, we will be able to speed up that day when all of God's children, black men and white men, Jews and Gentiles, Protestants and Catholics, will be able to join hands and sing in the words of the old Negro spiritual, "Free at last! Free at last! Thank God Almighty, we are free at last!"

Bakke Demonstration: Left Support

A wide spectrum of left forces have formed a fragile alliance around the April 15 March in Washington to Overturn the Bakke Decision.

In general, the leading force in the Bakke movement has been the broad-based National Committee to Overturn the Bakke Decision (NCOBD), which originated the April 15 march. The Supreme Court is expected to decide the controversial "reverse discrimination" case this spring.

The Anti-Bakke Decision Coalition (ABDC), which has been sharply critical of NCOBD in the past, recently decided to sponsor the upcoming Washington march.

The NCOBD has sought to build a broad united front against the Bakke case, and to focus mainly on the U.S. Supreme Court. The ABDC has made one of its principles of unity "opposing both the U.S. Supreme Court and the University of California (UC) regents as equal targets." (The UC regents have been strongly critized by progressive forces for mounting an inadequate defense in the Bakke case.)

In the past the IWK has characterized the NCOBD approach as seeing "the anti-Bakke struggle as mainly a courtroom battle and...relying on big-name politicians and bureaucrats."

ATM's past criticisms have been much sharper. It has stated that the NCOBD is an "opportunist bloc" with a "reformist line" and that its national leadership is "dominated by the Communist Party USA." (The CP, while opposing the Bakke case, has not played an active part in the NCOBD.)

ATM has even claimed that "the leadership of the NCOBD not only objectively supports the U.S. imperialists, they unite with the Soviet social imperialists as well." It claims that the leadership has "consistently supported Soviet aggression in Angola and Zaire." The NCOBD has not taken a position on Angola and Zaire.

Recently, ATM criticized itself for its narrow focus in mass work around the Bakke case. "In practice," said ATM, "this view led some of our cadre and friends to counterpose outreach among students and among workers...We told some students they weren't really building the anti-Bakke movement unless they were leafletting plants."

The April 15 march is attracting perhaps the widest array of left forces since the antiwar movement. Forces active in the NCOBD, for example, include the Union of Democratic Filipinos (KDP), CASA-General Brotherhood of Workers, the Northern California Alliance, and a number of other groups.

Other sponsors of the march are the Black American Law Students Association, the National Lawyers Guild and the People's Alliance. A wide variety of individuals and groups have endorsed the march, including Youth Against War and Fascism, the National Alliance Against Racism and Political Repression, the National Coalition Against Racism, El Comite MINP and the Guardian.

Before its recent split, the Revolutionary Communist Party (RCP) had done work around the Bakke case, with its focus largely on how the issue affects professionals.

TRIUMPH OF AGGRESSION?

The invasion of South Lebanon, and the forced dislocation of entire populations from that area, has bared the savage intentions of the exclusivist state of Israel. At least 700 people were killed by the Israeli military operation, according to U.N. officials, and 160,000 were made homeless. The plans for the invasion had been conceived long ago, as was recently admitted by the defense minister of Israel, Ezer Weizman.

The human suffering inflicted by the invasion is enormous. American supplied Israeli fighter bombers systematically strafed and bombed defenseless Arab populations with the deadly "cluster bombs" (an anti-personnel weapon of Viet Nam vintage, meant exclusively to kill and maim people, rather than to destroy military targets). These bombs were used on the densely populated camps of Rashidyeh (Boston Globe, 20th of March). Israeli gunboats indiscriminately shelled the city of Tyre, with the aim of hastening the flight of the civilian population. Tyre had been abandoned earlier by the Palestinian guerrillas, who had been anticipating the attack. Over 100,000 of the refugees are not even Palestinian in origin — witness the creation of yet another embittered people.

Even traditionally conservative figures have condemned the Israeli aggression. Israel gets 97 per cent of all U.S. military grants abroad, and over 50 per cent of its military credits.

The current invasion is yet another example of Israel's expansionist policies, and contempt for the sovereignity of its neighbors.

We urge you to make your voice heard on this issue, so as to end the state of affairs whereby American Mid East policy is dictated by the butchers in Tel Aviv, and their representatives in America.

CHE-LUMUMBA SCHOOL

Over the last six years the Che-Lumumba School has worked to serve the need for developing an educational alternative for Third World children. The school is here to serve you — the Third World people of Amherst, Belchertown and Northampton. We are not without the potential for mistakes. Correcting ourselves takes time. We remain, however, open for your constructive criticism. Our philosophy is such that we are flexible, and receptive to change in order to serve the interests of Third World people.

The Che-Lumumba School recently published and distributed a bulletin (originally published in Nummo News) containing information about our goals and work. If you are interested in receiving the bulletin let us know (Che Lumumba School New Africa House). We also invite your questions and contributions (articles, poems, works, ideas, money).

On February 21, 1978 we shared a dinner with our friends in Amherst "In Memory of Malcolm". Following the evening's program some visitors and friends expressed concern with the way the school and its ideals were projected. Our newsletter had already gone to the printers so we were unable to respond at that time. We do want to respond to those immediate and future questions through personal dialogue, discussions in the bulletin and in Nummo News. Write to us. We want to understand your concerns and respond to your inquiries.

Following are comments on some of the issues we have received questions on:

Legitimacy: The Che-Lumumba School satisfies all educational requirements of the State of Massachusetts. The staff includes a certified, experienced elementary level head teacher. All children attending the school are able to transfer to any public or private educational institution with complete and appropriate records.

Composition: All the children in Che-Lumumba School, except one, are Black-American, Puerto Rican Cape Verdean. Two families are adoptive North-American white, so the parents present a more multi-racial group.

Curriculum: The Che-Lumumba School has copies of its curriculum guidelines available for examination. It is a fluid and dynamic program of study based on the definitions and decisions of the parents. Our academic curriculum covers all the competencies required by public institutions. These subjects are complemented by the addition of and-or translation to a Third World perspective Political information is adapted to the needs of the child. We are concerned with developing academic excellence and critical consciousness. We believe our children are capable of developing an understanding of social-political-cultural-racial issues at an early age.

We want to hear from the Third World community. Leave letters or write to:

Che-Lumumba School, New Africa House, University of Massachusetts, Amherst, Massachusetts 01003.

Our struggles are long. Each one of us must contribute throughtfully to the development of our groups. Only through sharing our criticism and developing ourselves critically can we hope to take command of our communities. A Luta Continua! Venceremos!

I See The Promised Land

By MARTIN LUTHER KING, Jr.

In the early spring of 1968, Dr. King was organizing a march of the poor — black and white — on Washington to "dramatize the whole economic problem of the poor... We need an Economic Bill of Rights so as to guarantee a job to all people who want to work and are able to work and guarantee an income for all who are not able to work." He came to Memphis, Tennessee, interrupting his work for the March of the Poor, to support the strike of 1,300 black sanitation men.

On April 4, 1968, Martin Luther King, Jr., was assassinated as he stood on the balcony of a motel in Memphis. After Dr. King's assassination, his co-worker, the Reverend Ralph Abernathy, continued the movement for a poor people's march, and in June, 1968, poor black and white marchers established "Resurrection City" in the nation's capital. On June 24, Resurrection City was torn down by the National Guard and hundreds were arrested, among them the Reverend Ralph Abernathy.

The night before his assassination, Dr. King told an audience that he had "seen the promised land" of victory in his fight for equality and justice, but "I may not go with you." Here are excerpts from his last speech, taken from the Sacramento Observer, April 11, 1968, memorial issue in honor of Martin Luther King, Jr.

...I don't know what will happen now. We have got difficult days ahead, but it doesn't matter with me, because I've been to the mountain top. Like anyone else, I would like to live a long life. But I'm not concerned with that. I just want to do God's will, and He has allowed me to go up the mountain.

I see the Promised Land. I may not get there with you, but I want you to know tonight that we as a people will get to the Promised Land. I am happy tonight that I am not worried about anything. I'm not fearing any man. Mine eyes have seen the glory of the coming of the Lord.

You all know the story of Rip Van Winkle... Everyone remembers that Winkle slept for twenty years. But what is important is that when he went up on that mountain to sleep there was a picture of King George hanging in the town. When he came down, there was a picture of George Washington in its place.

Rip Van Winkle slept through a revolution, but we cannot afford to remain asleep...

Our world is as a neighborhood. We must all learn to live together as brothers or we will all perish as fools...

There are two challenges to America. The challenges are racism and poverty. In a few weeks a few of us are coming to Washington to see if the will to meet these challenges still lives among us. We are going to bring those who have known long years of hurt and neglect. We're not coming to engage in any historic action. We are not coming to tear up Washington. We are coming to engage in dramatic, nonviolent action.

We are coming, and we will stay as long as we have to...

We will suffer and die if we have to. For I submit, nothing will be done until people put their bodies and souls into this.

Letters

To the Editor:

In regards to the Nummo News article on March 13 entitled "Leroy Jones Speaks at Smith College," I think the black community in particular, and the University community in general, is entitled to see reporting on individuals that at least shows a respect for that persons heritage.

If a black reporter in Boise, Idaho can report on a lecture by Amiri Baraka [LeRoi Jones] and use the name the brother prefers, then certainly Nummo News can extend a similar courtesy. [I have never seen Ntosake Shanga called out of name].

Furthermore, to misconstrue statements while paraphrasing is not only a disservice to the individual involved, but to the readers, who deserve to know what someone has said. I will site examples of this from your article for emphasis only. In reference to the Panthers, Baraka said they made the mistake of becoming gun cult, actually carrying guns around in a modern capitalist state, and he faulted Eldridge Cleaver for this misdirection. Certainly, he never "lashed" Carmichael, Brown, or Newton. Rather, he stated that their analysis, like his own, was perceptive but not informed — guided by science — sufficiently to sustain the efforts of the black struggle.

Regarding his views of the Soviet Union and the U.S., Baraka said they were jockeying to determine which imperialism would rule, not whether Communism or Fascism would rule.

As far as Richard Wright coping out on the black struggle, Baraka applauded for not less than ten minutes the fact that Wright's writing was the embodiment of the resistance-protest tradition, just as DuBois and Robeson had been. Wright's life was not seen as one that exemplified this tradition because he became an existentialist in his later years, which Baraka did reject.

Finally, Baraka is a member of the Blacks Arts Movement, but he did not state that "this movement is directed toward Cultural Revolution through scientific thinking." He said that the group of communist writers he worked with were directed toward such aims. He was careful to distinguish the two. Further, he stated that he wanted to see the two merge under a Marxist-Leninist party that would pull together all "Advanced" elements in this society. The "correct line" he proposed was a Marxist-Leninist-Maoist one, and it was seen as an extention of the perceptions black activist made in the sixties, not as a more correct line.

Since Baraka did go to great length to show his perspective, I feel we should at least understand it as presented.

To the Editor:

I am commenting on "Lack of Clarity Within an Issue," an editorial by Nkrumah L. Olinga, in the March 13 issue of the Nummo News. Mr. Shain did not prove his ignorance in his article, you did in your editorial. Yes, people of color can be and are racist. Racism and oppression do not know color boundaries. People not knowing or believing this fact are ignorant [a leaky valve].

You say you are a person who does not condone ignorance, well let me educate you. While in the service, as a white male and U.S. citizen, my life was threatened, my body kicked and my pride stripped by fellow blacks because I was a "white stinkin' swine." Certain bars were forbidden not only to whites but to all non-blacks, as my Mexican American roommate explained. If this is not racism, what is it? Justice? Equality? Your statement, "Only white males like himself [Shain] can be racist to people of color, who are the victims of oppression" is ignorance that I detest especially in an educational institution. Your generalizations are absurd, making your racism obvious and blatant. It is your prerogative to call anyone a "house nigger" in black and white but may I suggest the phrase "house swine" when you address whites in the administration.

The hurt and humiliation I felt from the injustice of racism will never be forgotten but it was forgiven with the hope ignorance could be overcome through education. Racism cannot be masked or justified by your [Mr. Olinga] issues if it is to be effectively controlled. I feel you offer no solution but are part of the problem.

Campus Speaks

CAMPUS SPEAKS:

In conjunction with next weeks Martin Luther King week this weeks question was: Do you think that King's non-violent approach was effective?

Johm W. Lederle: Yes he was effective. The methods that he used certainly brought problems to public attention. Now Blacks and Whites are conscious of each other. He was very effective in bringing the problems of discrimination and the need for equal opportunity in education. His methods led to big advances but he haven't arrived at the Millennium.

Dan Russell: Yes. The immediate effect was in the South Moreso than in the North where racism is repressed. Because racism in the South is so distinct and clear cut it was possible to approach it from a non-violent approach. In the North there was as much segregation but it was not legal whereas in the South it was. Dr. King was a distinctively Southern man. He was a different type of man because of his background as opposed to people like Huey Newton, Bobby Seale, etc. I think he was one of the great figures in the 20th century in America.

Carol Brooks

Yes, that was one strategy that was used. It was an effective strategy at that time. He organized in a way which he felt would maintain the dignity of Black people, remembering that Martin Luther King didn't have to be a civil rights leader. He chose to become a leader which means that he loved us.

Dan Russell: Yes. The immediate effect was in the south more so than in the north where racism is repressed. Because racism in the south is so distinct and clear cut it was possible to approach it from a non-violent approach. In the north there was as much segregation but it was not legal whereas in the south it was. Dr. King was a distinctively southern man. He was a different type of man because of his background as opposed to people like Huey Newton, Bobby Seale, etc. I think he was one of the great figures in the 20th century in America.

John Bracey:

For what he was doing I think he was very effective. He was very successful in bringing the conditions of Black people to the entire world and he was also successful in mobilizing a lot of Black people. He was able to bring out more people primarily because he was non-violent. He took advantage of the limits of bourgeois Democracy and pushed. He knew how far he could go and he understood bourgeois politics. King knew what he was doing and was effective. King and SNCC broke down the whole Jim Crow system of the South.

Bill Hasson:

I think they were very effective. They were effective from the standpoint that the methods brought out the real violence and viciousness of white people. Non-violence doesn't mean that you're just demonstrating to get your head bashed in. The purpose of non-violence is to show the viciousness of the oppressor. America props itself to the world as a peace loving humanitarian country, yet its prisons, hospitals and general services to Black and Third World people definitely has to be challenged. The success of a few Black people is not representative of the progress of the race.

Ismat-Abdul-Haqq:

I think they were effective with regard to his objectives. I think that his objectives were to awaken the moral consciousness of America to the inferiour positions of Bilalians. I think his other objective was to make Bilalians aware that they could effectively bring about change by organizing and taking a stand. I don't think that we went far enough. He could only take the people so far with his methods. Just before his death we were beginning to become more aggressive. He was realizing some of the passive techniques would not be that effective in changing the view held of Balalians by Caucasians. Passiveness to me seemed to reinforce the traditional concept of Bilalians being willing to allow themselves to be walked over.

Black Minister-White University: Rev. Gilbert Caldwell

I agreed to the announced topic because I was interested in what response there would be in this community to that kind of explicitness. Because I deeply believe that it is imperative that there never be occasions when we set aside all of the subtle nuances related to blackness and whiteness in America and attempt to be as "up-front" as possible!

One of the many difficulties that the presence and reality of the Black community has posed for this nation is that we are conspiciously visible. We cannot, even if we wanted to, and must of us do not want to, we cannot lose ourselves in the vast sea of whiteness and then emerge at selected times. It is unnecessary for us on our special days to wear buttons that say, "Kiss Me, I Am Afro-American" as non-black Americans do on their special holidays. The road to power and acceptability in this land of ours is the ability to become visible and invisible at selected moments. The blackcommunity is always visible, the black individual is visible, even when he or she desire not to be. Power is possessed and exercised in this nation quietly, subtlety, thus efforts of black community to exercise any amount of power is identified and destroyed.

I think being up front in things black and white is essential because the virus of racism is still present in epidemic proportions. The poet Countee Cullen captures my experience in the religious establishment and outside of it when he writes:

"Once riding in old Baltimore, Heart-rilled, head-filled with glee, I saw a Baltimorean keep looking straight at me. Now I was eight and very small, and he was no Whit Bigger, and so I smiled, but he poked out his tongue and called me, "nigger." I saw the whole of Baltimore from May until December: of all the things that happened there that's all that I remember"

There are new words and phrases today that are more sophisticated, but still embody the assumptions and philosophy contained within the epithet "Nigger" "Reverse Racism", "Reverse Discrimination", "Benign Neglect", as they are used in response to the continuing Black quest for racial justice and are new ways of developing to and limit the humanity of a people.

But the strength of the Black experience as been the uncanny ability to confront the racist and his-her racism and never be undone or defined by it.

For me, the most dramatic manifestation of this ability occurs when a people caught in the midst of American slavery could sing in the spiritual: "Before I'd Be A Slave, I'll Be Buried In My Grave And Go Home To My Lord And Be Free." Even with the shackles, the whip, the de-culturalization. People through their songs and through their revolts declared they were not slaves. I therefore, without sacrificing my capacity to be universal, without being negatively chauvinistic about my racial identity, I declare and affirm that I am a Afro-American minister.

"If I am not for myself who will be for me? And if I am only for myself, what am I? And if now now when?

Hillel: The Elder

But what about the nomenclature, "White University". It is my contention that unless an institution self consciously and programmatically articulates in its operating philosophy that it is intentionally committed to the development of a multi-cultural community or empowering a particular racial or cultural community, then that institution is a white institution. It is possible for it to become more than a white institution, but it must decide to do this in those places where its power is lodged. Throughout the history of this national there have been those individuals or small groups of individuals who have been converted to the cause of racial justice. They were born again, but I have yet to see an INSTITUTION be converted or "born again" to the cause of racial justice.

The failure of the poverty program, the great society or the decisions from the supreme court on questions of racial justice; all of these failures indicate that the institutions of this land, religious, political, educational, business have not yet made racial, economic justice an institutional priority.

Reinhold Niebuhr: "Most of the evil is not done by evil people but by good people who do not know that they are not good." Niebuhr wrote about, "Moral Man, Immoral Society". The thesis is that we have been unable or unwilling to INSTITUTIONALIZE our personal moral commitments.

BUT ENOUGH ABOUT OUR TOPIC.

There is Chaos in America because 1) we have not seen it necessary to make it a requirement that every American become acquainted with the negatives, the contradictions of our American preachment and practice. We have not found a way to say that a person is not educated, a person is ill-equipped to exercise citizenship until they internalize the history of American slavery, the failure of reconstruction, the rise of Jim Crow, etc.

Governmental cover-ups did not begin with Watergate and they began with the beginnings of this nation when we convinced ourselves and the world that the words of our constitution and not our practices described who we were as a nation. The accentuating of the positive and eliminating the negative that took place in those beginning days has stuck with us until the present moment. We have so convinced ourselves that we are God's gift to the world in the process we have failed to exercise the internal critique that we should. The debate on the Panama Canal demonstrates that arrogance, the concept of manifest destiny and our self delusions are not dead. Lerone Bennett writes: "We Have Never Created A Single Human Community In This Country...before America can become a National State, It Must Recognize That it is a multi-national state. Before It Can Become Non-Racist, It Must recognize that it is racist. Before It Can Ignore Racial Signs, It Must recognize how deeply those signs have Penetrated Into The people and the land. We must take an Inventory." I am told there is courage, freedom, curiousity and the capacity to be objective in good supply in this community. Maybe it is in this community of scholars, those in pursuit of scholarship, those in pursuit can take this inventory that Bennett mentions.

But Chaos reigns because we have not found the courage, the ability or Plagirism Reigns. The integrity to acknowledge in substantial ways the debts owed to the black experience and black community. Time magazine's cover story on John Travolta: talking about the impact of Black students on his life in high school. "They seemed to have a better sense of humor, a looser style. I wanted to be like that". This is the extent of acknowledgement. Buried deep in a story under show business in time.

America has not found a way out of the paradox. A people whom it has deemed incapable of contributing anything of substance to the larger community is ripped off knowingly and unknowingly day in and day out by persons who have a congenital incapacity to admit that anything good can come out of the black community. There is the capacity to receive the gifts of the individual black person but that person must be disconnected from his communal experience and heritage. (Some of the arguments coming out of the discussions on the Black American musical festival demonstrate this)

It seems that America can only tolerate a concentration of Black folk on an athletic field or in a Field House, on a stage, or as sky caps in airports. Otherwise there is a tipping point. When we reach a certain number and thus increase our visibility White Flight begins in neighborhood, churches, universities, etc.

3) The third cause of chaos is the compulsive desire to declare that racism is dead, that race is no longer a factor. It is the expression of hope without documentation, it is a way of dealing with the human tendency to want to solve problems if they are identified, thus not identified. It is the result of the power of positive thinking. It is the theory that racial distinctions are now less important than class distinctions in America. Kenneth Clark in a recent N.Y. Times op-ed article writes;

"It is a seductive and enticing theory. It provides liberal whites with some release from the burdens of guilt even as it provides middle class blacks with some temporary relief from the pervasive burdens of racial oppression...the traditional patterns of racism are still controlling the comparatively slow pace of upward mobility for blacks."

Blacks and whites in America must agree that the glass is half empty, rather than taking satisfaction from describing the glass as being half full.

But I believe community is possible. Occasionally there are a few signs.

Community is possible (1) when we abolish the melting pot theory and dare to dream about a pluralistic society that is representative of the gifts of all of us. A friend of mine suggested that the United States needs to become a vegetable soup. A soup that consists of black eyed peas, white potatoes, red tomatoes, yellow squash, brown rice. Maybe not castronomically sound but racially, culturally symbolic.

Community is possible (2) when we convenant as an American people to wage the unfinished American revolution. When we prepare this nation to participate in a world that is a world of people of color community is possibe when we come together from all racial and ethnic, class, backgrounds, to explore what the political-economic system of the future must look like. Martin Luther King:

"For its survival's sake, America must reexamine old presuppositions and release itself from many things that for centuries have been held sacred. For the evils of racism, poverty and militarism to die, a new set of values must be born."

But I have said all of this with the belief that part of my calling is to offer hope to remind us that truth though crushed to earth will rise again. We must always be candid, but we must never become bitter. We must avoid the unhealthy paranoia that makes us cut each other down with the gossip and rumors that are fed by our fear and narrowness. We must never acquiese in the face of injustice but we must never waste time in the personal pettyness that makes us unfit to contribute to any revolution. I close with the words dated June 26th 1957 that Dr. W.E.B. Dubois gave to his wife. They are described as his last message to the world.

"One thing alone I charge you. As you live, believe in life! Always human beings will live and progress to greater, broader and fuller life. The only possible death is to lose belief in this truth simple because the great end comes slowly, because time is long."

Brief Overview Of Dr. King's Career

The leadership career of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. began when a courageous, tired Bilalian seamstress refused to yield her seat to a Caucasain man on a Montgomery, Alabama city bus. On that December day in 1955 a new era began in the history of the southern United States. A people who had passively ccepted abuse since the Jim Crow era (begain in the 1800's), was now moving to become self protecting. Martin Luther King Jr. was chosen as their spokesman by a council of Bilalian leaders, mostly ministers. Like his ancestors, Frederick Douglas, Nat Turner and others, Dr. King sought to justify and defend his actions by his understanding of Christainity.

"Something began to say to me...

"He who passively accepts evil is as much involved in it as he who helps to perpetrate it. He who accepts evil without protesting against it is really cooperating with it. When oppressed people willingly accept their oppression they only serve to give the oppressor a convenient justification for his acts.

"Often the oppressor goes along unaware of the evil involved in his oppression so long as the oppressed accepts it. So in order to be true to one's conscience and true to God, a righteous man has no alternative but to refuse to cooperate with an evil system. This I felt was the nature of our action."

The boycott was successful! Martin Luther King Jr. was well established as a champion of civil rights and an enemy to racism. Balalian people had achieved a great success.

The bus boycott had shown the great possibility and the powers of unity to people who had become afraid of unity. Martin Luther King Jr. lead similar battles against segregation in restaurants, on interstate transportation and other public places.

His leadership was a major contribution to the passage of major civil rights laws. A high point in his career came when he received the Nobel Peace Prize in 1964.

The famous March on Washington lead by Dr. King, his famous "I have a dream" speech, his historic opposition to the war in Viet Nam, his frequent confrontation with brutal law enforcement officials, his time spent in jail for the causes he believed in, all shed great light Dr. King's understanding of sacrifice and his great faith in Almighty God.

Born Jan. 15, 1929, the 39-year-old Dr. King was felled by an assassin's bullet in Memphis, Tenn. on April 5, 1968. By this time he had switched his efforts from ending segregation to trying to improve economic opportunities for Bilalian, poor and other oppressed people.

He was an example of two of the strongest and most successful traditions in Balalian leadership: 1 — an undying belief that God's will is justice and equality for all men; and 2 — a belief in dependence.

N.Y. Drops Felony Charges Against Assata Shakur

Black political prisoner Assata Shakur's 5-year fight for freedom took two steps forward and one step back last week.

The steps forward were the dropping of felony charges against her by New York authorities, and the unearthing of evidence that Shakur had been the target of an FBI attempt to falsely link her with criminal acts.

The step back was an appeals court ruling paving the way for her transfer to the federal women's prison in Alderson, W. Va.

The 30-year-old Black woman, a former member of the Black Panther Party long hunted by authorities for her militant and alleged membership in the Black Liberation Army, was convicted a year ago by an all-white New Jersey jury of murder. The charges stemmed from a May 1973 shooting incident on the New Jersey State trooper. That trial is the only time authorities have succeeded in convicting Shakur. She has defeated four other indictments ranging from robbery to murder.

Shakur is currently being held in New York City's Rikers Island, but since the New York charges were dropped, New Jersey authorities acted immediately to extradite her. Defense attorneys for Shakur filed a motion of a New York court to halter the transfer and hearings on the motion are expected to take place March 31.

Supporters see New York City jailing as the only way to thwart the plans of New Jersey authorities to send Shakur to the maximum security unit of the federal women's penitentiary in Alderson, W: Va.

Defense attorneys for Shakur are also planning to bring suit against federal authorities for what the National Task Force for Cointelpro Litigation and Research characterized as "an investigation of Shakur which went beyond the scope of its jurisdiction coupled with an overly aggressive campaign to falsely link her to crimes committed all over the country."

As defense attorney Jonathon Lubell told Liberation News Service, "Whenever there was a Black woman involved in a bank robbery or any other criminal act, Assata's name inevitably popped up as a suspect...or a co-conspirator in the act."

The files indicating the extent of this Cointelpro operation against Shakur were withheld from defense attorneys and supporters until last month, and were not available during the New Jersey murder trial.

Puerto Rican Government Gambles

NEW YORK [LNS] — While the colonial government of Puerto Rico keeps insisting that it can't afford wage increases for electrical workers who have been out on strike for more than two months, it has come up with millions of dollars to gamble as loan guarantees on a scheme to manufacture a costly, new, advanced-technology sports car on the island.

A report in Business Week at the end of February explained that Puerto Rico has anted up a financing package which could amount to $60 million in federal and Puerto Rican loan guarantees. Coupled with a 90 per cent tax exemption for 15 years, this was enough to nail down an agreement with former General Motors Corp. executive John Z. DeLorean.

Delorean has been shopping around for the last three years for the funds and the location to start producing his new sports car. The First Boston Corporation, which has major holdings in the Puerto Rican economy including a large chunk of bonds in the "public" Water Resources Authority against which the electrical workers have been striking, put DeLorean in touch with officials of the colonial government.

Now that the agreement has been wrapped up, Puerto Rican officials are hoping that "the project might stimulate tourism and bathe the island in the prestige that would surround the glamorous brainchild of the auto industry's most glamorous figure," according to Business Week.

But less involved and enthusiastic observers aren't so sure the "glamorous brainchild" won't be aborted... leaving the people of Puerto Rico holding the tab. As Business Week concedes, "DeLorean's venture, at best, is risky. Though several auto publications have commented favorably on the design features of his proposed car (which will sell in the $20,000 range), much of Detroit's auto industry remains skeptical."

Noted War Criminal Now Defense Department Advisor

NEW YORK [LNS] — In Vietnam, Robert W. Komer was known as "Blowtorch" — a nickname earned by his fanatical devotion to counter-insurgency. But to the U.S. anti-war movement and the Vietnamese National Liberation Front he was viewed quite differently. To them, "Blowtorch" was just another name for "war criminal."

While he was in Vietnam, Komer headed the "pacification" program there — a program which relied on indiscriminate arrests, torture and murder of Vietnamese civilians to suppress resistance to the U.S. military presence and the corrupt U.S.-backed government in Saigon.

This tainted history however, has not lessened Komer's use for more government service. In early March Komer was selected by the Carter administration to fill a slot as a leading advisor for the Defense Department. He will be the top military official at DOD on NATO affairs and issues dealing with the Atlantic Alliance.

Mass Uprising In Argentine Prison

NEW YORK [LNS] — Mass protests erupted on March 14 at Argentina's largest prison, Villa Devoto in Buenos Aires. Some 56 persons were killed and over 70 were wounded, according to the Argentine Information Service Center.

The prisoners apparently rebelled because of overcrowding and other intolerable conditions in the prison. The Villa Devoto Prison was built for 2,500 prisoners but close to 4,000 people, 80 percent of them women, are reportedly incarcerated there.

Since the military junta seized power two years ago, over 2,000 political prisoners have been impounded in Villa Devoto alone. And throughout the country it has been reported that "thousands of people have been abducted by security forces and taken to secret camps, where they are usually tortured and a countless number are assassinated," according to Amnesty International.

Amnesty International has also reported that prisoners are often assassinated while in prison.

Iran's New Budget Indicates Shah's Priorities

NEW YORK [LNS] — Iran's new budget for 1978-79 and its latest five-year plan, both of which went into effect in March, indicate the shallowness of the Shah's stated intention of "liberalizing to the maximum we can."

As one would guess, the bulk of the new budget is allocated toward Iran's immense defense apparatus. Iran's expenditure for arms has increased from approximately $8 billion in 1977 to over $10 billion for 1978-79 — an increase of 25 per cent.

This dramatic increase reflects Iran's aspirations to play an even larger military role in the Persian Gulf and Indian Ocean, as well as to quell the growing resistance inside Iran. The recent uprisings in Iran constitute the greatest challenge to the Shah in 15 years — so large that the Shah has had to call in his armed forces to buttress SAVAK (Iran's notorious secret police), the state police and riot forces who have been unable to crush the opposition.

Contrary to the Iranian government's statements that SAVAK's power has decreased significantly, the new budget will actually increase expenditures for SAVAK and the police by 30 per cent, according to Middle East magazine. In addition, recent western reports have alleged that there has been a major "shakeup" in SAVAK, particularly in the Tabriz branch (where it led a fierce attack on a recent demonstration). But all this entailed was a few minor shifts to bolster the crumbling image of the Shah as a "benevolent and much loved monarch."

Prime Minister Jamihid Amouzegar's new budget offers little for raising the standards of living of Iran's impoverished masses. This is revealed in the new budget's expenditure for health and education — together constituting less than half the expenditure for defense. And government expenditure for housing is to be cut to half the level of last year. The government also plans to reduce subsidies on foodstuffs, which will increase the prices of such imported goods as milk, eggs and meats.

Moreover, the government has made no provisions in the new budget to offset the rise in food prices with increases in wages. On the contrary, the budget calls for wage restraint and increasing workers' productivity — a euphemism for increasing the rate of exploitation. The government budget can best be summed up in the slogan of the Shah's latest book, "work, work and more work."

The budget for the coming year offers far more to foreign investors than to the Iranian people. For instance, the new budget will increase agricultural credits by 54 per cent — which means, according to Middle East magazine, "big business for those who can build farms, provide breeding cattle, set up dairy plants....", namely the U.S. multinationals who control large sectors of Iran's agriculture. But overall, with the exception of U.S. agribusiness and arms industries, U.S. foreign investment has recently dropped sharply in Iran and the new budget will not help to attract new foreign investments.

I.T.T. Execs Face Perjury Rap On Chile Testimony

NEW YORK [LNS] — Just before they would have slipped under the protection of the statute of limitations, two ITT executives, Edward Gerrity and Robert Berrellez, have been charged with perjury, obstructing government proceedings and giving false testimony about the clandestine efforts to prevent Salvador Allende from becoming president of Chile in 1970.

ITT offered to give the U.S. government $1 million to foil Allende's election; made plans with the CIA to "create economic chaos" after Allende was elected; solicited other corporations to join their campaign to overthrow Allende; and urged the White House "to see that Allende doesn't get through the next six months," according to Senate Intelligence Committee and Overseas Private Investment Corporation (OPOC) reports.

Both men face maximum penalties of 30 years. But many believe the government will ultimately let them off on relatively minor misdemeanor charges, as it did in the case of former CIA Director Richard Helms. No criminal charges were brought against ITT chairman Harold Geneen. It has been charged that Geneen was not prosecuted because he knew "too much" about the Central Intelligence Agency's relationships with U.S.-based multinational corporations around the globe."

Candidates admit 'favors' deal

An exchange of political favors in a trade off of jobs for political support was discussed last night by members of the Steve Ross camp and members of the Shelly Gordon and Herby Tyson camp at the Student Government Association convention.

Candidates Bob Dion and Don Bishop, lost the presidency by 1.9 electoral votes on the second ballot. The convention was recessed until Thursday at 7 p.m.

Thursday's ballot includes the top two seated candidacies, Bob Dion and Don Bishop, and Shelley Gordon and Herb Tyson.

The result of last night's voting was: Gordon-Tyson 29, Dion-Bishop 43, Blank 7, Steve Ross 6, Barenberg-Birmingham, 2.

Many of the area government presidents said it would be extremely difficult trying to meet their quorum in Thursday's convention.

Henry Doyle, an influential member of the Gordon-Tyson camp and Robert Smerling an advisor to Steve Ross both admit that a trade off was discussed. However they disagree over what was offered and who originally approached whom.

Smerling claims that he was offered "Help for the communities I am interested in." Smerling is an active member of the Jewish community on campus. Smerling claims his candidate was also offered a job which he called "undefined." He did not specify if it was a salaried job or a political job within student government.

Doyle said he talked to Smerling "over pizza" and that Smerling "suggested he be included." Doyle said Smerling wanted the attorney general's job for Ross. "We didn't offer them a job." said Doyle. Doyle called the possibility of such a deal taking place "far fetched." He cited questionable support on the floor for Ross.

Doyle said he is not sure if Gordon and Tyson had been informed of the talk since they spent much of the night on the convention platform answering questions from the floor.

Candidate Steve Ross said he had heard "the same as far as specific offers for jobs or the Jewish community." However Ross said no one had discussed with him the details of any deal. "Throughout the last few hours, people have come up to me saying, 'let's make a deal!' " Ross said some of these statements may be made "in jest."

Tyson said he and his running mate Shelly Gordon, "have at no time attempted to "buy out" the opposition."

Early in the evening, a motion was defeated to have the convention adjourn and go to a popular election. This proposal was also defeated at the first session last Wednesday. The motion was thrown out by a vote of 73-84.

The convention then moved to speeches from the candidates. Dion called the general election "farcical," and "often confusing." He said that "knowledge and a sense of history are the key." Bishop said he and his running mate will provide leadership by "planning for the future while learning from the past."

Since Bishop and Dion were not on the last convention ballot, they had more time to speak than Gordon and Tyson who were on the ballot.

In his address to the delegates Tyson said, "When do we begin to listen and care for the students of this university? Are we influenced by the subjective and unresponsive press?"

Shelly Gordon said the major point in her speech was that the "Senate should not be allowed to manipulate the area governments through the budgetary process."

Following their presentations, the candidates answered questions from the floor. Most of the questions dealt with area governments and the budget process.

On the question of Student Activities money, Bishop said he had worked hard with the area governments to see that they got their money."

UM greenhouse robbed; poisonous plant taken

By CAROL ROSENBERG
Collegian Staff

A UMass greenhouse was vandalized Saturday night and several plants, including a poisonous "Euphorbia," valued at $200 were stolen, according to a UMass police spokesman yesterday.

Alfred Boicourt, a professor in the department of plant and science, said the plant, which is about four feet tall, "could be quite toxic causing severe rash and some effect to your eyes."

Boicourt said the plant was positioned next to broken glass and taken by people who didn't know what they were looking for. "I don't think they know that the plant is toxic," he said.

John D. Tristan, a technical assistant in the vandalized greenhouse said the "sap of the plant was used in the Congo to make dart poisons to stupefy animals. If you ingest it, (breath it in or swallow it) it can paralyze breathing, cause abdominal pains and a lapse into coma and death."

Tristan warned, "It's in a dorm somewhere right now, I'm sure of it. If a dog or cat were to nibble at it, it would be over right then.

"It looks like pencils, a lot of leaves and no stems," the technician said, "they probably think it's pretty hot stuff in the dorm."

Tristan said if those who stole it would leave it outside the greenhouse it was removed from, he would take it in the next morning. "No questions asked."

Annie Hall named year's best picture

HOLLYWOOD [UPI] — "Annie Hall" was named best movie of 1977 last night at the 50th annual Academy Awards presentations.

Richard Dreyluss was named best actor for his role in the movie "Goodbye Girl".

Diane Keaton was named best actress for her role in the movie "Annie Hall".

Woody Allen was named best director for "Annie Hall". Allen was not present because he plays clarinet with a band in a Manhattan night club and said he could not let the band members down.

Greer Garson, Henry Winkler, Joan Fontaine, William Holden and Barbara Stanwyck were some of the presenters.

The space movie and all-time box-office hit "Stars Wars" won its Oscars for sound, visual effects, art direction and best costume.

Other early winners were "Who are the Debolts? And Where Did They Get Nineteen Kids" and "Gravity is my Enemy" in documentary categories.

Vanessa Redgrave, whose appearance in a pro-Palestinian film sparked a protest by Jewish groups, electrified the crowd by accepting her Oscar as best supporting actress for her role in the film "Julia".

Jason Robards won for best supporting actor for "Julia". Robards did not attend.

In accepting her award from young hearthrob John Travolta, Miss Redgrave thanked the academy for the tribute and for standing firm.

"You have to refuse to be intimidated by a small band of Zionist hoodlums and I salute you for not bowing under," she said. "I will continue to fight against anti-semitism and fascism."

Fred Astaire presented the best song Oscar for "You Light Up My Life" from the film of the same name.

Amherst Selectmen Elections

Simmons

By SEAN HORGAN
Collegian Staff

There are absolutely no doubts in the mind of Chauncy T. Simmons Jr.

Simmons, one of the four candidates in today's Board of Selectmen election, believes fervently that when he wakes up tomorrow morning, it is as a new selectman.

"I am going to win," he said. "Or at least that's the feeling that I'm getting around town. Not only do I think I'm going to win, I think I will end up being the top vote-getter among all four of the candidates."

Today's election marks the second time Simmons has made a bid for a seat on the board. He was defeated last year in his first attempt, but Simmons feels it will be different this time.

"I would call myself a moderate conservative, and I think Amherst is going to vote relatively conservative this year," he said.

Simmons, 33, is the present vice-chairman of the Finance Committee and was also a Town Meeting Member from 1975 to 1977. His voting throughout has been conservative, and his stance on issues during the selectman's race has also remained conservative.

While all the other candidates agree the water supply problem could be solved through negotiations with Hadley, Simmons has a different idea.

Simmons says the town's water supply problem could be partially solved by the clearance or replacement of the water transmission pipes from the Atkins and Pelham reservoirs.

"Last year I spearheaded an article on the town warrant to clean up the town's water supply," he said, "What I found out from the engineer's report was that many of the transmission pipes are corroded or blocked, and that the two reservoirs could probably be expanded."

Simmons said the combination pipe repair and expansion could increase the town's water supply by 250,000 gallons per day, "or roughly the same amount of water we were seeking from Hadley," he said.

Simmons said he does not advocate cutting town services, but he is in favor of contracting certain services, such as some of the responsibilities of the Dept. of Public Works, out to private businesses. "This," he said, "would help eliminate the high overhead the town faces in increasing employee benefits and salaries."

Simmons said the decrease in overhead would come from the elimination of personnel.

"This isn't to say that we are going to start firing people," he said. Instead, he said the positions would possibly be eliminated as they became vacant.

Editor's note: This is the second in a two part series of interviews with candidates running in today's election for the Amherst Board of Selectmen.

An overview

By SEAN HORGAN
Collegian Staff

Amherst voters today decide the outcome of the town elections for the Board of Selectmen, School Committee, Housing Authority, Redevelopment Authority and three other elected positions.

Polls in the eight precincts are open from noon until 8 p.m.

Town Clerk Estelle Matusko has predicted a "disappointingly low turnout," even below the average election-day turnout of 30 per cent of the registered voters. Last year 25 per cent of the town's registered voters voted in the elections.

The elections are highlighted by a four-way race for two seats on the Board of Selectmen. Two of the candidates, Diana H. Romer and Roger C. Jacque, are incumbents. They are being challenged for their seats by Bernard R. Moreau and Chauncy T. Simmons Jr.

Romer has spent the campaign stressing her experience in various aspects of town government. She has enjoyed the exposure offered by her position as chairman of the Board of Selectmen.

She is regarded as a liberal, and has voted that way throughout her term on the board, and earlier, as a member of the Finance Committee. Romer has pointed to the water supply problem, economic development, and housing as the most important issues the town will face in the next three years.

The other incumbent, Jacque, is counting on votes from established Amherst voters to retain his seat on the board. Although he regards himself a conservative, Jacque surprisingly holds the same views as Romer on many of the issues. He is, however, much more of a financial conservative.

The most conservative and confident of the four candidates is Simmons. Known for his hard-line on town spending during his term on the finance committee, Simmons had advocated outbacks in the department of public works through private contracting of some services. He claims this will reduce the high overhead of increasing employee salaries and benefits. He has also said he has no doubts that he will win.

The liberal challenge to the incumbents will come from Moreau, who has advocated a stability of town spending with a lowering of taxes. Moreau also agrees with other candidates that Amherst must begin to bring outside revenues into town through economic development. But like the other candidates, Moreau said he would not support heavy industry coming into Amherst.

In other races:

—School Committee: Two candidates, Marybeth Bridegam and Robert J. Ackermann, vying for one three-year term.

—Redevelopment Authority: William Gillen is running against Benjamin Surner for one five-year term.

Romer

By SEAN HORGAN
Collegian Staff

Diana H. Romer holds two distinctions from the three other candidates running in today's elections to the Amherst Board of Selectmen.

Romer, 47, presently the chairman of the Board of Selectmen, is the only one of the two incumbents running in this year's race who has served a full three-year term on the board. The other incumbent running for one of the two available seats, Roger C. Jacque, was elected last year in an election to fill the vacancy left by Richard Garvey's resignation.

The second distinction is she is the only woman seeking a seat on the board, a fact she refuses to mark as either an advantage or disadvantage in this year's race.

"You would hope," she said, "That people will vote for a candidate on their ability to do the job, and not because of their gender."

Romer was elected as a selectman in 1975, and has served as the chairwoman for the past year. Before that she was a member of the Finance Committee (1971-1975), serving as chairwoman of that committee from 1973 to 1975. She has also been a Town Meeting Member since 1961.

Although she does not forsee any future cuts in services offered by the town, Romer also says she does not forsee any increase in town spending on new programs. Like the other candidates, Romer is calling for a continued stability in town spending, with increases coming only when dictated by the rising rate of inflation.

In terms of the water supply problem, Romer said she is in favor of continuing negotiations with Hadley, with the Lawrence Swamp representing her second alternative. She said tying Amherst into the Quabbin Reservoir is her last resort.

"At this point," she said, "the tie-in with the Quabbin is a very outside alternative. There are too many questions about things like the cost of the aqueduct to transport the water."

Romer also said it will be necessary within the next three years for Amherst to begin to bring outside revenues into the town. She said she would like to see the development of light industry in the town, industries like consulting firms.

Romer has lived in Amherst for 33 years. She holds an A.B. from Smith College.

Arson destroys home

SOUTH HADLEY — Arson was the cause of a March 24 explosion here which destroyed a $75,000 home and damaged several other houses, authorities said yesterday.

Fire Chief Arthur Dubuc released a statement based on an investigation conducted by his department, the state fire marshal's office and explosives experts from the federal Treasury Department's Alcohol, Tobacco, and Firearms Division.

The findings of the statement were based on evidence gathered from the rubble of the unoccupied home, owned by Thomas D. Raymond. Officials did not say what kind of explosive they believe was used to cause the blast.

The house, part of an exclusive residential neighborhood, had been offered for sale.

Board answers queries on revaluation process

By FRAN BASCHE
Collegian Staff

Amherst Selcteman William Atkins last night said he thought the Board of Selectmen have not fully answered questions raised by the Amherst Taxpayers Association surrounding the recent property revaluation at last weeks meeting.

Atkins, who sponsored an agenda item at last night's Selectmen's meeting to hear from the Association again, said the questions had been answered by the assessors but not the board. Atkins said by not addressing the question themselves the selectmen were "discourteous" and showed a lack of respect for the citizens.

Amherst selectmen

The selectmen deferred action on approving a package store re-location to University Drive and approved several liquor licenses. The board also approved and signed the town meeting warrant.

Boardmembers Nathaniel Reed, responding to Atkins, said the unanswered questions were a political problem but the factual questions the association raised were satisfactorily answered.

The association had questioned how its assessments were arrived at, how the firm which handled the revaluation was chosen and what fair value means.

Nancy Gordon, an association member, said although many questions had been answered there were still some unanswered. Gordon specifically questioned the "weighting factors" used to revaluate and assess property, especially older homes.

Gordon questioned the contract the town had with the accounting firm of McGee and Megane, which revaluated and converted the assessment process to a computer process.

Gordon said she was told the public did not have the right to see the firm's charts or computer printouts used in the revaluation. "I find this highly questionable," she said. No clear cut answer was determined to this question.

Kenneth Denno, an electrical and plumbing contractor, said the selectmen have made decisions that discourage new business from locating in town and favored the colleges. Denno said the board has "tunnel vision in one direction-education."

Town Manager A. Louis Hayward reported that the assessors had reviewed one-third of the assessments they had made during the revaluation of which questions had been raised. Hayward also said the assessors are acting on the association's suggestion that the assessors send letters to senior citizens to tell them they may have certain tax options available to them as senior citizens.

In other business the board deferred action on an application to change a location of a package store. The owners of Pete's Package Store, now in North Amherst on Summer Street, want to move their business to University Drive.

Atkins said such a mvoe would pull business away from the center of town.

Students organize against apartheid at Yale

By MARK ULRIKSEN
Collegian Staff

Forty UMass students were among the 500 students who gathered at Yale University last weekend to organize opposition to apartheid racial policies in South Africa.

Students from 45 colleges across the nation attended a three-day conference sponsored by the Northeast Committee for the Liberation of Southern Africa.

The weekend of films and speeches culminated on Sunday when over 150 students staged a protest rally supporting divestment by American colleges and universities of corporate holdings in South Africa.

The committee began as an idea among UMass and Hampshire College students after their campuses carried out successful divestment campaigns. After contacting other schools in December, the Northeast coalition was formed and plans were laid out for last weekend's conference.

The organization selected Yale as the site for the conference because the university has nearly $200 million in investments in South Africa, the committee claimed in a statement.

UMass senior Lisa Melilli attended the conference and called it a success. "Our main purpose," she said, "was to bring both community and college groups together to discuss the role of US corporations and government in Southern Africa."

The stock-holdings question in South Africa resembles the variety of protests students once staged towards Vietnam. Newsweek calls the issue "the new student movement" and Melilli agrees.

"Students come from as far away as Stanford, Duke and the University of Michigan to attend the conference," she said. "Plans are currently in motion for a southern coalition to meet at Duke University and a western coalition to meet at the University of Michigan in the fall," she added.

Students expressed hope that college rallies can become the basis for a national movement against university investments in South Africa, similar to Vietnam protests of a decade ago. As Princeton University representative Alan Sokol said, "We are not powerless before corporate America. We are part of a growing nationwide movement to pressure for divestiture.

Energy expert says nuke power has long way to go

By GARDE WELLS
Collegian Staff

A federal energy official said yesterday that unless the problems are solved, nuclear power will not be fully developed for 15-20 years.

"Atomic fission is fraught with problems from nuclear mine waste to waste from nuclear reactors," said Joel Snow, associate director of the U.S. Department of Energy's Office of Energy Research.

Snow spoke on energy problems facing the country yesterday to 20 persons in Herter Hall 227.

"Our present energy base in this country is composed almost entirely of gas and oil," said Snow. "We are importing 7.5 to 8 billion barrels of oil per day."

The National Energy Plan, according to Snow, has three objectives;

—in the short term, to use energy more efficiently

—in the middle term, to obtain a degree of independence from Arab oil

—in the long run, to develop technology to move from oil to other sources of energy.

Nuclear fuel supplies eight per cent of our country's energy, he said.

"In principle, the breeder reactor is proven technology," said Snow. But dangers exist, he said, in power plant accidents and theft of potentially dangerous nuclear cargoes.

"All of our present fuel resources are in the ground. We should pay attention to research in geology, geothermal energy and geophysics," he said.

One small development using geothermal energy exists in Southern California, according to Snow.

But geothermal energy is expensive and involves complicated equipment that would make widespread use too expensive to be practical, he said.

Solar energy is the only other alternative, according to Snow.

"The sun will be here for several billion years. We need an intensification of solar energy research," said Snow, who noted solar energy now supplies only a fraction of the country's energy.

The problem with solar energy is that it costs 20 to 30 times as much as oil, he said.

The 1978 Department of Energy Budget allocates $870 million for Nuclear Energy Research, $684 Million for coal, gas, and petroleum, and only $316 million for solar energy, according to Snow.

"While world oil supplies run out over the next 30 years, we must look for new sources of energy, especially since raw material for nuclear reactors will also be gone by 2030," he said.

"I think what we're going to see in the next few years is growth in nuclear energy programs before solar energy programs are more freely developed," said Snow.

Central opposes dorm plan

By DEBBIE WALLACE
Collegian Staff

Central Area Council last night voiced its opposition to the new room-choosing procedure in a proposal drafted by council co-Presidents Cindy Thomas and Arty Thomas.

The new housing procedure states once a student decides to move to another dormitory room the student sacrifices his room and engages in a lottery with other students requesting rooms.

The co-presidents' proposal states "that students should have direct input into the formulation of room choosing procedures."

A proposal by Orchard Hill-Central Area Associate Director William Taylor calls for leaving head of residence positions open, and filling vacancies with either a graduate student or two students as a team.

The Central-Orchard Hill Spring Concert will headline Chris Rhodes and Pyrrhana, according to council treasurer Mark Zinan.

The council allocated $200 for Sun Day. Yale Lansky, representative from the Coalition for Environmental Quality, said, "the funds will be used for films, speeches by local politicians and UMass professors, new games, canoe races and Issac Asimov as a headlining speaker."

Twenty-five dollars to purchase basketball nets for the area was also allocated.

'Duke' loses zip; surgery successful

BOSTON [UPI] — Academy Award winner John Wayne, who lately said he had been losing his "zip," yesterday underwent successful open heart surgery during which a valve in his heart was replaced with that from a pig.

The three-hour operation at Massachusetts General Hospital which began about 7:15 a.m. was to replace a mitral valve which controls the flow of blood between the left atrium and the left ventricle of the heart.

"The valve which was replaced came from the heart of a pig," said Dr. Roman W. DeSanctis, head of the hospital's cardiology team. "It is a fairly common operation, not uncommon in older people."

Wayne, 70, who lost a portion of his left lung to cancer 14 years ago, will remain in the intensive care unit for two to three days, doctors said. Doctors said Wayne will remain at the hospital 12 to 21 days.

The "Duke" whose cowboy and soldier action roles over the years kept him a top box office draw, said in a statement released by the hospital that lately he had been "losing my zip."

"He was fairly confident compared to when he went in for lung surgery 14 years ago," said Wayne's movie producer son, Patrick Wayne, during a news conference at the hospital.

The operation, conducted by a team of cardiac surgeons headed by Dr. Mortimer J. Buckley, was termed "uneventful."

Returnable bottles profitable for state

BOSTON [UPI] — Advocates of legislation to end nonreturnable beer and soft drink containers said yesterday that Massachusetts bottlers are wrong in claiming adoption of the bill would cost them money and take jobs out of the state.

"While we delay in passing this legislation, we also stand to lose out on a major economic opportunity here in Massachusetts," Environmental Affairs Commissioner Evelyn F. Murphy said.

"Massachusetts could become the regional center for a returnable bottle and can industry," Ms. Murphy told a Statehouse news conference by the Committee for a Massachusetts Bottle Bill. "Thousands of jobs could occur from such an industry."

The state would be the logical, centrally located site for such an operation since Maine and Vermont already have adopted similar legislation and a Connecticut bottle bill is expected to be enacted soon, she said.

She added that Massachusetts taxpayers would save money now spent on solid waste and litter cleanup if the bill is adopted and more bottles and cans are returned to manufacturers or to recycling facilities.

Norman Stein of the Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group said new jobs would become available if bottlers decided to phase out their use of no-deposit, no-return bottles and replace them with refillable containers.

The switch to refillable containers would not be mandated by the proposed legislation, which would place a five cent deposit on all beer and soft drink containers. But the refillable containers would be more economical for bottlers, Stein said, predicting that brewers eventually would build regional plants in New England to produce and fill the reusable bottles and cans.

Anti-abortion clause upheld in Senate

BOSTON [UPI] — Anti-abortion forces in the Massachusetts Senate yesterday defeated two attempts to strike down a proposal that would prohibit the use of state funds to pay for abortions by state employees.

But abortion advocates demonstrated in two separate roll calls that they had the votes needed to sustain Gov. Michael S. Dukakis' anticipated veto of the bill.

The anti-abortion amendment would prevent legislators, state employees and employees' dependents from using the state's group health insurance policies to pay for abortions that were not needed to save the mother's life.

The amendment, already approved in the House, has been tacked on to a bill to increase the state's share of the employees' health insurance premiums.

Debate on the bill was scheduled to resume today.

In identical 20-15 votes yesterday, the Senate rejected one proposal to remove the anti-abortion clause from the bill and another effort to alter the form of the amendment to allow Dukakis to approve the increased insurance payments while rejecting the anti-abortion provision.

The most vocal opponent of the anti-abortion amendment was Sen. Jack H. Backman, D-Brookline, who protested its inclusion in the insurance bill.

The two questions should be considered separately, Backman said.

"I don't like what we're doing, and I intend to do all I can to see we don't smash the orderly processes of the Constitution just because some people want to take away the right of certain women in this commonwealth to have an abortion," Backman said.

Harrington won't talk on MBM

BOSTON [UPI] — Senate President Kevin B. Harrington yesterday declined an invitation to tell a legislative subcommittee what he knows about a $2,000 campaign contribution apparently received from McKee-Berger-Mansueto in 1970.

The Salem Democrat said he would prefer to meet with the full Senate Post Audit and Oversight Committee rather than appear at a public hearing of Rep. Gerald Cohen's subcommittee investigating MBM's contract with the state.

Harrington said he would be "happy" to meet with the full committee if mutual agreement could be reached on ground rules for the meeting.

The full committee's Senate chairman, Francis X. McCann, D-Cambridge, said late yesterday Harrington told him "he would confer with some legal people tonight and talk with us, McCann and House Chairman Rudy Chmura, D-Springfield Tuesday morning."

There were unconfirmed reports from sources close to the committee that Harrington planned to challenge the legality of Cohen's subcommittee to subpoena witnesses and records and take testimony under oath.

Harrington could not be reached for comment.

MBM was awarded a $6 million contract in 1970 to supervise construction of the $150 million Boston campus of the University of Massachusetts. Allegations have also been raised that MBM did not perform $452,000 worth of work it was paid to do.

Cohen, whom Harrington called a "documented liar" last week, said an examination of Harrington's bank records failed to show a $2,000 deposit to his account in October 1970.

Harrington has acknowledged seeing a copy of a cancelled MBM check endorsed with a signature that resembled his and cashed at his bank in Salem.

Corporate campaign contributions have been illegal in Massachusetts since 1946. The criminal statute of limitations on the alleged $2,000 contribution to Harrington ran out in October 1976.

Cohen, D-Andover, read a letter he sent to Harrington last Tuesday asking him to appear voluntarily yesterday. Harrington's response was made, not to Cohen, but through the traditional legislative chain of command to McCann, Senate chairman of the full Post Audit and Oversight Committee.

Earlier in the day, Boston Mayor Kevin H. White testified for more than an hour about a $2,000 MBM contribution that found its way into his campaign coffers in October 1970.

He denied soliciting the contribution and said he was in Massachusetts General Hospital for treatment of a perforated ulcer when a $2,000 MBM corporate check was made out to Worcester businessman William V. Masiello.

According to signatures on the back of the check, it was endorsed by Masiello to Sen. James A. Kelly Jr., D-Oxford, and stamped "pay to the order of the Kevin H. White for Governor Committee."

Kelly has admitted repeatedly endorsing the check and said yesterday he was co-chairman of a fundraising dinner held at a Boston restaurant in Oct. 1970 for White who was running for governor.

White said he learned from newspapers that the check was recorded as a contribution from Kelly, not Masiello or MBM.

Charles Nesson, special counsel to the subcommittee, said the panel had learned the check was made out at MBM's Boston offices, not at the fundraising party, at a meeting of Masiello, Kelly, and MBM officials Jack Thomas and Anthony Mansueto.

Israel leaves Lebanon; UN enters

[UPI] — The Israeli army has begun a large-scale thinning-out of its forces from southern Lebanon, the military command said yesterday in Tel Aviv.

An army spokesman said the movement of troops and armor out of the area started a week ago and is being coordinated with the U.N. command.

U.N. soldiers from Norway, Sweden, Iran, France and Nepal have been moving in as the Israelis left and the United Nations said yesterday in New York nearly half the planned 4,000-man force is now in place.

"The Israel Defense Forces began about a week ago significant thinning-out of its forces stationed in southern Lebanon," a statement by the Israeli command said.

General quiet prevailed in the border region for the 13th straight day but observers noted both Palestinian and Israeli forces are taking advantage of the calm to fortify fixed positions along the cease-fire lines in the south.

In other developments, Israeli Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan and Romanian President Nicolae Ceausescu yesterday held talks in Bucharest on the Middle East. Romanian officials gave no details of the meeting.

However, Romania is the only East European Communist country to maintain full diplomatic relations with both Egypt and Israel, and Ceausescu helped arrange Egyptian President Anwar Sadat's visit to Jerusalem last November.

In Jerusalem, U.S. Ambassador Samuel Lewis said yesterday Defense Minister Ezer Weizman will return to Cairo in the next week to resume direct talks on a peace settlement with Egypt.

He spoke to reporters in the parliament building after an hour-long meeting with Prime Minister Menachem Begin and morning consultations with Weizman in Tel Aviv.

"I understand from the prime minister and defense minister that he (Weizman) hopes to go back sometime in the next week or so, but I don't believe any dates have been set," Lewis said.

His comment confirmed a statement by Sadat in a magazine interview saying Weizman would return within two weeks.

Lewis said he and Begin also discussed a possible visit by Dayan to Washington and the renewal of the Middle East shuttle trips of Assistant Secretary of State Alfred Atherton.

But he said nothing has been firmly agreed. "I feel sure there will be more contacts in the not very distant future," Lewis said.

Park concedes payoffs but denies he was agent

WASHINGTON [AP] — Korean rice dealer Tongsun Park, saying his career was an "American success story," publicly testified yesterday that he gave more than $850,000 to selected members of Congress.

However, he denied — as he has repeatedly — that he was acting as an agent of the South Korean government when he made those contributions.

And although acknowledging that he had made mistakes, he swore that he engaged in no illegal conspiracy to buy influence for his country or for himself.

"I want to tell you: What I have done in Washington constitutes an American success story on a small scale," he said.

Park gave his first public testimony in an appearance before the House Ethics Committee. The hearing was held in the same room where the House Judiciary Committee voted impeachment resolutions against former President Richard M. Nixon in 1974.

Park, who said he made more than $9 million in rice sales to South Korea, testified he gave as much as $247,000 to former Rep. Otto E. Passman, D-La., who has been indicted for alleged conspiracy with Park to deny the United States a corrupt-free government. But he noted that until 1974, it was completely legal for a foreigner to contribute to U.S. political campaigns.

He said that while he did hope to influence congressional opinion in favor of his country, he was doing so simply as a patriotic and aspiring South Korean businessman.

Park acknowledged giving a total $262,000 to former Rep. Richard T. Hanna, D-Calif., who recently pleaded guilty to a one-count conspiracy indictment centering around his relationship with the South Korean.

Park said he hadn't conspired with Hanna, either. He said he and the former California congressman had enjoyed a close personal relationship, "much like that between two close brothers."

Carter returns satisfied

MONROVIA, Liberia [UPI] — Warning that South African rejection of black rule for Namibia could cause a serious rift with the United States, President Carter yesterday flew back to Washington, ending "a great trip ... extraordinary."

Aboard Air Force One from Nigeria, Carter told reporters:

"I thought it was a great trip to all three countries so far Venezuela, Brazil and Nigeria, much better than we anticipated, more than we had reason to expect ... extraordinary."

"We enjoyed the trip," he added. "It was a good experience for us."

And Carter's reception in Liberia, his quickie last stop before heading home, could hardly have dampened his enthusiasm.

In a nation founded in the 19th Century largely by freed American slaves, Carter was greeted by as many as 200,000 cheering Liberians in a friendly, chaotic outpouring of love and affection.

They waited in the merciless, tropical sun for up to five hours, then when Carter arrived knocked down police barricades, swarmed the streets, waved American flags and palm fronds, stood on stilts to see better, and chased the president's limousine.

"Overwhelming," said Carter of the most frantic reception of his three overseas trips.

Talking in shirtsleeves to reporters aboard the presidential jet, Carter warned South Africa that reluctance to switch to black minority rule in neighboring Namibia could further damage relations with the United States.

But he stopped short of threatening economic sanctions. As for his talks with Lt. Gen. Olusegun Obasanjo, Nigeria's military leader, "We have a difference in approach ... I think he would be much more aggressive in total embargo against South Africa."

"We are approaching a time of testing from the South African government's position on Namibia," said Carter of the former German Colony also known as South West Africa.

"If South Africa should reject a reasonable proposal and move unilaterally on Namibia, it would be a serious indication of their unwillingness to comply ... with the United Nations' decisions and international opinion."

"This would be one thing that can precipitate a more serious difference between us and South Africa."

— In Venezuela, Carter found kinship with President Carlos Perez on the general issue of human rights, but indicated he was unwilling to go as far as Perez in seeking to oust Anastasio Somoza, Nicaragua's dictator. And he learned that Venuzuela wants to raise oil prices and will use its precious crude to help forge a new world economic order.

France elects house speaker

PARIS [UPI] — Former Premier Jacques Chaban-Delmas was elected yesterday as speaker of the lower house of the legislature, defeating the candidate of the man who once denied him the French presidency.

The vote came in the first session of the Chamber of Deputies since legislative elections March 19 in which the ruling center-right coalition won a 291-200 majority over the Socialist-Communist opposition.

The 63-year-old Chaban, a Gaullist rightist, outpolled Edgar Faure, also a former premier, 153-136 in the first ballot. This was short of the required majority but Faure then withdrew and left the field open to Chaban.

In the second round, Chaban won 276 votes against 112 for Socialist Pierre Mauroy and 85 for Communist Maurice Andrieux. Four other ballots went to miscellaneous candidates or were invalidated.

The 69-year-old Faure had been supported by Paris Mayor Jacques Chirac, head of the Gaullist Rally for the Republic Party and the man who upset Chaban's bid for the French presidency in 1974.

At the time, Chirac denied his fellow Gaullist the nomination by throwing his support to Valery Giscard d'Estaing, who subsequently defeated Socialist Party leader Francois Mitterrand.

The Chamber of Deputies vote also showed that the Socialists and Communists, whose bickering was considered a factor in their March 19 election defeat, are still split.

Instead of combining their second-round votes behind a single candidate, the Socialists voted for Mauroy and the Communists voted for Andrieux, effectively splitting their 197 votes.

The Socialists and Communists won the preliminary legislative elections March 12 — in effect nationwide primaries — with a two per cent margin over the ruling center-right coalition.

But although a week later they combined their strength behind one candidate in each of the districts, French voters gave the center-right a surprisingly large margin.

Suspect released in strangler case

LOS ANGELES [AP] — A 37-year-old Beverly Hills handyman, booked for investigation of two Hillside Strangler murders, was being released immediately for lack of evidence, Police Chief Daryl Gates said yesterday.

Peter Mark Jones was being processed for release from the holding facility at police headquarters while Gates and Jones' attorney, Albert Johnson of Boston, held a news conference downstairs.

Jones was arrested last Thursday in what Gates said then was a "major break" in the series of 13 killings since last September that has baffled police.

Jones was booked in the deaths of victims five and six, Jill Barcomb, 18, of New York and Kathleen Robinson, 17, of Los Angeles. His arrest came after his childhood friend, George Francis Shamshak, told police about at least two strangler killings, giving details which Gates said only the killer or police would know.

"We have been unable to find evidence to support the statements that Mr. Shamshak made about Jones," Gates said. "We find that it would be highly improper to continue to hold him, Jones, in custody."

Jones was the second man to be released after being booked for murder in the case. Actor Ned York, 32, was booked in February after talking about the seventh strangler victim, Kristina Weckler, a 20-year-old art student from Glendale.

Followers remember King's assassination

MEMPHIS, Tenn. [UPI] — Followers who marched beside Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. in the 60s and others who know him only by legend gathered yesterday at the site of his assassination for an all-night vigil to commemorate the 10th anniversary of his death.

Several thousand others were expected to join the group today during a march sponsored by the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees, the union representing the striking garbagemen whose plight brought King to Memphis in 1968.

King's widow, Coretta, will remain in Atlanta where the civil rights leader is buried. She plans to lay a wreath on his grave this afternoon.

The commemoration of the Nobel Peace prize winner's death on April 4, 1968 began at 10 p.m. yesterday with a rally at the Mason Temple Church of God in Christ, where King preached his last sermon on the eve of his death.

Justices limit court in nuclear protection

WASHINGTON [AP] — The Supreme Court, chastising judges for "Monday morning quarterbacking" gave the federal government greater freedom in determining the nation's nuclear energy policy.

Federal courts may play only a limited role in protecting the public from any possible dangers of nuclear power plants, the justices said unanimously yesterday.

Their decision struck down a ruling by the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Washington that the federal Nuclear Regulatory Commission does too little to ensure nuclear safety.

The lower court had required the commission to upgrade its rules covering radioactive waste. It also had ruled that the commission must first consider all possible alternatives before granting licenses for construction and operation of nuclear reactors.

Yesterday's decision nullifies those court-imposed requirements — providing an important legal victory for the commission and 16 power companies which had sought Supreme Court reversal.

Berrigan's speech inspiring?

To the Editor:

Dan the Man told a parable about Nick the Greek at the Newman Center Saturday. Nick the Greek did not cringe in the face of death. He managed to rasp out, "Get me a cigarette". Nothing would dissuade him from this so they let him smoke because he rasped, "I'm going to die anyway."

Nick the Greek lived a full life — he enjoyed a good party. That very week he had his 55th birthday and even though he had a fever he insisted that the party go on. Nick lived the life he chose and yes, we must admit he chose his way to die.

Those last few days in the hospital, Nick did not want to talk of dying. He gathered his family around him and talked of living and loving — boasted of the good and full life he had. Nick the Greek will be remembered as a happy, robust, loving man.

At a conference where abortion was a major topic, what can women learn from this parable? — We must also take the courageous stand with life. Each woman must take control of her own body. She alone must choose whether or not to have an abortion. Only by taking responsibility for her own life will she too be able to boast one day of having lived the good and full life, and like Nick, remembered as a happy, robust, loving woman.

Fleetwood Mac is missing

To the Editor:

I've been going around the dorm the past week saying how the stickers which were put up on all dorm doors during vacation are a nuisance, childish and a waste of money. I spent about half an hour peeling the stickers off my door, Sunday, when I returned. The stickers make the already poor excuse of a home even more oppressive. Besides this fact, any child of ten should know how to get out of the house when there is a fire. I mean really, how old does the administration think we are! Instead of wasting however much money they did spend on these stickers, I would rather have seen the dorms plumbing fixed, clean water come out of our sinks, or the bathroom stalls repaired. I should think the school could think of more efficient things to do with the states money.

This was not my major problem however. After talking to many other students, I have found that I am not alone in this frustration. Upon returning to Amherst after vacation I noticed my Fleetwood Mac "Rumors" album was missing. I thought I had lent it out and forgotten about it. I asked everyone to whom I might have lent it out to but was unable to find it. Then, I found that other people were missing one or two albums, also. I asked around more and got some valuable stories. 1] Another friend had totally cleaned out his room before leaving school for vacation. He returned to find a Playboy magazine on his bed open with the centerfold ripped out; 2] another friend discovered his Stevie Wonder 8-track missing; 3] one woman returned to what she thought would be a clean room, to find her bed slept in, her sheets stolen, her food eaten, and dirty dishes all over the room; 4] also, a woman returned to find the wires on the arm of her stereo ripped and her speakers blown; and 5] another guy came back to his room after vacation and found his large, expensive floor lamp stolen out of his room. Want me to keep going on? I could!

My conclusion: someone with a pass key must have come around and taken a little from everyone.

Who: how about those who put up those damn stickers and fire alarms, on the inside of our rooms.

Many of us are really pissed off. I don't think anyone should be allowed to enter our rooms with our personal property in it without our permission. I call upon the student government to do something in order to protect our rights!

Butterfield requests exemption

To the Editor:

Residents of Butterfield House are presently petitioning for exemption from the new inter-dorm room choosing policy in order to ensure that our shared efforts to strengthen Butterfield as a co-operative dormitory are maintained.

Presently, students who wish to live in Butterfield, are encouraged to return as often as possible to show enthusiasm to not just live in a newly renovated dorm, but a dorm where unique art facilities, a dining room and special art and educational programs enrich a co-operative feeling among dorm residents. We feel that the present residency policy ensures the continuance of this co-operative feature of Butterfield for it ensures that new residents will patronize and enrich Butterfield's facilities and co-operative and community spirit. We feel that the new system will be detrimental to this.

We also feel that the new system presents four serious problems to students in room choosing: one, if you move out of your present dorm there is no way to assure getting back into that dorm in the future should you desire; two, if you are exempted from university housing you automatically lose space in your present dorm; three, you lose your present room if you choose to move and this will be done without assurance of the desired new space; and four, if you want to change dorms, you cannot choose your new room.

Radcliffe adopted the same system two years ago and it was reported that 70 per cent of students did not receive dorm preference while with the former system of contacting head of residents left only 25 per cent dissatisfied. This new system would also prevent the development of a co-operative system in other dorms which presently exists in Butterfield.

We certainly feel that this new system will not, needless to say, improve the quality of campus living, but will be a detriment. Although Butterfield is petitioning against the new system for all the reasons above mentioned, some of which are particular to Butterfield, we feel other dormitory residents should also join us in petitioning against the new policies. If you feel the way we do, start a petition in your dorm. It can only help the situation.

So much for the Rusty Nail

To the Editor:

Saturday night was an excellent night in Southwest at UMass. So much was going on, I didn't know what to do. But of course there was little cause for disagreement — Pousette — Dart Band was appearing at the Rusty Nail. Seven of us piled into a Pacer [two of whom were from Harvard], got to know each other, and got psyched to hear some good tunes. We arrived at the Rusty Nail at 8:20. There was a line but we didn't think it was too bad. So we hung out and hung out. The line began to move and then a limit was set. My friends and I were next to get in and then they closed shop.

Two policemen and the manager, a man clad in a grey suit that didn't fit the atmosphere, told us to leave. "Dart will be at Mt. Holyoke next month." What a bummer. We were set to get rolling and now this.

So we hung out some more and most everyone behind us left except three people. Would you believe that after staying with it for two hours, the manager kicked us off the premises accompanied by absurd threats to tow our cars. Just then two other policemen pulled up in a cruiser. The fans got a little uptight. But one of the cops at the door took a liking to us as we waited patiently while others tried phony admission stamps and meek excuses such as: "I'm applying for a job here."

Some attempts to get in were very original, but what really disappointed me was those with special privileges. "Hey I know so-and-so," or I'm with the band," etc. Of course they were admitted. The younger cop who had befriended us was sorry for us when his partner let them in. We still waited hoping for a break.

We finally left after the manager of the Rusty Nail harassed us some more. We went back to Southwest, put on some Pousette-Dart, and had a great party. So much for the Rusty Nail.

Students pay for Senate's drinks

To the Editor:

We are all familiar with the great ripoffs the Student Senate has made on the students. These ripoffs include the sending of over $4,000 to Kent State in order to aid their effort in protesting the building of a gym. Another of these famous ripoffs is that concerning the traditional Spring Concert. This year the Senate stole the Spring Concert from us and has mandated that the Union Program Concert to provide the students with a Black American Music Concert. Such leaders as Brian DeLima claim that the concert should provide students with an education in music and implies that no longer should the Student Senate advocate and promote with funds any program which would exist purely to provide fun and enjoyment for the students.

If you think that these two ripoffs top the cake then you were not present at the 1978 Electoral College meeting held Wednesday night. I was present during the entire convention. I tell you right now that I was inclined to believe that the constituents were ignored by most of the Senators before Wednesday night, but the convention solidified those inclinations.

At approximately 12:30 a.m. the convention delegates were getting hungry. The snack shop was closed at that time. Though the coke machines were operational I guess our Honorable Leaders were at a loss of 30 cents for rather than buying their own drinks to fill their faces they chose to trespass the Hatch's property and steal drinks from the Hatch's. Shelly Gordon has indicated to me that those that drank the stolen drinks will not be compelled to pay for it. She went on to say that ultimately we the students will be held to pay for it. We the students now have to provide our Honorable Leaders with food to fill their stomachs.

This is by far the worst of the Ripoffs yet and I think that it is time the students get on the phone and give grief back to the Student Senate, individual Senators, Area Government Representatives, and the Collegian for not having reported on this robbery. I would like the students to revolt and take back the control of their government.

Authentic women's culture

julie melrose

At a meeting last week, the statement was made that "there is no such thing as women's culture. Men and women work side-by-side in determining culture in this country." I believe this to be untrue.

Webster's New Collegiate Dictionary defines culture as "the customary beliefs, social forms and material traits of a racial, religious or social group." I believe non-feminist women in America and American feminists constitute two such groups. Not only is there such a thing as women's culture, but there are two main women's cultures in this country at the present time. present time.

Mainstream American culture has been determined by white males (i.e. those in power), and has been designed to protect their power and privilege.

Non-feminist women's culture bolsters white male culture and in no way threatens white male privilege. Since non-feminist women's culture consists only of beliefs and activities designed to retain the approval of men, men play a very large part in determining this type of women's culture.

American feminist culture, on the other hand, rejects and challenges white male culture. It is determined by women for women, and consists of beliefs and activities which reflect women's perceptions of the world. Feminist women trust their own judgement, are not overwhelmingly concerned with men's approval or disapproval of them, and do not accept white male cultural standards as their own.

If "men and women work side-by-side in determining culture in this country," why is it that the work of women writers held in high esteem by women readers almost never makes its way into anthologies of "Great American Literature" or curricula of courses in "Contemporary American Poetry?"

If "men and women work side-by-side in determining culture in this country," why are films, plays and art shows found powerful and moving by female viewers so consistantly ignored or torn apart by male reviewers?

The obvious answer is that when women's cultural products are judged according to white male cultural standards, which they were never designed to meet, of course they don't "measure up."

When men evaluate the products of women's culture, they give their approval to those which in no way threaten white male privilege and throw out those which attempt to expose the way women are oppressed by men. It is safe for a quilt to be referred to as a "lovely example of women's art." But a book of radical feminist poetry? Never.

Well...almost never. It is true that a small number of feminist writers have managed to get their work published by the "mainstream" male-controlled publishing companies. It is true that the work of a feminist songwriter-performer will occasionally come out under one of the "mainstream" recording companies' labels. It is also true that a small number of women hold positions in the "semi-higher echelons" of such companies. This is where the "token woman" phenomenon comes into play.

In a country that boasts equal representation of all citizens, total suppression of authentic women's cultural products would be just too blatantly hypocritical. So they continue to appear, in limited amounts and restrictive settings.

Similarly, women holding positions of responsibility in male-created institutions appear in limited amounts and restrictive settings. Let those women show the slightest interest in challenging the white male privilege those institutions were designed to promote and protect, and they will find their desirability as "token females" declining at an alarming rate.

The woman holds and maintains a position of responsibility in a male-created institution because she disassociates herself from women less fortunate than herself and adopts white male standards is a woman who fails to recognize her own oppression. Her failure to take action against the oppression of women hurts not only her feminist sisters but, ultimately, herself.

While a woman in such a position might appear to be a feminist because of her success in the working world, her unquestioning participation in the maintenance of white male privilege renders her an "agent of the oppressor"...no more than a puppet of the men with whom she so proudly envisions herself to have achieved equality.

In time, such a woman may gain a greater understanding of the true nature of her "powerlessness" and join feminist women in seizing real power. For now, the struggle will go on without her.

While the past ten years have seen a significant increase in the creation of products of feminist women's culture, public visibility and recognition of those products remains nearly unattainable.

Women-controlled businesses and publications are springing up all over the country, but they are small and poorly funded at present and cannot begin to serve the needs of women on a national scale. The fact is that the real power and dollars remain in the hands of white male institutions which, even if they recognize the existence of women's culture, are in no position to judge its products fairly.

For this reason, women must affirm and promote an authentic women's culture by seizing the resources that should be theirs by right. Until this is done, women's culture in this country will remain largely invisible.

Luxury and budget cuts

By JOE MAHONEY

The car came fully equipped: air conditioning, AM-FM stereo, superior suspension, and the leather upholstery, well, it was just divine.

The revelation that the UMass trustees last year purchased a luxury car with an $8049 price tag for their president surfaced at a hearing Wednesday in Boston, where the Committee on State Administration considered a proposal that would give the Dukakis administration control over the 685 vehicles owned by the state's higher education institutions. Funny thing that it wasn't the trustees who brought it up.

Arthur Sweeney, director of the state motor pool, said the most expensive vehicles his agency buys are station wagons, at approximately $5000.

But there is nothing distinguished about a $5000 wagon.

This car had to be fit for a corporate boss. Which is just what then-President Robert Wood had become in his tenure here. So the trustees, out of their largesse with university funds, doled out for The Boss what is reported to be the most expensive state-owned sedan in Massachusetts.

Under Wood's guidance, the university came to be administered like a Woolco's department store: trustees now worry about how much water the bubbler systems waste instead of how much can be taught.

And the fallout from the headlines made by these education brokers — the trustees, the chancellors, the president — can only make it more difficult for those who have to pimp the university's proposed budget to the legislature.

While students are forced to live in dilapidating dormitories, take overcrowded courses, and accept token input into how they are to be educated, the education brokers figure out ways to continue the treadmill in style.

Consider a few examples that come to the mind of this casual observer of university affairs.

In the summer of 1976, when the legislature was trying to hold the line on state employees salaries, the trustees, in blatant disdain for the state's budget crisis, boosted the salaries of then-President Wood, who already had a salary in excess of $50,000 yearly, and his highly-paid staff. The classified employees here, who had received no raises in over two years, were denied an increase.

True, even fat cats feel the pinch of inflation; but for those living on poverty-level incomes, it is murder.

To be sure, the legislature had these windfall salaries in mind when they decided to level fund the university that year.

Then there were the widely-publicized personal trips to sporting events that Chancellor Randolph Bromery was fond of taking a few years back at the public's expense.

The known tab for the chancellor's junkets — an audit was never conducted — came to some $3000. Bromery's rationale? His presence at UMass basketball games, he said, bolstered the team's morale. How touching.

Gov. Michael Dukakis would have liked to have placed Bromery's tongue on the third rail of the Green Line, on which he rides to work everyday.

And finally, back in 1971, then-Chancellor Oswald Tippo, in a campus uproar, quit his post because of personal differences with then-President Wood, a man who has a profound proclivity for feeding at the public trough. Rumors circulated (if they're true, this is a scoop) that Tippo was opposed to Wood's plan to build a helicopter landing pad near the stadium. The stadium remains padless, one defeat for the pork barrel spenders.

We won't mention Wood's plush, million-dollar office he kept in Boston.

,Now, Bromery, who seems to be spending more time off campus with his outside interests — he's a member of the Exxon board of directors — is putting on a cry-baby act in order to garner the UMass presidency. If he doesn't land the post by next year, he says, he'll quit.

And so on.

The legislature will again trim the university's budget to the bone. The students and potential students will feel the cuts the most.

And interim President Franklin Patterson can wave his state-funded oil company credit cards to the gas station attendant, and say, "Fill it up."

Dirty dealings

bob melia

Go to jail. Go directly to jail. Do not pass RSO, do not collect speaker's paychecks. Many people would like to see precisely this happen to newly re-elected senate speaker Brian DeLima. DeLima's victory is astonishing considering the cloud of animosity and illegitimacy that surrounds him.

DeLima is abrasive and often offensive, and he knows it. As a result of this, the professional staff of the SGA despises him, and he them. Relations have deteriorated to the point where charges have been brought against him for making personal use of SGA equipment and for theft of personal property.

But despite these facts, well known in SGA circles, DeLima won re-election, leading inevitably to talk of deals. Most political observers think it is incomprehensible that DeLima, with all the murky issues that surround him, could have won without backroom bargaining.

He supposedly secured his victory by gaining the support of three groups: the Henry Doyle faction, the Third World Caucus, and the Susan Birmingham faction. There is some evidential support for each alleged deal, although all the agents involved deny everything. Let's examine each in turn.

1) DeLima-Doyle. This is a natural alliance as DeLima has historical ties to the Doyle machine and worked for Gordon-Tyson, the Doyle machines presidential candidates. It could turn out to be a blunder though, because DeLima's victory has freed Dion, the other candidate for speaker, to run for president against Gordon-Tyson.

2) DeLima-Third World. The Third World usually votes as a block and it is clear that they voted for DeLima, but it is not clear what they got in return. DeLima claims that they voted for him because he has historically supported them.

3) DeLima-Birmingham. This is the most complicated issue. If a deal was made it would involve, on the one side, Birmingham supporting DeLima, and the SOP, with whom Birmingham has intimate ties, dropping its charges against DeLima. In return DeLima would lay off SOP and not slash its budget. Although Birmingham denies it, DeLima admits that Birmingham agreed to nominate him but backed out at the last minute. Still, she used her influence to get him elected, DeLima says.

The SOP has indeed dropped its charges against DeLima. Although this tends to confirm a deal, it can be explained outside the context of a deal. DeLima claims the charges are simply weak or false. Those who made them claim that they have dropped them as a show of good faith that they are willing to work with DeLima.

This is a very tangled web, probably one which outsiders will never get to the bottom of. The empirical evidence is insufficient to decide between whether DeLima won by backroom deals or by above-board persuasion. But this is not the end of the matter. To be useful, the SGA must be seen as legitimate. This latest episode, tainted by clouds of corruption, serves only to deepen the legitimation deficit that SGA is running up.

Student senators should have more sense than to elect someone whose integrity is suspect. The widespread belief that the senate is corrupt is reinforced when its leadership is chosen by undemocratic means.

Brian DeLima has often and correctly argued that the senate mystifies its procedures, gives the appearance of awkwardness which prevents it from being effective. But DeLima himself has mystified the process by raising the possibility that he has engaged in activities which make the senate awkward and ineffective. He should know better. And if senators have listened to his past lectures, they should also know better. And if they haven't, why did they elect him again?

Jews and Arabs clash over film

LOS ANGELES (AP) — As Hollywood's elite arrived by limousine for the 50th Academy Awards ceremony yesterday night, the waiting crowds included Jewish and Arab protesters respectively denouncing and praising Oscar nominee Vanessa Redgrave.

"The people of Israel live," chanted more than 100 members of the Jewish Defense League as they burned an effigy of Yassir Arafat, leader of the Palestine Liberation Organization.

While the life-size effigy burned itself out, a group of more than 100 Arabs, about a dozen feet away but separated from the Jewish group by two rows of helmeted policemen, chanted "Long Live the PLO."

A man wearing a Nazi uniform claimed he and two companions were attacked and struck by Jewish group members. The man, Allen Vincent, who said he was a leader of the National Socialist White Worker Party, said another Nazi-uniformed man was hit on the head and cut. It was the only observable incident of violence.

The yells of the protesters mingled with the cheers of movie fans from nearby bleachers as the stars arrived at the downtown Music Center. A veteran observer noted that the demonstrations were not much louder than in previous years when other groups were involved.

Both groups were brought out by the presence of Miss Redgrave, nominated for best supporting actress for her role in "Julia," in which she portrayed an underground anti-Nazi before World War II. The protesters were angry at her financing and narration of "The Palestinian," a documentary in which Arafat appeared.

Miss Redgrave last week talked with an official of 20th Century-Fox, producer of "Julia," and reportedly gave assurance that she would attend the ceremonies as an artist and not a propagandist.

An estimated 300 Los Angeles police officers, sheriff's deputies and civilian security officers were located around and inside the Music Center, many of them in plain clothes, police said.

The Jewish group has demanded that 20th Century-Fox promise never to hire Miss Redgrave again. Picketing of theaters playing "Julia" was threatened unless the demands were met.

HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — Supporters of the Jewish Defense League shout defiance at a crowd appearing for the 50th anniversary of the Academy Awards presentations last night. The members are angry over the award nomination to Vanessa Redgrave for her protrayal in the film "Julia."

Your Birthday

TUESDAY, APRIL 4

Born today, you are a just, generous person who gives blame and credit fairly yet compassionately. You do not enjoy considering the plight of others, but you find it lets you better understand people and their motives, and this results in your being able to help the troubled more easily, effectively, and directly.

You are very much the Good Samaritan, but you are not at all a pushover. You are firm, strong of character, objective, and not blinded by flattery, false tales of woe, or clever manipulation. You will do what you think right even if there are adverse repercussions.

You are to be trusted with secrets. You are intelligent, sensitive, friendly, and independent. You would rather be alone with a clear conscience than surrounded by company before whom you would feel ashamed, even inwardly.

Also born on this date: John Landy, track star; Thaddeus B. Stevens, statesman; Lawrence Hough, rowing champion.

To see what is in store for you tomorrow, find your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 5

ARIES(March 21-April 19) — A question of property creates tension at home. Employment matters smooth out.

TAURUS(April 20-May 20) — Don't let grass grow under your feet. Seize the chance to progress in a field you enjoy.

GEMINI(May 21-June 20) — A gradual expansion of financial horizons brings near-euphoria.

CANCER(June 21-July 22) — Be cautious in dealings with others. Best friends may prove suspicious today.

LEO(July 23-Aug.22) — Promote an interesting new project while firming up an essential relationship at home.

VIRGO(Aug.23-Sept.22) — Business may hinder morning social life. Gamble on another's qualifications.

LIBRA(Sept.23-Oct.22) — Business and domestic partners simplify life. Accept help.

SCORPIO(Oct.23-Nov.21) — Effort toward another's project should be repaid in kind. Do your best.

SAGITTARIUS(Nov.22-Dec.21) — Dealings with family may be sticky today. Children give a clue to an old problem.

CAPRICORN(Dec.22-Jan.19) — Smiles will gain your ends today. Don't annoy those in authority. Ask, don't nag.

AQUARIUS(Jan.20-Feb.18) — Good deeds pay off well later this week. Don't expect gains to be noticed immediately.

PISCES(Feb.19-March 20) — Make the whole family part of your decision. Changes are essential to success.

Women's bowling team places 2nd in Sectionals

The UMass women's bowling team second place finish in the Sectionals at RPI in Troy, N.Y. last weekend dashed hopes for a birth in National Collegiate Bowling Championship in Milwaukee. Erie Community College, the winner at RPI will represent the northeast region at the nationals.

After the first string, the UMass women were in second place and stayed there for the remaining eight strings, finishing the tournament with a 6899.

The UMass team, consisting of Amanda Garcia, Gina McEvoy, Jackie Cashen, Beth Schneider, and Cyndy Adams, were no match for the powerful team from Erie Community College. The Erie women, who placed extremely high in the Nationals last year, bowled a 7357 this weekend to win the berth from the northeast regions for the Nationals. SUNY A & T — Farmingdale, placed third with a 6491.

Amanda Garcia, high roller for the UMass women, bowled an excellent series of 540, 555, and 522, with a high game of 212. Gina McEvoy bowled a 502 series.

The last competition of the season for the UMass bowlers will be the Match Games held in Springfield on April 15.

Water polo club wins 2

The UMass water polo club got off to a good start this weekend, with victories for two of its three teams. The men's A team traveled to Troy, N.Y., where UMass beat RPI 11-4. Bob Corb was the leading scorer with three goals.

The men's B team and the women's team split at BU. The Minutewomen lead by Adrienne Fredey's five goals and Lynne Lutz' seven save performance, topped the Terriers 10-5.

The men's B team, leading 3-0, allowed BU to tie the score with a minute and a half to go. The game went into overtime, and UMass finally lost 7-5. Five of the seven starters each scored a goal, and goalie Bill Tharion "kept UMass in the game" with 11 saves, according to teammate senior Ric Notini.

This weekend, the men's A team travels to a tournament at Columbia, while the B team and women will play a home tournament at Boyden.

Eckersley wins in Sox debut

WINTER HAVEN, FLA. [UPI] — Dennis Eckersley pitched three-hit ball for five innings in his Boston debut yesterday to pace the Red Sox to a 6-0 exhibition victory over the New York Mets.

Eckersley, traded from Cleveland to Boston last week in a six-player deal, yielded three doubles, two to Ron Hodges and one to Lenny Randle, while striking out three and walking two batters over five innings.

Boston's Bill Campbell gave up two hits in two innings and Dick Drago stopped the Mets on one hit in the final inning as the Red Sox won their eighth game in the last 10.

Fred Lynn's double and Carl Yastrzemski's single and triple were the big hits for the Red Sox, who tagged Nino Espinosa with the loss. The Red Sox are 15-10 this spring while the Mets dropped to 10-14.

Cowens sidelined with muscle pull

BOSTON [UPI] — Center Dave Cowens was expected to miss the Boston Celtics' game in Chicago today because of a groin pull.

Cowens, averaging 18.6 points and 13.9 rebounds per game, suffered the injury Sunday in Boston's 123-120 loss to the Indiana Pacers. Cowens failed to respond to treatments Monday and did not accompany the team on its afternoon flight to Chicago.

Celtics officials said the 6-foot-9 center was expected to play Thursday against Washington in Providence, R.I.

Hockey Club seeking IM help

By MARTHA KIMBALL
Collegian Staff

As the UMass Hockey Club's first season closes, player enthusiasm and support abounds, yet the future extent of the club lies in cooperation with the UMass Intramural office.

Dustin Burke, president and founder of the club, plans later this month to submit to the Intramural Office regarding possible administrative and financial assistance for the club and reviewing the success of the season.

"Because of the large burden placed on the club's student officers administratively," Burke said, "I'd like to have the intramural office and athletic department involved with scheduling, team entrants, and receiving money. We had very high player enthusiasm and great competition."

The club, established last fall, consists of 19 teams divided into four divisions. Approximately 250 people participated including about 20 women who played informally.

"I was anxious to see more hockey come to UMass to satisfy this much demanded sport," Burke said. UMass only funds a varsity squad which extensively limits the number of people involved in competitive play.

"The Intramural office has expressed interest in the club, but has rendered little service as of yet," Burke said, "Much will depend on the Intramural's reaction to my proposal. I'm not proposing that the Intramural Office completely take over the club, just provide some help."

Frank Wright, assistant intramural director said: "I feel it should always be a club operated program due to off campus scheduling difficulty. We have enough of a problem scheduling our present intramural teams on campus. I've spoken with Dustin Burke and the other Hockey Club officers last fall. If he sets the program up, we'll be glad to help him."

Mike Sullivan, UMass Hockey Club vice-president, said: "Our season went solidly well. The Intramural Office wasn't 100 per cent cooperative this year; they wanted to see how our season went. I hope the athletic department acknowledges us and gives help. We need some manpower to keep the club going, at least five officers. The workload is too much for only one or two people. It just cannot be done."

Burke listed finances, administrative burdens, transportation, and refereeing as the major problem areas this past season.

"A considerable financial budget was raised entirely through student savings; no help came from the Athletic department nor SGA, eventhough we applied to both organizations. There is plenty of interest when students raise $40-50 over the winter to play hockey," Burke said.

Regarding administrative duties, Burke said, "It's a large burden running a club of this magnitude by full time students. We've lost officers due to the large amount of work."

Teams were arranged so each had an adequate number of drivers to the three rinks, Orr Rink at Amherst College, Greenfield, Holyoke State Rink, and Williston Academy Rink, Easthampton. David Bischoll, dean of the School of Physical Education, expressed that a great need exists for a combination hockey-basketball facility here on campus. "We are hopeful, but it's a long process. We need to develop alternatives and a feasibility committee," he said.

Negotiations are underway for the construction of a state hockey rink at the Northampton fairgrounds. Douglas McGarrah, aide to state Sen. John Olver who proposed the rink, said, "In 1974 $1.2 million was appropriated for a rink in Hampshire County. This money must be spent by July 1979. The green light was given two weeks ago after several public hearings for negotiations between the Northampton City Council and the Three County Fair Association."

Tim Breen, manager of the Breen's Bruins, said, "I was pleased with the season. It was well organized. I hope to see it continue. I'm sure players would help out with the work.

Karen Reed, manager of the women's division, said, "We had a good amount of interest; I hope the program continues next year. The club does need help, only a few people carried most of the work."

Regarding the women's program, Burke said, "Next year I intend to pursue an interscholastically competitive five college women's hockey program."

"And a child shall lead them..."

The familiar biblical quotation was never more evident than yesterday as no fewer than seven UMass freshmen won individual events as the UMass women's track team rolled over the University of New Hampshire, 97-35 in its home opener.

Leading the youth brigade was Kelly Butler, who won both the shot put and discus. Karen Snow copped the other throwing event, the javelin.

In the jumps, Sue Ares cleared a personal best of 5'2" to nip freshman (what else!) teammate Cathy Harrington. Linda Stillman won a close long jump battle by one quarter of an inch..

The distances saw cross country standout Tina Francario and potentially great distance runner Linda Weizel take the mile and two mile, respectively.

If it wasn't a freshman, a sophomore was stealing the limelight. Cindi Martin won a close battle in the half, from teammate Laurie Wolf (an "over the hill" junior); and Karolyn Shea hustled to an easy quarter victory.

Soph Diana Sealy made her presence felt in the first and last track events of the meet, as she showed her heels to a disgruntled UNH sprinter on the anchor leg of the 440 relay; then ran even, and a 25.4 on top of it, against UNH's top sprinter for her 220 yard leg in the medley (220-110-110-440) relay.

However, lest the few chilled partisans on hand forget that "old" is beautiful, senior Nancy Cominoli easily won the 100 meter hurdles (15.7), and ran her typically outstanding legs on the 440 and medley relays.

Providing more youth and depth were Mary Ann Stravinskas (2nd shot, 3rd discus) and Liz Skelton (2nd 440, relay leg), both freshmen; and soph Monica Scott (2nd two mile).

"I'm delighted and impressed," said Coach Charlotte Lettis. "Everyone was real solid."

"I'm impressed with our weight group," said head coach Ken O'Brien. "Especially since some of them didn't compete particularly well today. They'll get a lot better. I think Kelly (Butler) and Mary Ann (Stravinskas) have more in them in the discus, and Diane Crawford (Oregon exchange student) just had a bad day."

Along with the potent weight group, the team's best mile squad ever has suddenly emerged. Along with Francario's smooth 5:06.9, Priscilla Wilson ran 5:13 for second, and Debbie Farmer ran a personal best by "a mile" as she raced to a 5:14 clocking.

"I'm really excited about that group," said Lettis. "It's the first time we've had more than one person under 5:15 on the same team. Tina looked very comfortable too, even though she said she was tired."

"I felt good — I really felt smooth," said Francario," Even though I knew I was running hard."

A somewhat overlooked performance was turned in by Snow, who won her first collegiate competition on her first throw — 119'. That mark was only six feet off the school record of 125' set in last year's UMass relays by Gail Emond.

"I'm not really happy because I know I can do better," said Snow. "But with the conditions, I suppose it was alright. I couldn't get any traction in the mud."

Harrington is another performer expected to improve. The freshman who has jumped 5'8" and who was state champ last year finished second to Ares in that event on fewer misses. Both cleared 5'2". Harrington, who is being groomed for the pentathlon, also missed placing in the long jump by only 2½ inches.

"She (Harrington) was just so excited, she was jumping into the bar," said O'Brien. "She had plenty of speed, so once she starts converting it into upward motion, look out. On the whole, she looked good."

The only potential loss in an otherwise triumphant afternoon may have been suffered when Stillman tripped after handing off to Martin on the anchor of the medley relay and took a bad fall. Lettis said she may have broken her finger.

"It looked pretty bad," Lettis said.

PAYING THE PRICE — Tina Francario "shifts gears" and prepares to put a move on for the lead in the mile run. The gutsy freshman took the lead on the last lap and won going away. (Dave Rodman photo)

Batwomen set to swing

By MELISSA GALLAGHER
Collegian Staff

The UMass softball team opens its season today at 3 p.m. when coach Dianne Thompson's squad visits the University of Lowell.

Sophmore pitcher Sue Peters, one of the two top returning guns, received the nod from the Minutewomen's mentor. Gail Carter and Trish O'Connor are set as relievers.

Transfers Kathy Horrigan and Jennifer Parker will wear the maroon and white for the first time as they play left field and first base respectively.

Also slated to start are outfielders Carol Bruce in center and Pat Oski in rightfield.

Rounding out the team are the infielders. The middle will be plugged by co-captain Sue DiRocco and Fran Cornacchioli. Shortstop DiRocco batted an incredible .429 last season. Cornacchioli, up from the jayvees, had an average of .500 and is making her starting debut against the Chiefs this afternoon. Veteran second baseman Rhonda McManus is currently nursing a tender shoulder, but can serve as a replacement.

Chris Verdini a returnee from last year's 16-2 team, will field third. Elaine Howle is Verdini's backup in the hot corner.

Peters' battery mate will be co-captain Cheryl Meliones, who just came off an elbow injury. Beth Collins is also ready to catch if needed.

The Minutewomen appear as strong as last season when they had a combined batting average of .295 and scored an average of seven runs per game.

Thompson voiced optimism that her young but experienced team will utilize its potent bats and speed on the base paths to capture the Minutewomen's debut.

Top gymnast Kulakoff in NCAA championship

By STEVEN MARKS
Collegian Staff

The UMass men's gymnastics team officially ends its 77-78 season this weekend as co-captain Dave Kulakoff travels to Eugene, Oregon for the NCAA championships. Kulakoff being the single UMass competitor to qualify by placing third on the pommel horse in the Easterns, takes off from Bradley Airport today to spend six days at the University of Oregon.

Competition begins Friday afternoon with the compulsory exercises, followed by the optional routine on Saturday. Finals are with the top eight competitors on Saturday afternoon.

The nationals consist of the country's top twenty-five competitors in each event including the all-around position. Each gymnast must qualify in their region, bringing the best in gymnastics to the nationals. The competition will be the toughest that Kulakoff has faced this year. He is seeded twentieth at the nationals. Even though Kulakoff is placed low in the standings, he should do well enough to place in the top ten.

The men's gymnastics team finished with a 6-5 record this year with impressive wins over Springfield and Temple. So as Coach Dick Swetman leaves this year he can look back to a well deserved winning season here at UMass. The only problems that plagued the gymmen during the season was the inexperience of the young gymnasts. The team is mostly composed of freshmen and sophomores with only two graduating seniors. Inexperience resulted in close losses to Navy and Syracuse.

The two possible replacements for the head coach position are Ward Black of Washington State or Roy Johnson formally of UMass. Not much is known of what the outcome will be when the screening committee comes forth with a verdict for the position. For each is equally qualified, and the team will make the final decision. Whoever ends up with the position will have their hands full trying to mold a young team into the competitive Eastern League.

Gymnastics being a year round sport finds most of the gymmen still working out for routines that could possibly be used next season. It is also interesting to note that most continue right through the summer either at gymnastics camps or at home with only two to three full weeks away from the gym each year.

Wrestling team

There will be a meeting for wrestling team members today at 4:00 p.m. in the Boyden wrestling gym.

"It's Miller time..."

A change in sports seasons necessitates the switch in head apparel ...

America's favorite pastime this season, reminiscent of the good old days, is baseball. But time has changed things. Inflation has become an expected occurrence, man is supposedly more intelligent and inventive, and this, the second warmest season of the year has been subjected to sharing baseball's limelight with the likes of ultimate frisbee, mixed-doubles tennis and eight-foot hoop dunk contests.

On those warm afternoons, the coming attraction for later this month, when you feel like relaxing and taking in a game while putting the books off your mind (this is legal, even at UMass — unless you have a 4.0 cum), why not take in something different like a Holyoke Millers minor league baseball game.

In their second season of operation, the Millers moved here from Pittsfield (a wise decision I must admit), ending their relationship with their major league affiliate the Texas Rangers, and became the Double-A squad of the Milwaukee Brewers. Last season could be termed as a successful premier as the Millers averaged 1,000 fans per game.

The Millers, who play their home games at MacKenzie Field located near Holyoke High, have a seventy game schedule lined up as members of Eastern Baseball League.

Each major league baseball team operates a farm system which feeds the parent organization potential major league players. This farm system consists of a Triple-A, a Double-A, followed by one, but possibly more Single-A squads.

The Millers, as are most Double-A teams, consist of players drafted from the college or high school ranks. But there are tryouts with occasional walk-ons making the team. For example, ex-UMass pitcher Jerry Erb will be doing his thing for the Blue-and-Gold Millers this season (he was 1-0 last season, coming from a Newark team where he was 7-2).

The players on the twenty-one man roster are given a monthly stipend, with the Brewers picking up the rest of their salaries, along with paying the managers and trainers.

According to Mark Mordecai, a student doing his internship with the Holyoke-based team (without whose help this story would not have been possible). "The team's strength will be speed around the basepaths, and defense. The players will make some errors, but that's why they're here — to improve and hopefully get a shot at the big leagues some day."

However the free agent trend could not only hurt their chances, but eventually lead to the demise of at least part of the farm system.

Because of the free agent pool — and the subsequent inflation of major league salaries — parent teams (if this skyrocketing-paycheck trend continues) could be forced to cut back somewhere. And those cuts could start at the bottom of the farm system and work their way up.

Not an overwhelming number of Double-A players make the majors, but who knows — there's that chance the Millers of today could be tomorrow's Brewers.

So if you have that baseball fever, and Fenway's doesn't seem worth the long drive, check out the Millers. Like the saying goes, if you've got the time ...

Pierpont troubles flare

Students stage sit-in

By MARK LECCESE
Collegian Staff

Students staged a sit-in yesterday in front of James Matlack's office to protest his plan to change residency rules in Pierpont dormitory and also to protest a lack of student tenant rights.

Matlack, master-director of Southwest Residential College, was out of his office most of the day at classes and appointments.

At 2 p.m. Matlack stopped into his office in John Quincy Adams dormitory and about 25 students crowded around his door. When he emerged, the protest became emotional.

"You just don't have the right to try and control our living space," one student shouted.

"That is not a power I claim, that is a power my superiors tell me I have," Matlack said.

Many students said they planned an all-night vigil in front of Matlack's office. A march to Whitmore from Pierpont will be held today at 1 p.m.

Today's protest will focus not only on Pierpont but also on legal rights for dormitory residents.

David Barenberg, a spokesman for the protest, said, "In the past, we have tried negotiating with administrators, but things haven't changed. Conditions have worsened. There are still leaks in the ceilings, still insects in the dorms, still mold in the bathrooms.

"Now they're trying to evict some residents of one dorm. Once it has been done to one dorm, it can be done to any dorm."

The Pierpont controversy centered around Matlack's proposal last month limiting residency in Pierpont to freshmen and sophomores this fall.

After originally saying this proposal was final, Matlack said he would consider an alternative plan for strengthening discipline in the dorm. He said the plan would have to be drawn up by the community by room choosing time, which was three weeks away.

A Pierpont committee submitted two proposals to Matlack last week. Matlack said he consolidated and "built on" the proposals, and offered a new proposal to the Pierpont community for a vote.

If the Pierpont community voted down this new proposal, Matlack said his original plan to limit residency to freshmen and sophomores would go into effect this fall.

The new proposal submitted by Matlack contained three sections: Two sections set up a "House Council," which would be a governing body, and a "Judiciary Board," which would enforce the dorm rules.

The dorm rules were spelled out in a "Social Contract" section. Under the proposal any student who wanted to live in Pierpont would have to sign this, and agree to abide by all the enumerated rules.

These rules included rules and regulations listed in University policy, and a clause that reads "Each resident has a duty to prevent and-or report all forms of destructive behavior."

One student called the enforcement of these rules on Pierpont students "capricious and arbitrary." Another student asked, "Why don't people in the other dorms have to sign something like this?"

Matlack said the social contract part of the proposal would be enforced because of "what led to where we are now. The condition of the dorm, and the agreement that improvement is needed."

Students in Pierpont were originally given only until yesterday to vote on Matlack's new, three section proposal, but Matlack and Pierpont head-of-residence Dusty Miller announced last night that room choosing would be put off in Pierpont until Friday.

Matlack said this postponement was "to allow some time to look for some alternative to what seems at the moment to be an impasse."

Lynsey Rzeszut, a spokeswoman for Pierpont, said, "Matlack never negotiates in good faith. We're not going to back down this time."

"It's not that they're listening to us and not responding," said one student. "They're not even listening."

Room choosing begins today

New plan to be used...

By MEGAN O'REILLY
Collegian Staff

As a safeguard against a repeat of last fall's dormitory housing shortage, the Housing Office is implementing a new plan which they say students should be aware of before choosing a room.

The new housing plan is the result of a Housing Task Force, commissioned last fall by Vice-chancellor of Student Affairs Robert L. Woodbury and charged with investigating possible solutions to the housing crisis and "to prevent the happenings of last fall from ever occuring again," Woodbury said.

A lack of information from Whitmore surrounding the contents of the plan and the reasons behind it has resulted in mass confusion and the angry opposition by students and heads of residence most of which is based on inaccurate information.

Most of the controversy centers around the two-phased room-choosing aspect of the plan which begins today.

Phase one, which involves students who wish to remain in their present room is identical to the old plan, according to Paul Hammill, staff associate for the Housing Task Force, and the plan's primary technician.

"The changes and most of the controversy occur in phase two, which begins next week and deals with dorm movement."

The major aspects of the new Housing Plan according to Hammill are as follows:

—Students wishing to remain in their present room sign up in their dormitories on today and tomorrow. These students are guaranteed to retain their present room and are not affected by the new plan.

—Students wishing to switch dormitories must fill out a Housing preference form, available in the Housing Office, listing their three choices for dormitories. These students must give up their present rooms and prepare to live in one of the dorms they requested.

Those students who would prefer to return to their old room if they do not receive their first choice are advised to list this as their second choice.

—Lotteries for the purpose of randomly assigning spaces will only be held for dorms who have more applicants than they have spaces available. Hammill says this is usually only the case in 5 dormitories — Greenough, Butterfield, Chadbourne, Hamlin and Lewis. This is because these dorms are all small and some have been renovated, Hammill said.

—Ten percent of available space in all dorms will be reserved for incoming students, including freshmen and students away on academic leave, who previously didn't have a chance," said Hammill.

—Since there are 55 per cent males on this campus and 45 per cent females, and more women's single sex dorms, co-ed dorms must be composed of 60 per cent males and 40 per cent females. This is also true of co-ed floors in dorms.

—Students wishing to room with a particular student must both indicate one another on the Housing Preference card. "This again will only be a problem for students wishing to room together in one of the more popular dorms, Hammill said.

...but HRs dissatisfied

By PATRICIA KEEFE
Collegian Staff

A polling of eight heads of residences yesterday revealed university-wide dissatisfaction among students and heads of residence over the new room choosing policy.

Areas of unanimous concern were the heads of residence's lack of trust and little faith in abilities of the housing office, loss of student control over roommate choice, and several committees opposed to the plan.

Jim LaMacchia of Cashin said he has "no faith in the housing office's ability to accurately process and cross-check the forms. In the past, there has been nothing to show they can properly execute a program of this dimension and sophistication," he added.

Similar reservations were expressed by heads of residence Anika Olinga from Butterfield, Sandy Brown from Lewis and Faye Wilson of Coolidge Tower. Olinga said there would be a greater opportunity for misplaced forms while Wilson questioned how the forms would be handled.

"We have no confidence at this stage in how housing will handle this," Wilson said. She asked if housing will process the forms at random or take them as they come in, whether heads of residence should encourage students to hand in forms early and if the housing office really honors roommate requests.

Wilson said the housing office was working under a time restraint with only five staffers to manually handle the flow, and said the office is not prepared to handle the number of forms. Wilson also said residence hall assignment coordinator Jerry Quarles said last week he has no idea how many forms to expect.

UMW workers ratify contract

,WASHINGTON (AP) — Striking mine construction workers ratified a new contract yesterdayday, and union officials said most would return to their jobs tomorrow, ending a 120-day walkout.

Sam Church, vice president of the United Mine Workers, said that with 35 out of 51 construction locals reporting, the vote was 2,306, or 64 percent, for ratification and 1,278, or 36 percent, against the proposed accord.

"The contract will be ratified" when all the votes are in, said one union official.

§Church said the union planned to send out telegrams to the 10,000 strikers, telling them "that it's clear for them to go back" to work tomorrow. "I think the biggest part will go back."

"It's great to get all our people back to work. They've been through a lot," the union leader added.

No crowds - less business for Civic Center shops

HARTFORD — Businesses in the Civic Center area here have been affected since the collapse of the coliseum roof, causing shopowners to realize their dependency on coliseum events to bring patrons to the downtown.

Many downtown shopowners and workers have noted a change in the flow of people in the area, even though most cannot claim a loss of revenue.

"They were hurt," said Civic Center Director Frank E. Russo. "You can't take 1.5 to 2 million people out of the coliseum and have no effect."

Shopowners, however, have reacted differently to the collapse: some claim they have lost revenue and others say they were never dependent on the coliseum crowd.

George Ducharm, manager of the Whaler Gift Shop, said there has "definitely" been an effect.

"We have been hurt by it," he said.

"Sure it's affected the mall," said Security Director of the Civic Center Shops Maurice D. Molod. Before, he said, the coliseum would bring people downtown. Now, he said, people are "just plain shopping."

"We had a lull for about two weeks," and then business picked up, Molod said. "The night restaurant business; that's been felt, but the bar business has been super. I can't explain it."

Davre's a company with several outlets in the Civic Center, has felt differing effects since the collapse.

"I'd be lying if I said it hasn't had an effect on our business," said Davre's spokesman Maggie French. "Optimistically, this has made us realize we have to depend on ourselves and are viable on our own."

French said one of Davre's outlets, the Asylum Bar and Cafe, was initially hurt by the collapse, but the Signature, one of Hartford's more costly restaurants, wasn't affected at all.

A. Fred Basil, manager of a package store on the first level of the Civic Center, was not alarmed by the loss of coliseum business.

"We've lost the rock-and-roll concerts, and basketball and hockey, but we have more sightseers and construction men," the manager said.

Basil didn't take the roof-collapse as seriously as many.

"Have you heard of the new topless place in town," he asked. "it's the Hartford Civic Center."

John Rimshaw, manager of the Russian Lady, a popular downtown bar and restaurant, said the collapse has had a low per cent effect on business, possibly more.

Rimshaw said he considers himself better off than other businessmen.

"Restaurants have had more effect. I think you'll see some of them folding," he said. "Since the Civic Center opened, there have been approximately 20 new bars that have opened."

Like many other businesses, the Russian Lady has looked into applying for aid from the government.

Small businesses are often awarded low cost loans after times of disaster.

Jay Dumond, owner-manager of The Brownstone, a high-priced downtown restaurant, is also applying for aid. "We're applying for Small Business Administration funds like everyone else," he said.

The Sheraton Hotel, which would host many Civic Center conventions, has been only slightly affected by the Collapse.

HARTFORD (UPI) — Since the collapse of the Hartford Civic Center of January 18, many Hartford merchants have found the going tough.

Low overhead - high hopes

By CAROL ROSENBERG
Collegian Staff

HARTFORD — A stranger here heard he could buy the Civic Center cheap. He was told it had low overhead.

Puns aside, Frank E. Russo, Jr., Director of the Civic Center anticipates a balanced budget and an October '79 opening despite the collapse of the coliseum roof on January 18 at 4:19 a.m.

Many changes have been made in the center's organization to cut back expenses and make proper use of the 4.6 million dollars earned from tickets and concessions before the collapse.

The balanced budget will be made possible because of many factors, Russo said. The Civic Center will collect two forms of insurance: Business Interruption Insurance, and Scoreboard Advertising insurance. In addition, the center has been forced to layoff some of its workforce and make some cutbacks, he said.

Russo said many people have responded to the disaster, including some of the neighboring cities who are planning to allocate funds toward its rebuilding.

Individuals have also sent donations to the center, rather than to its owners: the Aetna Insurance Group or the City of Hartford. The director said he received quarters and dollar bills addressed to him, "obviously from kids."

Jai Alai shows

Soon after the collapse, the center signed a lease with the Hartford Jai Alai Fronton, booking acts so the Civic Center can earn money.

"To keep our employees working in a related field, we have an exclusive lease, and we book all non-Jai Alai events," the director said.

Layoffs and cutbacks

As a result of the collapse, the center has laid off over 250 part-time workers, 37 full-time workers, and 150 contractual employees hired for security, ushering, and other coliseum services.

Although some have found other city employment, some are still unemployed, Russo said.

The director also said some full-time workers are now doing "multiple job functions to offset the costs." Some executives are now doing their own filing and typing, and some professionals are doing work outside their own fields to "avoid other payments."

A Different Coliseum

The new coliseum will be designed by the Ellerbe architectural firm who also designed the Providence Civic Center and the Worcester Civic Center, which is now under construction.

The coliseum, which will look different than the previous one, will not cost more than 25 million dollars. The old coliseum cost approximately 15 million, according to Russo.

Russo said the insurance will cover 10 million dollars of the cost, with 5 million from the state, and up to 10 million from the federal government.

"To overcome any psychological resistance to coming into the coliseum," some changes will be made, Russo said. There will be a different roof, more concession stands, more restrooms, guard rails, perhaps carpeting, and "better information on the wall to get the people to their seats," he added.

Coliseum affects ticketron

The UMass Campus Travel Service, located in the Campus Center, has also suffered from the collapse of the coliseum roof in Hartford. The travel agency has a Ticketron outlet (a trade name for a computerized service offering sport and performance tickets) which services the UMass students.

Steve Lepow, manager of the agency, said they earn fifteen cents from the service charge on every ticket sold. He said his business was affected "definitely because Ticketron had all the Hartford Concerts exclusively.

"You don't have the additional events being scheduled. Hartford is a very active complex when it comes to events compared to Springfield," Lepow said.

The Ticketron service offers the shows scheduled for the Hartford Jai Ali fronton, but does not offer the Whaler's tickets for the games in Springfield. "They did before," Lepow said about the Whaler's home games in Hartford, but the smaller capacity of the Springfield coliseum does not permit additional ticket sales outside the Whaler's gift shop in Hartford.

Consumer Center opens

The UMass Consumer Action Center opens today to aid students in finding solutions to consumer complaints and to act as a resource and clearinghouse for consumer education and information on campus.

The consumer headquarters is on the fourth floor of the Student Union, formerly the old Council Chamber and will be open Monday through Friday from noon until six p.m. A library of consumer information, pamphlets, and books will be available to students wishing to learn about consumer rights.

The need for a Consumer Action Center became apparent when a Student Affairs Research and Evaluation Office survey of 110 UMass students indicated 47.3 per cent of those surveyed recently had a consumer complaint. Ninety per cent of those students said they felt a need for "an agency on campus to deal with consumer issues" with more than half, 52.3 per cent, indicating support for the center through student activity fees.

The CAC is being funded by Mass PIRG.

Ex-student arraigned

Ex-Stockbridge student Andrew S. Hamilton was arraigned in Hampshire District County Court yesterday for breaking and entering Stockbridge Hall and stealing over $5000 worth of equipment.

Hamilton was also arraigned for theft of a UMass van which turned up in Warwick last week.

UMass police picked up the New Salem resident in Athol Monday evening and charged him with breaking and entering in the nighttime with intent to commit a felony.

Stolen from the Stockbridge building on the weekend of March 25 were three balance scales valued at over $4000 as well as other equipment. Police believe the room was entered through an opened window.

Hamilton was arrested after an Athol home was searched by police and some property was identified as that stolen from Stockbridge. Police expect to make two other arrests, a spokesman said.

Unclaimed bikes collect

Over 50 bicycles have been accumulating in the UMass Public Safety Office during the last two years, according to James Fitzgerald an employee of the Property Office of the Campus Security force in Dickinson Hall.

To pick up a lost bicycle one must fill out a card identifying it at the Property Office. Most of them will be held until June when those not claimed will probably be donated to the Belchertown State School, Fitzgerald said.

Bottlers favor bill

Citizen organizations and independent bottlers met yesterday in Springfield to urge legislature to vote in favor of the Massachusetts Bottle Bill. The bill, passed last week by Connecticut state legislature, is expected on the Massachusetts House floor today.

The beverage industry has used various tactics, Mass PIRG said, in trying to halt passage of the bill, including supplying legislators and citizens with misleading information of how the bottle bill works in Vermont and Oregon. The industry's most recent effort to influence legislators involves mailing printed postcards, paid for by beer distributors.

"With a Bottle Bill in Maine and Vermont and now in Connecticut, Massachusetts should join its neighboring states and adopt this much needed piece of legislation," Mass PIRG environmentalist David Pomerantz said at a press conference in favor of the bill.

"Residents can no longer afford to pay the hidden cost for throwaway containers. Millions of tax dollars are unnecessarily spent each year for litter pick-up and solid waste disposal that would be dramatically reduced with a Bottle Bill," he said.

Nazi's postpone march

Skokie Action Committee members will receive a letter in the next two weeks informing them the plans of a march in Skokie, Illinois is in a "holding pattern" a committee organizer said.

The letter will explain the recent State Supreme Court ruling, postponing the Nazi march and counter-march until June. Whether the Nazis will have the march in June is questionable, the committee member said.

Controversial figure

Senate to vote on DeLima's post

By JON KLEIN
Collegian Staff

Tonight the Undergraduate Student Senate will vote on approving the controversial reelection of Brian DeLima as Senate Speaker. DeLima was elected last week by eight votes over Senator Bob Dion.

Some people in Student Government such as President Jon A. Hite feel tonight's vote may be close since DeLima has aroused the emotions of many student politicians. The accusations against DeLima include sexism, unpaid phone bills and threats to paid staff members.

"There are a lot of things compiled (against DeLima) that are sleazy and questionable," Hite said.

DeLima said, "I make no deals. I don't mind being criticized, I can take it. There are a lot of misguided assertions."

Former student government president Jay Martus said, "He's slick. You can be ten feet away and not know your throat is being slit."

DeLima came to UMass as an exchange student from Hawaii and was elected as Senate Speaker in October 1976. He was reelected in March of 1977 and resigned last semester. Last Wednesday he was reelected again.

One accusation against DeLima is that he has made threats to fire the paid staff of advocacy services such as the Student Organizing Project.

One staff member said "He threatened to fire full time staff if they don't do what he wants." The staff member refused to be identified.

DeLima admits he has been critical of the staff. "The staff needs to be more supportive of the students. Some of the staff have operated on their own agenda," he said. DeLima denies he threatened staff members.

Another charge arises over DeLima's personal use of senate telephones while serving as Speaker. DeLima is under investigation by the Attorney General's office for this practice and he does not deny he has used telephones for personal calls. But he says he has paid back the money owed, between $250 and $300, by working for student government over intersession for free. DeLima says his unaccepted paychecks will cover the expenses.

Another accusation against DeLima is that he is sexist and that this has discouraged women from working in student government. Jim Posgay of the Student Center for Educational Research says DeLima has "frustrated assertive women and discouraged them from participation." This "hurts student government immensely," he added.

Karen Kelly, former chair of the Senate Finance Committee, says, "First he (DeLima) intimidates you. The second thing he does is he makes passes at you. The third thing he does is to do everything he can do to shit all over you. Then he will spread rumors about you," she said.

DeLima says, "I don't think my personality is such that I am treating women differently than men." "People are entitled to their opinions ... Every person has their own personality. I am not perfect, I think I am a rather moral and ethical person," he added.

Still other charges stem from a National Students Association Conference held in Houston last summer. DeLima ran for President of the Association at the Houston conference. The travel expenses (the UMass group traveled to Houston in Senate cars) and some expenses in Houston were paid for with student money. Some UMass students who traveled to Houston campaigned for DeLima.

Hite says DeLima "uses Senate money and Senate paper to run for President." Posgay says DeLima overspent his budget.

DeLima says the money spent at the conference was for other schools to learn about UMass programs. He said the expenses were "not an expense on Brian DeLima." Delima said there were 48 to 50 UMass workshops at the conference.

DeLima said of his presidential campaign, "UMass ran, not Brian DeLima." Those who worked on the campaign, "were not campaigning for me. They were campaigning for programs," he said.

Besides the phone charges, other student judiciary charges were brought against DeLima. Michael Brenan, a Student Organizing Project staffer, was taking DeLima to student court for stealing a letter from Brenan's desk. Brenan dropped the charges after DeLima became Speaker. Brenan says he dropped the charges "in order to enhance a working relationship with the leadership fo the student senate." He added, "the charges can be refiled."

College costs to rise

NEW YORK [UPI] — The cost of a college education, already puffed up by inflation and fuel costs, will go up again by an average of six per cent in September, the College Board reported yesterday.

The biggest bill along the academic trail awaits students at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology in Cambridge — $8,500 for tuition, room and board.

Other schools in the $8,000 range include Bennington in Vermont, $8,390; Harvard-Radcliffe and Yale, $8,300; Brown in Rhode Island, $8,080; and Stanford in California, $7,999.

The latest hike in the higher education bill about equals the estimated overall cost of living rise in other segments of the economy. But it is less than increases projected by the Congressional Budget Office for other consumer expenditures such as fuel — 9.3 per cent — and medical care, 8.8 per cent.

The Board also estimated that federal and state financial aid funds will go up about 15 per cent for the 1978-79 school year. Funds from all sources are expected to reach $12.5 billion.

"Therefore, rising costs should not discourage students from considering college attendance, for financial aid is available to help defray costs for those who need such assistance," said Elizabeth W. Suchar, CSS director of financial aid services.

"Students, including many from middle income families, may qualify for financial aid and should apply for funds."

She advises students to select a college for educational reasons — and then apply for financial help to make up between what it costs and what can be afforded by one's family.

Other highlights of the report on next year's college bill:

— At public four-year colleges total expenses will average $3,054 next year for on-campus resident students, a 5.3 per cent increase over this year. Expenses at a few public colleges will reach $4,000.

UM holds line

By GARDE WELLS
Collegian Staff

UMass tuition costs will remain the same next semester, Arthur Jackson, associate director of Financial Aid yesterday said.

The average costs of a college education will go up six per cent in September, while UMass will stay the same.

But the overall estimated cost of attending UMass will go up from $3195 to $3370, Jackson said. "We reflect that mainly in books and travel expenses," he said.

The average cost increase of college education is due to inflation.

"There was already a $44.50 tuition increase from fall to spring semester," Jackson said. Because of this increase, tuition, room and board will not go up next fall, he added.

Financial aid will be at a comparable level with last year, he said.

Romer and Jacque re-elected to Board

By FRAN BASCHE
AND SEAN HORGAN
Collegian Staff

Incumbent selectmen Diana H. Romer and Roger C. Jacque yesterday were re-elected to three-year terms to the Board of Selectmen as Amherst voters voted to keep the status quo in town government.

Romer, the present chairman of the Board of Selectmen, was the top vote-getter in the race with 1408 votes, and Jacque finished second with 1344 votes.

The two incumbents successfully fought off the challenge of candidates Bernard R. Moreau, who received 1221 votes, and Chauncy T. Simmons, Jr., who finished fourth with 1141 votes.

Romer carried six of the eight voting districts in town (Precincts 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6), while Jacque carried the remaining two (Precincts 7 and 8). Romer also had the distinction of receiving the most votes from one district of any of the four candidates when she received 243 votes from the 1st Precinct.

Romer lives in Precinct 5 and Jacque lives in Precinct 7.

Yesterday's elections leaves the Amherst Board of Selectmen unchanged from the five members serving prior to the election. The members are Romer, Jacque, William C. Atkins, Nancy B. Eddy and Nathaniel Reed.

In other elections, three UMass students were elected as Town Meeting Members.

Cynthia MacLeod, Glenn A. Marston and Rachel Shanor were elected from Precinct 3, which includes the Northeast, Central, Orchard Hill and Sylvan residential areas of the university.

Shanor, who lives in Field dormitory, received 57 votes for her two-year position. Marston, a Hamlin dormitory resident, won his two-year seat with 50 votes. MacLeod, also a Field resident, received 40 votes to gain his one-year seat. There are 1528 voters in the precinct.

In the race for the School Committee seat, Marybeth Bridegam defeated Robert J. Ackermann, a UMass professor of philosophy, with a total of 1248 votes to 1010 votes.

Donald J. Pelkey crushed George B. Scheurer in the contest for the Housing Authority seat. Pelkey received 1683 votes to Scheurer's 683.

Odds good for pact items

By CHRISTOPHER H. SCHMITT
Collegian Staff

The faculty union and the administration are close to agreement on two items in their contract negotiations, sources have told the Collegian.

The two sides are said to be close to agreement on the issues of early retirement and grievance procedure.

Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery, who is also UMass senior vice president in charge of faculty relations, could not be reached to confirm the report. Massachusetts Society of Professor Chairman Larry S. Roberts was out of town and also could not be reached.

The agreement on early retirement would allow full or partial retirement for faculty members before they reach age 65. Many faculty members, a source said, are closed to but have not reached retirement age.

"Some of these people are staying on just to get the benefits," the source said. The source also said if older faculty members could retire earlier, space "at the bottom" could open up for new faculty.

The agreement on grievance procedures will establish a procedure so a grievance will be processed in an agreed upon time. There have been instances where grievances have taken up to two years to process.

The early retirement and grievance agreements are expected to be formalized at a faculty union-administration bargaining session to be held Monday on the UMass-Amherst campus.

"The odds are good something might be established," a source said.

Corrections

The Collegian's front page headline yesterday, "Candidates admit 'favors' deal," was inaccurate. It should have read, "Candidates admit discussing 'favors' deal."

The Central Area Council's room choosing procedure objection was introduced by Donald O'Brien from Butterfield, not co-Presidents Art Thomas and Cindy Thomas.

Community Development Director Sally Freeman, not Orchard Hill-Central Area Director William Taylor wrote a memorandum about the vacant Head of Residence positions. Council representatives will discuss this memorandum with Taylor.

SGA electoral college bypassing students?

By RENEE MOBLEY
Black Affairs Staff

Once again the SGA convention has proven its ineffectiveness by (dis)representing the desires of their constituencies.

Only weeks ago the association held a popular election for SGA president. The election results clearly showed the Tyson-Gordon team as the team with the largest number of voting student support. The no-vote ballot received the second highest degree of support and the Birmingham-Barenberg team received the next highest degree of voter support.

In the SGA convention, last Monday night, the Tyson-Gordon team received 29 of the electoral votes while a new team, Bishop-Dion, received 43 electoral votes.

This representation clearly does not reflect the wishes of the students as expressed in the popular election. The representatives from the area governments and the student senate have taken it upon themselves to replace the popular team, Tyson-Gordon, with their own candidates, Bishop-Dion.

News analysis

Donald Bishop participated as a candidate in the popular election. However, he received such a low percentages of the votes that he was not even amongst the top two contenders.

Bishops' present running mate, Bob Dion was purely a product of the convention. He did not submit signed nomination papers and did not run for the office of SGA president. Dion did not open himself up to questioning and criticism from the student population through the campaigning process and did not receive any of the popular votes in the recent open election.

Dion's candidacy for SGA president, which came immediately after his loss of the Senate speaker elections, is analygous to the child in a candy shop who grabs for a licorice stick after he is denied an ice cream cone. He will settle for anything sweet. Do we really need an opportunist like this to head our student government?

How then, do student representatives on area governments and on the senate, justify their complete denial of the students rights to choose their president.

Those who voted for Dion Bishop assert that since the no vote ballot received a substantial percentage of the votes it can be assumed that many students were dissatisfied with the choice of candidates.

This conclusion, perhaps is quite true. However, those who voted for Bishop-Dion have further assumed that the candidacy the students do want is Bishop-Dion.

There is no factual basis whatsoever for this assumption. The students were never given an opportunity to express their feelings about this team. Who is to say that students who chose the no vote ballot, would not choose it again over the Bishop-Dion team?

One thing that we can state, is that if the no vote ballot was second only to one team, Tyson-Gordon, then the largest proportion of the voting students have already made their choice for SGA president and they have made it loud and clear.

Voting members of the convention should remember that they are the voices of their constituents and not the dictators of SGA policy.

Particularly the representatives of Southwest and Central have ignored the weight of the popular vote and have given support to candidates who did not receive such support in the popular election.

Many of those representatives who supported Bishop-Dion in the convention, have asserted that another popular election would be a waste of time. However, if we are to elect the candidates of the people's choice then time should not be the major consideration. We should not rush to elect a president that the students do not want.

Why is the Bishop-Dion team afraid of letting the people decide? Perhaps they do not feel they can win an election if the students have the power of decision.

The Tyson-Gordon team has no objections to another popular vote or event to another convention that is truly representative of the students' wishes.

Denial of a popular vote limits the voice of the students and puts power in the

Black musicans concert features
Gordon and Fortune

By KEVIN JONES
Black Affairs Staff

This past weekend the Amherst area was highlighted by the Seventh Annual Black Musicians Conference. The conference included two concerts and three lecture-demonstrations which was sponsored by the National Endowment of the Arts. The entire weekend of events were directed by Vishnu Wood and Bill Hasson who have put forth an undying effort to bring what is commonly called "jazz" (Black Classical music) to the area.

Last Friday night the Sonny Fortune Quintet exploded with sounds at Hampshire College in the Robert Crown Gymnasium. A large crowd was on hand to see one of most dynamic saxophonist of our time.

Mr. Fortune treated the audience by bringing along four fabulous swinging sidemen: Tom Browne on trumpet and percussion, Charles Eubanks on piano, Wayne Dockery on bass and Doug Hammond on drums.

The music was intense from the first note on. It held many entranced as all soloists made for breath capturing adventures on their instruments. Mr. Fortune's range and wind stamina proved to be an eye-opener for many who were unfamiliar with his work on alto and soprano saxes. Pianist Charles Eubanks added dimensions to his playing that were new to many ears in the listening audience. He seemed to be playing one hand in one meter and playing another meter in the other hand. Drummer Doug Hammond handled many of the odd metered tunes with a relaxed style that is unparalleled by other drummers.

Sonny's experience as a sideman with musicians such as Miles Davis, Elvin Jones, Mongo Santa Maria, McCoy Tyner and particularly the music of Jimmie Merit is clearly reflected in his music. He played many tunes in odd metered timings such as 7-4 and 6-8 instead of what most Americans are used to hearing which is the usual 4-4 pulse. This could probably be attributed to be Jimmie Merit since he has been widely acclaimed for his work in odd meters. It is an important concept in Mr. Fortune's music because they played in different meters but the music was still swinging.

Mr. Fortune plans to release a new album in May or June on the Atlantic label and plans to travel to Europe in the Fall.

Dexter Gordon at UMass

Saturday night's concert proved to be a change of pace in terms of style but not in intensity. The sophisticated giant of "Black Classical music," Dexter Gordon, made his illustrious arrival before a standing room only crowd in the Student Union Ballroom at UMass. The legendary saxophonist brought with him a quartet consisting of George Cables on piano, Rufus Reid on bass and Eddie Gladdin on drums.

Dexter, with his liquid tone brought back many old tunes and played recent ones from his latest recordings. Most of these ranged from 12 bar blues to bright, uptempo pieces.

His influences on tenor are clearly marked in his playing. One could not help but think, to what extent the influence of playing with men such as Lester Young and Charlie Parker, had on his bold tenor sound.

The tightly knit rhythm section made the total sound of the group cohesive. Solos from the three seasoned veterans made for an exciting evening when Dexter stopped playing.

Mr. Gordon has a history that extends way back. He has played with many of the giants who were responsible for the music being what it is today. He first played with Lionel Hampton, and then Louis Armstrong, Billy Ecstine and Charlie Parker. However, it wasn't until the fifties that he began to get recognition as a leader of his own group which also hosted many other legendary figures. During the sixties Mr. Gordon managed to escape much of the socio-political turmoil that existed in the United States by living in Europe. He has recently returned and is now in the process of re-establishing himself as the living legend of the tenor saxophone.

Swaying student elections

By EDWARD COHEN

The elections for Student Senate President are only inches away and it seems the closer it approaches being resolved, the more heat and hatred can be felt permeating the air.

Your campus publication, the Collegian has been notorious for disrupting and influencing elections to favor officials who will in turn favor the paper. At the beginning of the electoral process, it was the Tyson-Gordon ticket which seemed to have a good chance of winning, because they were the most competent and well qualified. If there was any foolishness and games, they would have in fact won.

Their platform is being destroyed for several reasons: 1. Collegian influence and 2. conservative factions of the Student Senate. The influence of the Collegian is obvious. The none of the above campaign, championed by Collegian staff member Bob Melia, took away many votes. The candidacy of Edelstein-Goverman, which was a joke, helped to turn the event into a circus, complete with balloons, party hats and pie throwing.

Next came the muckraking. Senators who supported Tyson-Gordon were attacked in the paper, and Collegian cartoonists made the affair into a big joke or a game. This is the first time an atmosphere of this kind has prevailed. Why is this? Could it be that this happened because the election involves a Black candidate?

Harsh words you say? What about the racist slogans about "Boss Tyson" put up on the walls of the Collegian office? What did Herb Tyson ever do to ask for these insults? Not a damn thing. The issue is racism in a seemingly never ending series of racist acts.

Remember, this same newspaper that is attacking all these people, is the same one that put on the April Fool's issue declaring a nuclear holocaust in the Middle East. Where were these staff people when the Middle East atrocity came out?

This paper has very little interest in the welfare of the students of this campus, and the only reason why it chooses to do an expose of student government at this time is to consolidate its own power and control of the situation.

The most effective way students can gain control of their own destiny is to elect responsible candidates and insist that the Collegian represent the interests of the students on campus.

Black music workshop held at Amherst College

By SADIYA PARKER
Courtesy of BMCP and WEBD Radio

This past Saturday, April 1, at Amherst College, as part of the Seventh Annual Black Musicians Conference, a Black Music Update workshop was held. The panelists for the discussion included Vishnu Wood, a panelist on the National Endowment for the Arts, Reginald Workman, director of the New Muse Community Museum of Brooklyn, Stanley Crouch, noted music critic, and Joe Brazil, director of the Black Academy of Muse in Seattle, Washington.

Wood opened the workshop with a presentation on the National Endowment for the Arts (NEA) an agency mandated by the government to allocate funds for various cultural programs. Among the topics included in his presentation were, the general structure of the council and its advisory panels, recommendation procedures of the panels, and budget allotment and breakdown. Wood pointed out that the 1977 allocation for "Jazz", a category of the NEA, was $644,000 out of a budget of $13,327,000 or 4.8%. Besides the $644,000 allocated to "Jazz" is a $267,629 allotment to the "Folk-Ethnic" program while the remaining $12,415, 371 going to music of European origin.

Another issue brought out during Wood's presentation is how it has historically been that only the recommendations of the "Jazz" panel have been reversed by the NEA council.

Workman began his presentation with a brief description of the New Muse, a community cultural center located in the Bedford-Stuyvesant section of Brooklyn. The museum which serves as a center for Black creative energies and as a site of historical documentation of African-American culture, was started as a music program in the Brooklyn Children's Museum. The program began in 1968 by an organization of Black musicians called Rhythm Associates. Workman commented that the program was created "Out of the need in the Black community to establish cultural organizations that deal specifically with music and the perpetuation of this part of our heritage." The music instruction program of the New Muse presently has an enrollment of 565 students.

Another function of New Muse is to achieve materials relating to cultural activities in the Bedford-Stuyvesant community. These in turn are made available to other non-profit and educational organizations. Workman said, "This gives us another way of establishing the information bank that we are going to need in order for the people to realize how important our act is." Efforts are also being made at the New Muse to establish a relevant music-minus-one catalog dealing with music in the African-American tradition.

Crouch based his presentation on reasons why Black Classical music has not been given the support and recognition by various institutions and the U.S. media. One of the contributing factors to this is the quality of most Black Classical music of being improvised music. Crouch stated that, "Had anybody who was writing for the trumpet in the late 20's or early 30's written parts for trumpet paralled to the ones that Louis Armstrong was improvising he would have been considered a great composer for the trumpet."

The final speaker of the workshop was Brazil, director of another community based cultural center, the Black Academy of Music. The central theme of his discussion was that Black music should be made a part of the public education curriculum.

SGA electoral college?

hand of an SGA convention that refuses to acknowledge the wishes of its constituents.

Bob Dion himself, at the Monday night convention, attempted to limit representation even more by refusing to check into the senate rolls. This move, had it been successful, would have put the senate short of its quorum, thereby nullifying its 50 votes. The decision would have been left up to the area governments which were largely pro Dion-Bishop.

Students should question political tactics such as these, especially from a candidate who claims to have the students best interests at heart.

If we as undergraduate students of UMass are to have the power to decide the direction of our student government, we must demand that the representatives we elect act and vote as we tell them to and not as they decide for us!

UM bus system expands service

By JOHN M. MORAN
Collegian Staff

The Student Senate Transit Service and the Pioneer Valley Transit Authority (PVTA) have announced plans for the construction of a million dollar bus maintenance facility on campus, the addition of twenty-six 1978 buses, and improvements in both on-campus and off-campus service.

The improvements will mean 25-30 new jobs for student drivers in the fall, according to William C. Barrett, Director of Parking and Transportation here at UMass.

The improvements are due to the approval and anticipated approval of a Capital Improvement Grant by the U.S. Department of Transportation. The federal grant will pay for about 80 per cent of the improvements. State and University sources will pay for the remainder. Implementation of the plans, arrival of the new buses and construction of the maintenance facility are scheduled for this summer.

The new buses will be 1978 model General Motors Coaches costing approximately $87,000 each, according to Al Patashnick of the PVTA. The coaches will feature independent front suspension and a special "kneeling device" which will lower the front right corner of the bus for each entrance and exit. The buses will seat 39 passengers.

The new maintenance facility will be the most modern facility of its kind in the New England area, according to Barrett. Final approval of the budget for the building is expected soon after its submission in two weeks, he said.

The new maintenance facility, which will be constructed in the area adjoining the present facility, will provide for indoor storage of buses and will be outfitted with the most efficient tools and equipment available.

Cannon Partners of Springfield has been contracted to design the building along with another Pennsylvania firm at a fee of $120,000, according to Patashnick. The design of the building has already been approved, he said.

Off-campus bus service will be improved particularly in the East Hadley Road area of Amherst where buses will run every ten minutes during the morning and afternoon rush and every twenty minutes during the day. The efficiency of all routes is expected to increase due to the new buses.

On-campus students will find buses going either clockwise or counter-clockwise every six to seven minutes with the improved service.

Plans are also being considered to greatly improve the lift equipped van service for handicapped students. A committee chaired by the Director of Parking and Transportation with representatives from Environmental Health and Safety and from the handicapped student population will try to implement the expansion by September, 1979.

The shape of things to come — one of thenew$87,000 buses to be added to the fleet of UMass transportation vehicles.

Finast bus discontinued

By LAURA KENNEY
Collegian Staff

Although new Finast Supermarket owners last week ordered the discontinuation of weekend bus service from UMass to the Finast store at the Mountain Farms Mall, Hadley's Finast Manager Frank Glenowicz would like mall store owners to contribute to funding another bus.

The bus service had been running since 1974.

Glenowicz said, "Finast was paying the entire cost (of the service). In watching the ridership, seldom did many students come into Finast. The mall was benefitting more, for the majority of students would go there to go shopping or to the cinema."

Buses ran until last weekend on Fridays from 2:30-8 p.m. and on Saturdays from 11 a.m.-7:30 p.m. Western Mass. Bus Lines in Northampton was hired for the service, which cost $138 per weekend. According to Glenowicz, about 500 to 700 students rode the buses each weekend.

Glenowicz said the Mountain Farms Mall Merchants' Association contributed to the cost of the bus service at its start about four years ago, but then canceled their payment.

He said the owners of Finast at the time thought the service "a good idea," and the supermarket continued to pay the entire cost. "Each year we would approach the mall association to get them to help pay, but they were not interested," he said.

Leah Bailey, program director for the mall association, said Finast is "not really a part of the association," which is composed of the 39 stores in the mall.

She said the subject of the bus service was discussed last summer, when "they (Finast officials) asked us (the mall association) to help. We voted that it was not possible for us to help because of financial difficulties that year. We realize a lot of people came to the stores from that bus."

Bailey was unaware that Finast had stopped the service, and said she would bring up the subject at a mall association meeting tomorrow.

Mall Association President Paul Bacon could not be reached last night for comment.

UMass Transit Service officials said they did not know of the cancellation of the Finast buses, but said they did not have funds for a service to be provided by UMass.

Grad union files suit

By CHRISTOPHER H. SCHMITT
Collegian Staff

The Graduate Student Employees Union has begun action on two fronts to strengthen the union's position on campus.

The union will file an unfair labor practices charge against the UMass administration and also has begun contacting other campus labor unions inquiring into possible affiliation.

Union co-Chairman Brad Klein yesterday said the union will file the unfair practices charge with the Massachusetts Labor Relations Commission because the administration has been engaging in "unfair hiring practices." Klein said the administration has been hiring non-graduate students and non-faculty to fill positions in special programs.

UMass Director of Personnel John L. Denyse could not be reached for comment last night.

Klein said the hiring has gone on in the rhetoric department and "we suspect in the school of education."

"We know it is going on in the special programs," Klein said. "The workers do not get any benefits or the representation of any union." Examples of the benefits, he said, would be health care and tuition waivers.

Klein called the hiring practice an attempt at "union-busting."

The union is presently seeking to be recognized as an official collective bargaining unit by the labor commission.

Meanwhile, Klein said the contacts with other labor unions are "exploratory" and that the union "simply sent out literature to a number of area unions."

Klein said the contacts were made "to make the transition from a group to a full scale union."

"We need ongoing institutional support," he said.

Klein declined to name any of the unions the graduate students union has contacted.

However, it is believed one of the major groups the union has contacted is the Massachusetts Society of Professors, which is the Amherst unit of the faculty union. Earlier this year, members of the graduate students union marched with members of the faculty union at a faculty demonstration outside a Board of Trustees meeting.

The faculty demonstrated against not receiving pay raises they claimed were due them. At the time, Klein said the graduate students were marching to "facilitate and endorse the concept of campus unionization."

Last year the labor commission turned down a request for recognition as an official collective bargaining unit by the Union of Student Employees, a group of Campus Center employees.

Klein at the time said the decision on the student employees union was encouraging for his group, because although the labor commission turned down the request for recognition, it acknowledged students' right to organize.

The labor commission turned down the request because it said the Campus Center employees did not represent a campus-wide "community of interests."

Klein says his group fulfills that "community of interests."

Carter turns thumbs down on neutron bomb

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter has tentatively decided against production of the neutron bomb, the controversial nuclear weapon designed to defeat a massive Soviet tank attack on Western Europe.

Carter was conferring yesterday wuth Secretary of State Cyrus Vance and West German Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher, who arrived earlier in the day to press his government's support for production of neutron weapons.

"All these questions are subject to consultation within the alliance," Genscher told reporters after a prior meeting with Vance.

When asked directly whether Carter had made up his mind, Vance said the president "has not decided that question."

It was understood, however, that Carter's tentative decision was relayed to Bonn late last week through Deputy Secretary of State Warren Christopher. Genscher's visit was hurriedly arranged in a final effort by the West Germans to persuade Carter to modify his decision.

State Department officials said privately that Carter probably would make a final decision after his meeting with Genscher but that it would not be announced for several days.

White House spokesman Ed Penney said no final decision had been made as of yesterday. Asked whether a tentative decision had been reached, Penney repeated that no final decision had been made.

Supporters of the weapon have said they would prefer that Carter defer any decision rather than rule against production.

The New York Times, quoting unidentified administration officials, reported yesterday that Carter had decided against production of the weapon despite contrary advice from most of his senior foreign policy advisers.

The newspaper said Carter hoped the Soviet Union would respond by showing restraint in deploying new nuclear weapons.

Committee accepts Harrington's terms

BOSTON (AP) — In a rapid about face yesterday, a legislative committee first rejected demands to meet with Senate President Kevin B. Harrington on his own territory and behind closed doors, then backed down and accepted the terms, changing only the meeting date.

Rep. Gerald Cohen, D-Andover, led the fight against accepting Harrington's demands to meet immediately with the full Post Audit and Oversight Committee to discuss a $2,000 check made out to Harrington by the consulting firm of McKee-Berger-Mansueto.

The committee rejected Harrington's terms by a 10-10 tie vote, with all six Senate members voting in favor of Harrington's plan. Less than an hour later, Cohen proposed that Harrington be invited to testify next Tuesday, Wednesday or Thursday under oath in executive session.

Cohen's motion, acceded to by at least 14 committee members, is substanially the same as Harrington's terms as outlined to the committee by Sen. Francis X. McCann, D-Cambridge, who acted as Harrington emissary to the committee. McCann is Senate chairman of the full committee.

Cohen heads the subcommittee investigating MBM, its state contract and its payments to state politicians.

The Senate president will be allowed to testify in the small Senate Ways and Means Committee room, next to his own third floor office. A full transcript would be made of that hearing and made available to the press and the public as soon as possible.

That hearing room, guarded by two court officers, was reportedly all ready for the presidential testimony on Tuesday.

The change of date will apparently allow the committee and its counsel to prepare their questions for Harrington.

Rep. Raymond Flynn, D-Boston, who cast the deciding vote, rejecting Harrington's terms earlier, said, "I think if we're going to conduct an investigation, we can't have one system of justice for one person and another system for another person.

"I hope the Senate president goes before the full committee and the people of this commonwealth have a right to know what is going on," he added.

Rep. Robert Fortes, D-Boston, said, "The Senate president should talk about the check in public, not behind closed doors.

"And where we meet should be left up to the committee, not the Senate president," he added.

"We've got to treat Harrington like any other witness," Fortes said, "otherwise we endanger our investigation. Our credibility is our most important thing."

Rep. Bruce Freeman, RChelmsford, said he too feared that a closed door hearing would damage the committee's credibility.

"The point is, I think we should treat everybody the same," he added.

MBM President Gerald McKee two weeks ago presented the committee with a copy of a corporate check made out to Harrington and dated Oct. 19, 1970. The check was cashed at the Salem Savings Banks, where Harrington maintains a joint savings account.

The subcommittee subpoenaed Harrington's bank records, but found no record of the check being deposited.

Senate slated to vote tonight

By CINDY REGET
Collegian Staff

The Undergraduate Student Senate, will elect a treasurer tonight and will hold a workshop on issues currently facing the senate.

The election for senate treasurer was held last week with the top candidates, Michael Doyle and Paul Kolesnikovas, receiving 45 votes each.

Brian DeLima, senate speaker, will discuss the mandatory dining commons and dormitory issue, student access to course and teacher evaluations, collective bargaining, the problems of over-enrollment and the student housing lease.

During the workshop, the methods of senate involvement on these issues will be discussed. Some of the suggested methods are the formation of a dormitory council within the senate which would include such issues as the dining commons, the lease, educational programming, and the formation of a departmental council to deal with the issues of overcrowding, language requirements, and the inaccessability of course and teacher evaluation information.

Mountaineering #1.

FUNDAMENTALS OF MOUNTAINEERING

What is mountaineering all about? Funny you should ask. Because we just happen to have an answer. (Ah-h, life's little coincidences.) Mountaineering is a skill, a science and an art. Yet anyone with a thirst for excellence and normally developed motor skills can master it. Simply study these fundamentals and follow them faithfully.

1. Step one, appropriately enough, starts by selecting the correct site. To do so, pick up a bottle of Busch® Premium Beer. This is called heading for the mountains.

2. Okay, here's where the fun begins. Hold the mountain firmly in your left hand, grasp the mountain top with your right hand and twist the little fella off. There you go.

3. Now for the tricky part. Neophytes, listen up: the proper pour is straight down the center of the glass. Only in this way will the cold, invigorating taste of the mountain come to a head.

4. Once poured, pacing becomes paramount. As any seasoned mountaineer will tell you, the only way to down a mountain is slowly, smoothly and steadily – savoring every swallow of the brew that is Busch. If you're a bit awkward at first, don't be discouraged. Perfection takes practice. Soon enough, having emptied your glass and filled your soul, you too will be a mountaineer.

Remove Brian DeLima

The charges brought against Brian DeLima, student senate speaker-elect, by Student Organizing Project staff member Michael Brennan have been dropped. This move reflects badly on not only the SOP, but the student government system as a whole.

As it spelled out in today's news story (page three), Brian DeLima has a history of harrassing, as well as questionable use of student funds. He has insulted people, threatened at least one professional staff person with loss of employment, and made phone calls to Hawaii totalling over 300 dollars which were charged to the senate and paid back in a suspicious and thus far unsubstantiated manner. This scheme is presently under investigation by the Student Attorney General's office.

Michael Brennan had charged DeLima with stealing a letter to the Collegian off his desk and copying it. He also charged that DeLima harrassed him after he found out what the letter said. Why then have these charges been dropped? It can only be construed as a situation in which the person filing the charges feared to do so after DeLima's re-election because of the power DeLima wields. It is well known that anyone wishing for adequate funding should get on the senate speaker's good side.

It must be asked how it is that we are in a state where a person interested in usurping power and harrassing those who disagree with him has gotten so much power that people with legitimate complaints are afraid to air them. The senate is responsible for electing DeLima, and it is here that most of the blame must lie.

But as the Collegian has pointed out before, the system is what needs to be changed. It is only in a system where nobody is represented that someone like DeLima could act as he does without being accountable. It is only in a system in which people barter for jobs and students' money with a few people in power, as was exposed in yesterday's front page story, that someone like DeLima can operate successfully.

The Collegian calls for Brian DeLima's removal from the senate and asks that the charges against him be fully aired in student court. But this is not enough. The student senate, which has no credibility nor any accountability to the 18,000 students who fund its questionable practices, should initiate a reorganization plan that will eliminate the domination of irresponsible people like Brian DeLima.

Pierpont to march on Whitmore

To the Editor:

We of Pierpont find ourselves in a position where we have no other choice but that of our predecessors: action. To let you know where we're coming from, here is a brief history.

A few weeks ago it was brought to our attention that an unprecedented policy would be invoked within Pierpont that would exclude Juniors and Seniors from the dorm. This means that those who signed up for rooms next semester would be denied these rooms and moved to other dorms, thereby losing all dorm seniority, or they would be expected to attempt to qualify for off-campus housing.

As a result of the overwhelmingly negative response, Jim Matlack, Master Director of Southwest, agreed to negotiate with a student committee towards an alternate solution. During the course of these negotiations, the committee asked Jim to draw up guidelines for our alternate proposal. Mr. Matlack systematically avoided giving concrete guidelines, and the problem was taken to the community-at-large. From this action two proposals were submitted, neither of which Mr. Matlack found totally acceptable. After a query from us, he came up with what he considered an alternative proposal, a 14-page document describing: a house council, a judiciary body, and a "social contract." The committee met once again, and there was general disagreement as to the wording of the document, which not only proposed a house government [which was generally agreed upon], but a listing of specific rules and regulations which every student wishing to live in Pierpont would have to sign and therefore be personally responsible for. Mr. Matlack agreed to few revisions, but no change of the basic content of his ultimatum.

The question now is how many students are willing to sign a document [before Room Choosing Period ends] that not only reiterates present housing policy, but also makes them personally responsible [to the point of being taken to court under contract law] for upholding specific policies throughout the dorm? How many students are willing to openly support a piece of paper which is unique to the point of discrimination against the population of one dormitory? How many students are really willing to set a precedent of this type?

At present there are no Behavioral or "Social" Contracts being enforced in any dorm at this University, but this action could be the beginning. Think: if the students of Pierpont can be forced, under the threat of expulsion, to sign specific dictates as to their day-to-day behavior, not only to regulate themselves but to be held personally responsible for the actions of others, it opens the door to a whole flood of possibilities.

The problem has gone beyond our dorm — it has spread to the idea of a new University policy that could apply to your dorm as well. It's time for students to stand up for their rights. And so, we the students of Pierpont House ask you, students of UMass, to unite with us in a March of Solidarity upon Whitmore to protest this flagrant violation of our rights as residents and human beings, to start at Pierpont's courtyard at 1 p.m., Wednesday, April 5. After all, who pays for this University?

J. P. Stevens rally Thursday

To the Editor:

There will be a rally on the steps of the Student Union Building at noon on Thursday, April 6, protesting the labor abuses of the J.P. Stevens Textile Company, and calling attention to the nationwide consumer boycott of Stevens products. Joe Coyne, a member of the United Paperworkers International Union, will speak at the rally. He is the president of the Roanoke Rapids Central Labor Council in North Carolina.

The workers in seven Stevens plants in Roanoke Rapids voted for a union in 1974. Today, three and one half years later, a union contract still has not been signed. To prevent the signing of the union contract, according to the National Labor Relation Board, the company threatened to discharge workers and refused to bargain in good faith with the union.

After the rally, supporters will proceed to Goodell Building for a demonstration against the J.P. Stevens Company's practices and in support of the Stevens workers. There will be a booth in the recruiting area set up by the J.P. Stevens Boycott Committee, with information about the hazardous working conditions, discrimination in employment, and other labor violations by the company.

Everyone concerned in the Amherst area is urged to come out this Thursday to express his or her support for justice and human dignity for all working people.

Endorse bill to create jobs

To the Editor:

Tonight the Student Senate is voting on endorsing the Mitchell Transfer Amendment. This amendment, to be voted on in Congress late in April or early in May, would take $12 billion from unnecessary military expenditures [CIA dirty tricks, cost overruns, money unspent in previous years] and put it into human needs programs such as jobs, housing, alternative energy, health, small farm loans, etc. If passed, the bill could mean $25 million for the First Congressional District.

It is obvious to most every student on campus that we need jobs. One only needs to spend a little time in any New England city or town to see the housing needs. The official unemployment rate for 1976 was 7.5%, but that doesn't include people who were underemployed, had given up work, or had run out of benefits. The lack of adequate health and nutrition programs points out our lack of attention to human needs. Public health facilities are stretched beyond their capacities. Educational, recreational and cultural programs are inadequately funded and understaffed. The list is endless. Meanwhile, our country maintains a vast and expensive military establishment whose very size is hard to imagine.

There appears to be no doubt that the bill needs endorsement. Last year Silvio Conte voted against the amendment. This year he needs to hear from everyone that the bill needs to be passed. A vote of endorsement will be a clear message to Representative Conte that students on this campus are concerned about their future society.

Barely scratched the surface

charles bagli

The Bakke case now being decided by the U.S. Supreme Court is only the tip of the iceberg. Recently, a Detroit judge ruled that a local affirmative action program was invalid. Judge Kaess cited the California court decision on Bakke, the Weber v. Kaiser case (which ruled against an affirmative action training program in a Louisiana plant) and other "reverse discrimination" rulings.

Countless other cases, from New Jersey to California, are awaiting the Supreme Court decision on Bakke. The cases are based on the logic that quotas and affirmative action go too far. Quotas, it is said, discriminate against qualified white people and things have gotten to a point that Blacks and other minorities are now in a position to discriminate against others.

What is the reality of the situation? As of 1967, only 6% of college age Blacks were attending college. In 1967-8 only 800 of 33,000 medical students were Black. As the early civil rights struggle evolved into the Black liberation movement of the later 60's, which aimed itself more directly against our society's political and economic system, minority admissions and employment rose accordingly.

Special programs in cities, industry and schools have improved the situation, but the built-in discrimination and racism still exist. The physician-population ratio for the U.S. is 1-700; the ratio for Black people is 1-3,800; for Native Americans 1-20,000; for Chicanos 1-30,000. The unemployment rate among Black youth is 50 per cent in most cities, compared to the national average of 8 per cent. People of oppressed nationalities are still forced into the worst jobs and are faced with rotten housing, education and health care, as well as other forms of discrimination.

Have affirmative action and quotas gone too far? No way! The facts show affirmative action has barely scratched the surface. But a favorable ruling in the Bakke case would lay the legal groundwork for the rulers to set the country back 20 years as far as discrimination goes. Minority admissions to medical schools have already decreased in the last few years as the economic crunch has worsened. Of the 40 schools that once had aggressive recruitment and admissions policies for minority students, 25 have abandoned these programs. The Bakke case is a vicious attempt to step backwards to the days when the "old quotas" were met: .005 per cent minority doctors and lawyers, almost no minority workers in skilled trades, only token minority presence in higher education.

The Bakke decision is not aimed at promoting equality or improving the selection criterion for admissions. To evaluate medical school applicants in an unbiased manner, regardless of economic, social and political factors, has never been and never will be possible in this society. A common myth is that quotas will bring unqualified or less-qualified minorities into education and the professions. But the problem is not qualifications — there is no group of unqualified minority professionals running around due to quotas. The problem is intense competition among qualified people for severely limited schools or jobs. The problem is the capitalists, A.M.A., the professional societies, businesses and the government, who both discriminate against minorities, and restrict education and employment.

This is the reason we need affirmative action and quotas — to combat discrimination against qualified minorities.

The Bakke decision's real purpose is to reverse many of the gains of the 1960's by increasing the discrimination already faced by minority students, and to blunt the consciousness, gained in the 60's by Black people, of their need for liberation as an oppressed nationality in this country. Furthermore, it sets whites fighting blacks and other oppressed nationalities over a limited number of spaces in programs.

These attacks have touched off a storm of protest. Two national coalitions and various organizations have called for a national march on the Supreme Court (soon to issue its decision) April 15 in Washington, D.C. Many students, minorities, and other people who think that claims of "reverse discrimination" are a phony call to deny discrimination, and that the courts, when unopposed, time and again come out on the side of the rulers, are uniting to oppose the Bakke decision and go to Washington, D.C.

The Revolutionary Student Brigade has called for a contingent of youth and students in the march united around "Fighting Imperialism and National Oppression from the U.S.A. (Union of South Africa) to the U.S.A. (United States)" to sharply point the finger at the source of the problem.

The RSB is also sponsoring an evening of African and Afro-American culture Saturday evening, with speakers from southern African liberation organizations, and a Conference for students Sunday. The Conference is titled "Youth United to Fight National Oppression and Imperialism" and will have numerous workshops with discussion on the Black Liberation struggle and the struggle in southern Africa.

March on Whitmore

Something more than a month has passed since Southwest Master-Director Jim Matlack presented his proposal to deny sophomore and junior residents of Pierpont House the right to return to their dorm next semester. The outrageous plan was strongly protested, leading ultimately to Matlack's latest "compromise" proposal (see related story, page one).

Actually, Matlack's new plan does not constitute a compromise of any sort. Rather, it requires residents to enter into a "contract," without making any concessions to students' demands or needs (like being able to move off campus, etc.). This so-called "social contract" (which may sound like Rousseau but smells decidedly of Mussolini) would be a code of behavior that residents of no other dorm would have to sign.

Pierpont residents are planning to march on Whitmore in protest today at 1:00 and are asking for the presence and support of all students. Many march organizers are stressing the "tenants' rights" aspect of the protest — your support would not be just for Pierpont, but would mean support for a student lease and increased rights for dorm residents in general. And remember, the kind of thing Matlack is pulling could conceivably happen in any residential area where a particular dorm was unpopular with the administration.

Some members of the administration will be holding a meeting Thursday to discuss the proposed dormitory lease. A good turnout for the Pierpont march will indicate not only students' disgust with the Matlack plan, but their support for positive changes in the nature of residential life on campus. The march is starting in Pierpont's courtyard, and your participation is needed.

You, me, and spring

damon thomas

Dear Prudence, won't you come out to play?
Dear Prudence, greet the brand new day
The sun is up, the sky is blue
It's beautiful, and so are you
Dear Prudence, won't you come out to play?

—John and Paul, 1968

In their song "Dear Prudence" the Beatles sang about a certain type of rebirth, a reawakening and rejuvenation of the awareness among people of all that is beautiful and human. Each time I hear "Dear Prudence," I am reminded of the spring season, and listening to the song during springtime adds an extra dimension of charm and happiness both to the song and to the season.

Spring is, after all, a season of rebirth, a time of renewal. Springtime follows the winter, which in New England is traditionally quite harsh. Winter is the complete antithesis of spring — cold, bleak, lacking in sunshine, seemingly devoid of life. It's all the more interesting that Easter — the time of the greatest Resurrection ever — should take place during the spring. For during the months of March, April and May life appears where previously there had been none.

Muddy, snow-covered ground soon gives way to a cover of green grass and dusty dirt paths. Bushes and trees "come alive" again, and flowers begin to blossom. Insects are once again flying, crawling, and moving about, the birds are once again chirping and themselves rejoicing over the season, and animals have finally come out of hibernation. And man comes out of his self-imposed semi-hibernation; man emerges from his protective covers of clothing and housing and enters into the joy of spring. Beginning with the first soft, breezy, gently stirring day after a long winter, man feels a pang, an ineffable longing, a heart-warming joy as he is caressed by the gentle breezes and warmed by the radiant sunshine.

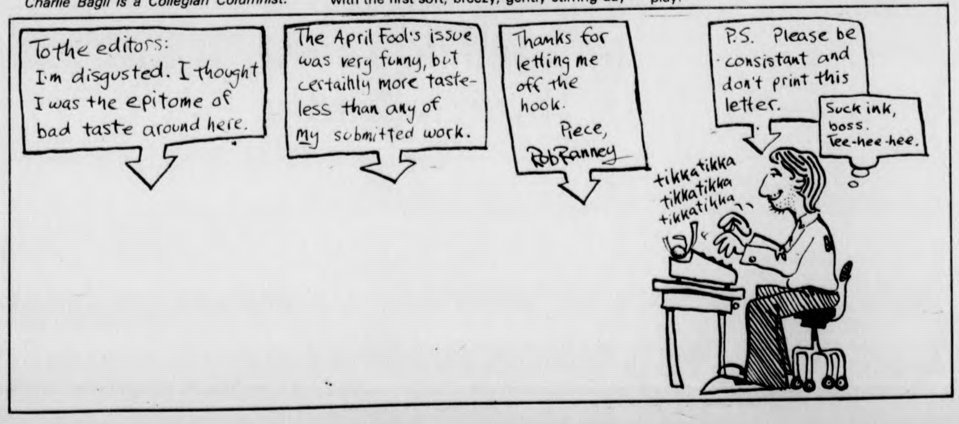
Springtime, more so than any other season, seems to beckon us to abandon our offices, classrooms, homes, workplaces and our everyday routines. It is a time to return to the earth, a time to be outdoors, a time to revitalize oneself from the rigors, tensions, and requirements of society. It invites us to mock our schedules, appointments, time cards and commitments, save for those which require outdoor participation; it entices us to behave spontaneously and carefreely, or what our uptight culture would term "irresponsibly."

More than anything else, though, springtime can be a very human time of the year; it is a time to share experiences with somebody. Because it is easy to be open and free in the spring, for those are the feelings that the time of the year imparts to people.

So, let's leave our books behind and take a long bike ride to nowhere. Let's skip English class today because the morning is so beautiful. Instead of sitting in a stifling room in Bartlett Hall let's walk barefoot down a country lane in Sunderland. Let's play frisbee. Or let's share an ice cream cone. Maybe, if we both feel like it, we could lie down on the grass along the shores of the campus pond and fall asleep. Or talk and watch the clouds go by. "The clouds will be a daisy chain, so let me see you smile again — Dear Prudence, won't you let me see you smile?"

Let's listen to music, or better yet, we'll compose and play our own. Let's write some poems, or fly some kites. Let's realize that we can transcend the shabbiness, despair, and broken dreams of the plastic society in which we live. We can celebrate spring; let's celebrate life. Let's be happy that we're alive!

Dear Prudence, won't you come out to play?



To the editors:
I'm disgusted. I thought I was the epitome of bad taste around here.
The April Fool's issue was very funny, but certainly more tasteless than any of my submitted work.

New perspective

To the Editor:

Once again the SGA convention has proven its ineffectiveness by disrepresenting the desires of their constituencies.

Only weeks ago the association held a popular election for SGA president. The election results clearly showed the Tyson-Gordon team as the team with the majority of voting student support. The no-vote ballot received the second highest degree of support and the Birmingham-Barenberg team received the third highest degree.

In the SGA convention, held last Monday night, the Tyson-Gordon team received 29 of the electoral votes while a new team, Bishop-Dion received 43 electoral votes.

This representation clearly does not reflect the wishes of the students as expressed in the popular election. The representatives from the area governments and the student senate have taken it upon themselves to replace the popular team, Tyson-Gordon, with their own candidates, Bishop-Dion.

Donald Bishop participated as a candidate in the popular election. However, he received a percentage of the votes so low that he was not even listed as one of the top three contenders.

Bishop's present running mate, Bob Dion, was purely a product of the convention. He did not submit signed nomination papers. He did not run for the office of SGA president. He did not open himself up to questioning and criticism from the student population.

How then do student representatives on area governments and on the senate, justify their complete denial of the students rights to choose their president?

Those who voted for Dion Bishop assert that since the no vote ballot received a substantial percentage of the votes, it can be assumed that many students were dissatisfied with the choice of candidates.

This conclusion, perhaps, is quite true. However, those who voted for Bishop-Dion have further assumed that the candidacy the students do want is the Bishop-Dion team. Who is to say that students who chose the no vote ballot, would not choose it again over the Bishop-Dion team?

One thing that we can state is that if the no vote ballot was second only to one team, Tyson-Gordon, then the largest portion of the voting students have already made their choice for SGA president.

Voting members of the convention should remember that they are the voices of their constituents and not the dictators of SGA policy.

Many of those representatives who supported Bishop-Dion in the convention, have asserted that another popular election would be a waste of time. We should not rush to elect a president that the students do not want.

Why is the Bishop-Dion team afraid of letting the people decide? Perhaps they do not feel that they can win an election if the students have the power of decision.

The Tyson-Gordon team has no objections to another popular vote.

Denial of a popular vote limits the voice of the students and puts power in the hand of an SGA convention that refuses to acknowledge the wishes of its constituents.

Bob Dion himself, at the Monday night convention, attempted to limit representation even more by refusing to check into the senate rolls. This move, if it had been successful, would have put the senate short of its quorum thereby nullify its 50 votes. The decision would have been left up to the area governments which were largely pro Bishop-Dion.

Students should question political tactics from a candidate who claims to have the students best interests at heart.

If we as undergraduate students of UMass are to have the powers to decide the direction of our student government, we must demand that the representatives we elect act and vote as we tell them to and not as they decide for us!

Editor's assassins to hang in Cyprus

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — A court yesterday sentenced two Palestinians to hang for the assassination of a prominent Egyptian editor that led to a bloody gun battle between Cypriot troops and Egyptian commandos.

The three-judge tribunal convicted Samir Mohammed Khadar, 28, and Zayed Hussein alAli, 26, of premeditated murder and, over their protestations of innocence, set their execution for June 1.

Defense attorney Lefcos Clerides announced he would appeal, arguing that the death sentence had not been carried out on this Mediterranean island for 10 years and therefore had been abolished "de facto."

The judicial process was completed rapidly in an apparent attempt to mollify Egyptian President Anwar Sadat. He broke diplomatic relations with Cyprus after the Feb. 18 assassination of his close friend and confidant, Youssef el-Sebaei, and the deaths of 15 Egyptian commandos the next day in a shootout at Cyprus' Larnaca Airport, where the two Palestinians held hostages in a plane.

Presiding Judge Demetrakis Demetriades said in explaining the verdict that there "is no room for doubt in our minds the two accused killed Sebaei in the execution of their well-prepared and preconceived plan."

The 60-year-old Sebaei was editor-in-chief of Egypt's authoritative Al Ahram newspaper and had accompanied Sadat on his historic visit to Jerusalem in November. The visit was followed by threats from radical Palestinians to assassinate Sadat and all those who supported his peace initiative with Israel.

Sebaei was shot to death in the Hilton hotel at Nicosia, where he had come to attend a heavily guarded conference of the Afro-Asian Peoples Solidarity Organization.

Goldwater charges pro-Soviet policies

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Sen. Barry Goldwater, R-Ariz., yesterday charged the administration appeared to be basing its policies in Africa on a "deliberate scheme with proSoviet overtones."

Returning from a South African trip, Goldwater said, "Everything the Carter administration has done in Africa has played directly into the hands of the Soviet Union.

"These actions are so obviously subverting the strategic interests of the United States that it almost seems that someone must be following a deliberate scheme with pro-Soviet overtones," he added in a statement.

South Africans wonder, Goldwater said, why the United States has not taken more direct action to stop Cuban troops and Soviet advisers from aggressive activities in the Horn of Africa.

"The consensus in Africa is that the situation in Ethiopia and Somalia is critical and that widespread bloodshed is imminent," he said.

Goldwater said the administration is "meddling in a dangerous way in many African situations which are beyond its control.

"The effect is the creation of the kind of fear and confusion upon which communism thrives and Soviet objectives are advanced."

South Africans cannot understand why the progress made in Rhodesia toward development of majority rule is unnaceptable to the United States, Goldwater said.

Adding to the "fear and confusion," according to Goldwater, is the fact President Carter keeps pointing to human rights violations in Rhodesia and South Africa but does not apply the same standards to China, Cuba, Vietnam and North Korea.

Judge dismisses Anderson lawsuit

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Jack Anderson's lawsuit accusing Richard Nixon and 23 other Watergate figures of harassment was dismissed yesterday because the columnist would not reveal his sources.

Anderson has ignored U.S. District Judge Gerhard Gesell's order to identify sources, many of whom he claims were wiretapped with White House approval to determine whether they leaked information to him.

Gesell ruled: "An orderly trial, fair to both sides, cannot proceed to a just result unless plaintiff reveals the names of all his relevant sources. Plaintiff alone is responsible for the present impasse."

Gesell also said the five-year statute of limitations may have expired before Anderson sued in January 1977.

Anderson, whom former Nixon aide Charles Colson called the administration's "arch-nemesis," accused Nixon and his men of conspiring to invade his constitutional rights and to harass him with illegal wiretaps and nearly constant surveillance.

Anderson asked $22 million in damages plus $100 for each day he was illegally wiretapped. The number of days has not been determined.

Park denies House Speaker involved

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Tongsun Park denied under oath Tuesday that House Speaker Thomas O'Neill ever asked him for money and O'Neill, in a formal statement, said he never sought funds from Park or the South Korean government.

Reacting swiftly to allegations contained in a mysterious, unattributed Korean document released by the House ethics committee, O'Neill said its claim that he had solicited Korean campaign funds for colleagues were "absurd" and "a total fabrication."

Park, the indicted millionaire rice merchant, remained poised and occasionally defiant in his second day of public testimony before the ethics panel. He disclaimed any knowledge of the document — with a section titled, "Congressman O'Neill request for funds" — found by Internal Revenue Service agents in his Washington home.

★HR react to changes

Most of the heads of residence polled said they felt the new room choosing policy would, at best, be an attempt to manage a future housing crisis. Most said they expect a crisis in the fall. Carol Wallace of Crabtree said she feels housing is planning on an overload right now.

Another concern was the feeling that "people should be able to choose their roommates", according to LaMacchia. "Given the difficulty of developing a sense of community in the dorms, when two people decide to live together, this small step should be validated and guaranteed," he added.

Olinga said she felt "roommate choosing is one opportunity students have to exercise some control over their lives. The university is so big and having a roommate you like helps students to deal with this. Students shouldn't lose their current room until they are guaranteed one of their choice," she added.

Other heads of residence said they felt students may be reluctant to give up the security of their rooms and may feel intimidated by by a process which they consider unfair. Wilson expressed concern that "rather than risk getting screwed, student mobility will be cut."

Heads of residence also said they feared random room choosing will affect housing needs such as minority corridors, special interest suites, cooperative living and dorm philosophies. Heads of residence said they are frustrated by a lack of control or input in this situation.

Due to the intensity of negative reactions to the new policy, several groups have met to express their feelings on the subject. The Heads of Residence Concerns Committee, a campus-wide organization, "is unalterably opposed to this program," according to LaMacchia.

Other complaints dealt with the "last minute publicity campaign" explaining room choosing. Many heads of residence said they felt much student confusion could have been avoided if the publicity for the new policy had been released at least two weeks earlier. Steve Bauer of Webster, said room choosing "was dropped in the laps of students and staff less than a week before it was to begin, as an indignity."
